Shipping Is Crippled by Maritime Strike

T HIRTY-SEVEN thousand maritime workers on the Pacfic coast went on strike, and immediately the trouble spread to the Gulf and Atlantic coasts. In the west about 150 vessels were tied up in ports and others heading that way faced walk outs by their crews on arrival. In New York members of the International Seamen's union voted a "sit down" strike in defiance of their national offi-

Mayor Rossi cers, and maritime workers in Houston and Port Arthur, Texas, quit their jobs and picketed the waterfront. Federal officials were trying hard to settle the disputes between the unions and shipping companies, chief of which relate to control of the hiring halls, wage ! Increases and shorter hours. Astaistant Secretary of Labor E. F. McGrady was in San Francisco and intimated the government might intervene.

"When any group, whether bankers, employers or labor, take action endangering the welfare of the nation they are assuming a position that the government must challenge to protect the state and the people,' McGrady said.

"The free flow of water-borne foreign und interstate commerce hus become paralyzed. This will involve directly or indirectly the lives of the citizens of the whole nation."

San Francisco had the added distress of a strike of 1,000 warehousemen who demanded higher wagen, and Mayor Angelo Rossi was mustering his forces to meet both this trouble and the maritime strike. He expected violent warfare along the waterfront and said he would take the necessary steps to protect pubhe interests. The police get up headquarters in the Ferry building and strung their own telephone wires to every pier

It was reported in San Francisco that coast phipowners were considering a plan to ask the United States navy to put "nafety crewn" abourd western merchant ships left unmanned

Admiral Harry G. Handet, as a member of the federal maritime commission, opened a fact-finding! hearing in San Francisco, summoning the shipowners to present their case first. The seven striking unions and their allies were to be heard later. The maritime commission had unions declined to submit to this dictation.

Madrid Is Bombed by Insurgent Planes

D EPEATED raids by rebel bombing planes were made on Madrid and its suburbs and scores of persons, mainly women and children, were killed. There was flerce and desperate fighting northeast of the capital and the government forces were driven back toward the city. The defense lines were reorganized, however, south of Madrid and on the road to Toledo and the government commanders were preparing for a "sweeping new offensive." The Fascists took Brunete after a bloody fight, having already captured three other towns in that region, and came within geventeen miles of Madrid. . ?

A wild orgy of plaids it is indeed and, what's more, we are growing very clannish about it. An astonishing lovely array of beautiful designs and colorings in plaids is the proud record of fabric designers this seacon; keyed to exacting and versatile fashion demands. Many are of authentic clan origin, featuring rich. deep colors and historic patterns. So wide is the range of weaves, textures and patterning, it's almost a certaility you can get any type of plaid you set out to get.

And so it's plaids that are being uned for jackets, for skirts, dresses, sults (nothing smarter than a pertly tailored jacket suit of plaid), for ensembles, for blouses and waistcoats, accessories, including hats, baga, scarfs, belts and gloves. Nor must linings and trimming accents be forgotten in the list. Even mackinaws, traditionally fashioned in plaids, have again stepped into the spotlight of fashion for active and spectator sports. These are presented in soft thick fleecy woolens and in striking color combinations and EXPORTS of manufactured goods designs. Wool plaid blouses and and raw materials exceeded im- phirts for wear with ski clothes and

The fall and winter season lends itself admirably to plaids which are particularly smart in the new boxy jackets and coats, also in tunic dresses in which the plaid tunic highlights the voguish flared monotone skirts. They also style perfectly in casual coats for sports and travel and for street coat-dresses and in dashing cape modes. In fact for back-to-school fashlons, for snow suits, for everything from children's wear to cocktail ensembles, wool plaids are style leaders.

See the fashions pictured. They are an index to the handsome plaid apparel being turned out by enthusiastic designers. The smiling lassie centered in the group wears Scotch wool plaid culottes in rich dork tones of blue and gray accented by white with a navy wool fitted jacker and dashing little plaid cap with quilla fashion-first for fall.

The new plaid hats now shown are the pride of the milliners creating them. Quite the rage are "Scotty" caps and tams. See the tam-o-shanter pictured in the inset. It is made of multi-colored plaid woolen. A long pheasant feather is stuck through at a rakish angle.

An interesting hairy woolen with nubby overplaid in clear bright tones fashlons the tailored daytime dress to the left in the picture. A chamois vestee with self colored buttons and chamois trimmed belt are fetching accents.

The beautifully failored sports jacket to the right is styled in colorful wool plaid and milady carries a bag of the same plaid. The collarless neckline is very chic. The edges of the jacket are bound with self plaid, which together with large patch pockets and bone buttons gives this mode high "tone."

LEI OF GARDENIAS By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Now that the pretty custom of wearing flowers, or, trimming, with flowers, has been revived in fashion's realm, it is interesting to note the novel interpretations designers are giving to this theme. Pictured is a lei of white gardenias clipped around the neck of a black satin evening ensemble. The flowers may be clipped to the shoulders of the dress when the cape is removed. Huge roses used in the same manner on a raisin colored velvet wrap would be equally as effective. Roses, by the way, are smartly in vogue, so reports from Paris tell us and will be greatly in evidence this winser as costume decoration.

VELVET SUITS FOR DAY WEAR POPULAR

Those new velvet daytime suits may not appeal to the business girl but they have a lot to offer to the social butterfly.

No more elegant Tashions have appeared in our time than those handsome velvet ensembles. The smartest ones are black, unrelieved by color except for the flash of a blouse, but there are rich tones such as dark green, wine and plum to consider if you don't like black. Furs match the tope of the costume and usually are of the long-haired variety to frame the face and flatter a figure.

The suit which has a tunic length coat is one of the most dignified of the velvet types on exhibition. It has the fitted waistline that is unbelted.

"Fifty-Fifty" Costumes to Lead Winter Collections

"Fifty-fifty" costumes play an important part in the fall and winter dress collections. These are dresses, suits or coats with the back and front made of two contrasting colors. Black is frequently combined with bottle green or a brilliant, deep purple to make these queer costumes. # Thinks about

Apaches Going Sissy.

CANTA MONICA, CALIF.-A missionary on an Arizona reservation says the Apache, once the fiercest of the tribesmen, is going plum's sissy, and when a movie company took a group of Indian extras on location these original Americans, being stripped for action, got terrible cases of sunburn. They'd worn clothes so long their tender skins couldn't stand the heat.

There's a lesson here, although, so far as the victim is concerned, it's probably too late to do anything about it. Once we'd backed the noble red man into a pair of $3 pants we had him tamed. Sitting Bull, in war bonnet and buckskins, was a splendid savage, but, wearing overalls and a hickory shirt, he became just a brunette farm hand.

Irvin S. Cobb

The derby hat may be the homeliest creation ever devised for human use, but it's the crowning triumph of civilization, and the most pacifying for alien folks, as witness Haile Selassie, looking now rather like a Filipino bellhop on his Sunday off.

Humans Becoming Monkey-Like. A professor of psychology advances the thought that mankind, in ages to come, may be headed for the all-fours posture which once the species did use-if you accept the evolutionary theory, which most of us do, because we like to think of some people we know as having had monkey-like creatures for ancestors.

We say to ourselves, the poor things aren't entirely over it yet. But the learned gentleman who's trying to lift the veil of the future overlooks the lessons of the present. He should study New York and Newport society when European royalty is in our midst.

Denouncing the Baby Derby.

When Prime Minister Hepburn denounced Toronto's so-called baby derby as "the most revolting, disgusting exhibition ever put on in a civilized country" a lot of us gave three loud, ringing cheers.

That eccentric Canadian millionaire, who left his fortune for a contest seemingly devised to prove that the human species has a strain of Potomac shad in it, unintentionally came near to making cheap and sordid the loveliest thing on this earth, which is motherhood.

To see families engaged in a race to bring babies and yet more babies into the world, merely on the hope of getting paid for it; to realize the certainty of vulgar squabbling over the prize; to know that inevitably lawsuits will absorb most of the money-well, there are many who oppose birth control. But deliberately fostered birth uncontrol may have its drawbacks, ch, what?

The Fate of Big Bolsheyists. Here's what has happened to the original Bolshevist leaders, the fathers of the Soviet setup:

Trotsky, in exile and due to stay there if he values his health; Kameneff, exiled, recalled, executed last August; Zinovieff, executed; Rykoff, demoted, arrested and trial impending, hence regarded as bad insurance risk; Radek in the same fix and said to be worried, and I wouldn't blame him; Tomsky, committed suicide to avoid something even more unpleasant; Kiroff, assassinated; Mikoyan, got out in time and stayed out; Bukharin, under suspicion and arrest impending, odds against, 9 to 5; Evdokimoff, executed; Smirnoff, executed; Lenin, died a natural death, but then Lenin always was different: Stalin, Bubnoff and Krylenko, all going strong, but you never can tell, so would do well not to play too far in ad-

War Vs. Preparedness.

As one who saw the first few months and the last few months of warfare on the Western front. I'm like nearly every other man or woman who witnessed those things -I hate war.

It's the next morning of drunken glory. It's a stench, an obscenity, a vain wastefulness, an unutterable indecency. It's a machine which sucks in at the hopper the beauty, the youth, the hope of the world and spews out from the spout the finished product - broken bodies blinded eyes, maddened brains; dead men and dying men and ruined

But because we are against war and because we believe the best insurance for continued peace is proper preparedness in times of peace, and because we behold half of civilization on the edge of war again and wonder where they'll strike after they've forn one another's throats, we do sort of worry to see our country cut down on its defenses.

Chevrolet Prices

Prices for the new Chevrolet passenger cars for 1937 were announced here today by W. E. Holler, vice president and general the National Automobile Show.

It was revealed that for 1937 Chevrolet would have a completely new line of cars, incorporating for the Titsworth company was one wheelbase and with identically the same appearance. Heretofore, there have been two distinctly different lines of cars with two lengths of wheelbase and quite a wide variance of specifications.

Prices of the Master Deluxe models remain approximately the same as those of the 1936 cars. The popular coach and town sedan models have been reduced $5, while the four-door sedan and the sport sedan prices remain unchanged. The coupe and sport were in Carrizozo last Tuesday coupe are the only models to be shipping cattle to the Kansas City offer to you your general admis- receive the greatest number of increased in price and these only markets. $5 over the 1936 levels.

Cheese Souffle

2 tablespoonfuls flour. ¼ teaspoonful salt. ½ cupful milk.

3 eggs. 14 teaspoonful paprika. 2 tablespoonfuls butter. 12 cupful grated cheeses Proupful corn (optional).

Mix flour with salt and paprika and add to butter, which has been melted. Beat until mixture is smooth. Add milk and grated cheese. Heat to boiling point, then cool slightly. Beat eggs separately, adding yolks to mixture first, then the whites, which must be beaten very stiff. (If corn is used, mix in before adding egg whites. (Pour al into a baking dish and place it in pan of hot water. Bake scant half hour in a moderate oven and berve immediately.

When corn is used, the following sauce may be served with the souffle: Two slices onion cooked in two tablespoonfuls butter until brown Remove from fire and after moxing two tablespoonfuls flour with one quarter teaspoonful salt and same of pepper, add to butter and onion and stir until smooth. Last, add one cupful tomatoes which have been strained. Stir un til it comes to a boil and then serve immediately on souffle. " deright - WNO Borvier

---15---Some stared at her hostilely, as if she would cheat them of the death they desired for the girl in black before them; some thrust forward from the same seats as if they would surround and defend the prisoner—and her witness. Suddenly you saw faces.

Mother's and Bee's; and two who had been in the papers: his first wife, with her daughter beside her. How did they feel, a few feet away from Myrtle? Did they want her killed too? Here was another face—an old face, a fine face. A little old woman who had lived a lot, and never let life beat her. Winnie, she was. Agnes never had seen so much as a likeness of her, but there was no missing her. When she looked at Martin O'Mara, she knew Winnie was his grandmother.

Agnes sank down upon the witnesschair, and waited for Winnie's grandson's first questions.

They were simple enough. What was her name? . . . Where did she live? gone to Chicago on a certain day? . . . Did she meet any one in Chicago? Then what did they do? . . . After she had looked at the empty aparts ment and Mr. Braddon had left her, what did she do?

"Now tell the jury in your own words what you did and what you saiv and what you, yourself, heard after the door of the apartment, upon which Mr: Colver knocked, was opened."

"I saw," said Agnes, "a girl—a young woman-I had never seen before. That girl there." She looked at the prisoner, Myrtie Lorrie. "She-was in negligee over underclothen and stockings. She was very excited and disheveled. She looked as if a good deal had just happened to her."

"I object," Mr. Nordell, for the State, wos on his feet.

"Sustained!" said the judge. "You must confine your statement to what you observed and heard; you must not give your inferences," he said kindly enough to Agnes,

"I know," she said. "I forgot. I can say I now bruises and hurts on her. I did. I can say she was shaky. She was bolding to the doorknob with both hands, 'Who're you? Who're you? she asked; but didn't walt for me to answer. She grabbed me and pulled me into the room. She anid: 'Oh, God, I'm glad to see youglad to see you!"

"She pulled me down into a big, soft choir beside her. . . . Mr. Colver, the agent, went to look for smelling salts for her. . . . I heard him call from down the hall: 'Mr. Lorrie! Mr. Lorrie!" . . . He came back, and he could hardly speak. Finally he sald to me: 'You know what we've walked in on? A killing! There's murder here. . . The shot him: . . . I had Men Lorete in my arms, then. I was holding her. She was lying limp across me."

Agnes had no idea how she looked as she related thin. She was not thinking of herself on the witness-stand: she was seeing berself back in that room. But the judge, the jury and people crowding the benches were staring at her as she sat in the big witnesschair, young and slight and fair, and so completely unaffected and forgetful of herself, indeed, and so honest-look-

Cathal, standing before her, stepped back a little as though he dared not trust himself closer to the delight of her. What a start she was makingbeyond what he had expected! He could not possibly have planned this

"Then did you do anything?" he osked her very quietly.

Her blue eyes on his shortened their focus from the far away room which Agues had been seeing. For an instant, only, her retinas were aware of him; then she west back again.

"Yea. I tried to rouse her. I usked her: 'Illd you do ILF She couldn't reply at first. She didn't seem to understand me. I kept shaking her. 'Maybe I did,' she finally said. 'Maybe I did' I said: 'Maybe? Don't you know? She didn't seem to know."

"I object!" Nordell protested. "Sustained," said the Judge. "I'm sorry," said Agnes, "But she dida't." "I object!"

"Sustained," said the judge, and told Agnes more sternly?, "You must not give your opinions of inferences."

"I won't again," said Agnes. "Or I'll try not to. . . . The phone rang pretty soon, then. I heard Mrs. Lorrie sny: 'Oh, God, Bert.' Then I guess he talked to her. I mean," she caught herself, "Mrs Lorrie waited and listened as if some one was talking to her. Then she said: 'Bert, something's happened. . . . Charley died today!' Then Mr. Colver used the phone to call the police; and I, Mr. O'Mara, called you."

She stopped, against at herself and before Martin O'Mara. This was not at all as she has reviewed and prepared her evidence with him; she had said things she had never dreamed of uttering, and omitted a score of items she had promised to repeat. But he had no reproach for her.

Quite to the contrary! His own pulses were dancing with new and wanton pleasure. She delighted him, sho delighted the jury-men-at least some of them. The judge was unsuccessful in his severity toward her. Three or four newspaper reporters re- middehly, looking at Cathal. luciantly left the courtroom.

They carried the "heads" for the afternoon news. Agnes Glenotth had gone on for the defense and was winning the courtroom. Cathal of course, brought her back the floor, and a wave of falutness to the evidence she had omitted; she remembered the memorandum which she had made on the morning after the visit to the Lorrie apartment; and now, as Cathal questioned her, she read it and explained that she had written it, on that first morning, "because people were saying so many things different from what I'd seen." This helped; but already, by the unplanned ways of her own, Agnes had established the feeling essential to a favorable turn of the case. The jury, the judge, the courtroom had seen her and approved her; they believed and trusted what she said. It was perfeetly plain that only accidentally had she become concerned with the case. Yet, having happened to be the first person to come in on Myrtle Lorrie after the shooting-and having been the person in best position to judge | think." Mrs. Lorrie's physical and mental condition at the time when the crime had occurred-this girl had not turned against her but had set herself to help her; when the agent had sent for the police, Agnes Gleneith herself had summoned, for Mrs. Lorrie, a lawyer.

Agnes was almost the only person in the courtroom unaware of what she had accomplished; she believed she had bungled everything. She thought she had much more to do when, after she had described Myrtle's bruises and hurts as she had seen them. Cathal asked: "Now, at the time you first naw her and when you were in close contact with her, what was the general state of her mind? Did she show any clear recollection of what recently had happened?"

"No. She was both confused and contradictory. I found her in a state of-of shock. Of extreme-shock."

"Thank you," said Cathal. "That's all I need ask." He stepped back a little and turned to the table of the

"Your witness," he said to the nttorneys charged with the prosecution. He retreated to his own table, that of the defense, whereat Mrs. Lorrie all the time had been seated, and he dropped upon a chair beside his client. Myrtle turned to him, and he nodded to her almost absently; he touched, reassuringly, the impulsive hand she stretched toward him; then turned and watched Nordell as he came to his feet for the cross-examination. Cathal jerked forward to the edge of his chair; he kept his hands relaxed. but he felt on if with fints elenched ready to light—light as he had never fought before—if the presecutor "tore into her" as he could.

Yet, while half of Cathal tingted and bristled thus for the fight, the cooler half, the professional half—the part of him which was a lawyer hoped the State would "tear in."

What a mistaket What complete calastrophe if they attempted to sneer and jeer at this girl and "show her Nordell did not make that mistake. "You have said. Alice Clevelth." he began with careful coartesy, "that you happened to be in the building where Mrs. Lorrie lived, because you were looking at an apartment in it with Mr. Braddon."

"Yes," said Agnea,

"You were engaged to be married to Agnes hesitated for the first time. Engaged? Were they ever "engaged"? They had been looking at an apartment together; so she must have been

"Are you engaged to him now?" "No." There it was, out. That was honest, too.

"When did you break your engage-"We didn't break it." What a thing to talk of before a courtroom full of people, and with reporters writing it all down! "Then what did you do?" Nordell demanded.

but, for the first time in this trial, he was confused. He did not know how to help her; this was all within Nordell's "We-we decided not to be married;

that's all." "Who decided that-Mr. Braddon or

"I object?" Cathal protested; but the judge, before ruling, looked to "Overruled," he said to Cathal. "Answer," he said to Agnes.

"L dld." "When?" "It was when we were in the apartment upstairs. That was why Jeb-Mr. Braddon left the building." "What effect had this on you?" "Effect?" "I mean," Nordell explained, "after just having broken sour engagement upstairs, did you enter the apartment downstairs in a calm and composed mental state? Was your own condition perfectly clear, or confused?"

"Clear," said Agnes. "I was perfectly clear in my mind," she repeated. "Perfectly clear?"

"Yes; for I had not cared-enough." he had gained one effect; and he decided to rest on it. "That's all," he said and spoke to Cathal through it.

"That's all." said Cathal, "You can I step down. Miss Glencith." Agnes stepped down slowly, caus tor?" flously. Buddenly she had felt uncerpassed over her. What had she just said of Jeb?

She halted for an instant. "Water," she heard some one say. She, felt hands on her; strong, steadying hands; Murtin O'Mara hands. He held her firmly and pleasantly. She felt that she could not possibly fail.

"Here's water, O'Mara," Mr. Nordell's voice said. "Thanks," he said, and held the glass to her lips. Agnes swallowed and looked up. 'Sorry-sorry," she said. Then her mother was there. "I'll take her," she said to Cathal. "All right now?" Cathal Agnes.

She looked up at him. "Jeb." she said. "-Mr.- Braddon's back in that room? Take me back to him, please," she begged Cathal. "I want-I want to tell him myself what I said." "I'll get him," Cathal offered. "I'm not calling him to the stand. There'll be no more court this afternoon, I "Then," said Agnes, "tell him, please.

I'll wait for him in the car." Balliffs opened the way for her mother and Bee and her. An elevator lowered them to the ground; they went out, through the breathless, hazy heat of midafternoon, to the hot and dusty car. O'Mara went to Jeb in the witnessroom. He was pleased, Jeb saw; the hour for him had gone well.

"I'm not calling you today-or at all, Mr. Braddon," Cathal said. "I thank you for having been ready. But now I'll not need you. We're through with Miss Gleneith."

"Then where is Miss Gleneith? "She's gone out. She's waiting for you—with her mother and sister—at the car." "All right," said Jeb; and demanded: Well, what did she do on the stand?" "She did it," Cathal told him. "She urned the case." "For your rotten little murderer ind you!"

Cathal drew back a little. "You dumned shyster!" Jeb whispered from his soul.

Cathal heard, and knew he was meant to hear; and he cought control of himself. He could not hate this man now; he could not envy him; to strike him, physically, would be silly surplusage. He would not let himself deliver the blow he could with a few words more. He said, as quietly as he might in the tension between them "Some evidence came out in cross-examination which I neither knew nor expected."

"What evidence?" "A statement she made-which she was forced to make by the Stateconcerning herself-and yourself."

"What did she say about us?" "That," said Cathal, "she wishes to tell you berself." An Jeb piepped from the door to the Criminal Courts building, comeras clicked at him again; and the crowd turned. Jeb heard his name passed. and he saw lips that passed it, smile. He straightened and faced them. Bohind his back, somehody laughed. Jeh would have liked to turn and knock the idiot down. He would like, above all, to knock down O'Mara. Damn him! Jeb recognized the Glencith car; and be hatted. Agnes now Jeb, and she knew that she had nothing left to tell him. . He came to the car, and Simmons opened the door for bim.

"You'd better take her directly home," Jeb said, looking in. His eyes were upon Agnes, but they went at once to her mother, and he spoke to her "I'm going to my office."

Cathal drove north alone at nine that evening. The roads were choked with cars, many of them parked, more Roscoe Conkling was Blaine's. of them barely rolling as their possessors sought the night and relief, in the little breezes of motion, from the dull and beary test.

Another day, whatever its triumphs and despairs, was done; its final pale flaunt was furled in the west. Darkness spread its treacherous shield to satisfactions of the longings of flesh for fiest. Self-sufficiency capitulated: Cathal was on his feet to help her; one hungered for another; everywhere young people paired, arms about each other, lips together, careless what silhonettes the headlights surprised and betrared.

Night For day, the making of money, the struggle and the fight: for night, relaxation and love. Night, with Deneb, the bright star, low over the lake—as low, almost, as the masthead Plight of a little yacht drifting along, Cathal was clear of the city. Thunder threatened, but from far away. Beside him, the street-lamps ceased; he followed the dark lines of cool country places.

It was unlike Cathal to faiter before a determination he had taken: yet he passed the gateposts of the Gleneiths' and drove a mile beyond before he turned back and entered their road. It was fen o'clock, but he saw that doors and windows of the lower rooms were open; shaded lights burned with In. The family had not gone to bed.

Cathal rang, and he said to Cravath. who recognized him: "Ask Mrs. Gleneith if I may have a few minutesno more-with Miss Gleneith."

Cravath left him outside and with Nordell stepped back. He hesitated: | the screen door closed. Mrs. Glenelth came, with Cravath, to the screen, "What is it, Mr. O'Mara? Aren't TF YOU live in a state where they I still allow party emblems on the for it." ballot, take a look at them as you mark yours. That eagle soaring above the clouds at the top of the Republican column should remind you of Gen. John C. Fremont, who was the first Republican candidate for President back in 1856. It may be reminiscent of the eagles which he saw when he was "The Pathfinder" in the West or it may mean that the Republicans have been in power so long during the last 80 years that they figure they have a better right than any other party to claim the national bird.

That lordly crowing rooster at the head of the Democratic column should remind you of Joseph Chapman of Indiana whose habit of crowing over Democratic victories a century ago resulted in this symbol for his party.

That rising sun, with its beams glinting over an ocean, as though foretelling the day when there will be "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink" tells you that below it are the names of the candidates on the Prohibition ticket. Those hands clasped against a background of the earth tell of the Socialists' dream of greater equality for mankind all over the earth. That stout bare arm with the hammer in hand speaks for the Labor party and that sickle and hammer remind you that the Communists would have us follow the example of Soviet Russia.

There was once a time when a Bull Moose snorted defiance at the top of one column on the ballot. That was when Theodore Roosevelt was seeking a third term under the Progressive banner but since 1912 the Bull Moose has been an extinct political animal.

Or course, if you live in a state where they use voting machines the emblems may be slightly different.

The reason for these emblems on the ballot is a practical one, besides their symbolical significance. In the early days they were placed there to aid voters who had left their spectacles at home and who didn't want to vote for the wrong candidates by mistake. When the tides of immigration began pouring into the country millions of foreigners who were illiterate, even after naturalization, these emblems were helpuful to them in their voting. As new parties arose the use of these symbols helped avoid confusion and even though many efforts have been made to do away with them, they are still in widespread use.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF IF EVER there was a case of "history repeats itself" in American politics it was illustrated in the careers of Henry Clay and Jomes G. Blaine. Separated by half a century, those careers were almost exact duplicates of near achievement and ultimate disaster. There were other resemblances al-

Both men were magnetic in personality, eloquent in speech and idolized by their followers. Both were master politicians and dominated the councils of their parties but both fell victims to a political enemy whose fateful vengeance followed them all through their days of striving for the presidency. Andrew Jackson was Clay's Nemesis;

Early in his career Blaine recognized his similarity to Clay. When Grover Cleveland, then comparatively unknown, was nominated by the Democrats in 1884, Blaine had a premonition of defeat. "I am the Henry Clay of the Republican party,' he declared to a friend. "Clay was defeated in two conventions when he could have been elected, and he was nominated for President when his competitor was elected. That competitor (Polk) was one who had not been publicly discussed as a presidential candidate before the meeting of the Baltimore convention in 1844. I was defeated in two conventions when I could have been elected. I am nominated now with a competitor alike obscure

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

PEEDING parting guests graciously is as much of an accomplishment as welcoming them cordially. There is a distinction between letting the person go with the knowledge that prolonging the visit would be a pleasure to the hostess, and trying to over-persuade the guest to stay longer. The former attitude lets the guest go with a delightful feeling that he or she has not overstaid the wel-

social ments, business necessities, the exigencies bf | travel, or some nite causes for terminating a visduration of time. If the hostess wishes the visit prolonged she should make her desires known before the time of departure, and permit her guest the opportunity to consider whether she can adjust her own plans to suit those of her hostess, or whether she must follow a previous arrangement or an immediate requirement. It is always delightful to know that continuance of one's presence in the household is wanted, and if the guest can remain she may well do so with expressions of appreciation.

Speeding the Guest

If remaining longer is out of the question, it is embarrassing to have to refuse, should the hostess be very urgent. When the hostess has with genuine cordiality asked a guest to stay, and the guest has to decide against accepting, and does it with all the reluctance which is expressive of her real wish to stay if she could, then it is for the hostess to speed the parting guest, as the phrase puts it.

It is for the hostess to make it possible for her guest to get away at the time she feels she must, and to do whatever lies in her power to make the getting off easy and comfortable. It may mean taking the guest to a train or boat. It may mean having a meal early that she may not leave hungry, or it may mean having a cup of tea and a sandwith or a glass of milk and some crackers or whatever she knows will best satisfy the guest. Or it may mean waking the guest early and having a cup of hot coffee for her before going. The leave-taking can supply pleasant reflections.

Our Thoughts.

Each of us, whether socially inclined or not, entertains daily, not in person, but in thought. We open the door of our minds to commune with the thoughts that we permit to enter. A strange line of mental visitors pass through the intangible portals. Some entering thoughts are as cordially entertained as our dearest friends. Some are turned aside as not worth considering. Others stay to haunt us, to harrow us, to frighten us, to depress us, or otherwise disturb our state of mind. So much depends on the mental visitors we entertain. Our happiness, and even our health is largely in the hands of these silent visitors. They may be invited, or they may intrude.

It is a fortunate thing that it lies within our power to extend hospitality to the thoughts, or to shut the door on them. A person of strong mental acumen can rule over his thoughts, directing them as desired, entertaining those that are enjoyable and profitable, and refusing admission to those that are distressing and unprofitable. Even the person who has not this full control of mental government can learn to rule his thoughts in large measure, so that unwelcome thoughts linger but a short time, and then give place to pleasanter ones.

Inviting Thoughts.

Let us discover some of the rules of hospitality toward our thought friends, and how to get-rid of unwanted ones. One of the best rules is to drive out undesirable thoughts by supplanting them with good ones. Keep repeating words with pleasant meanings. Visualize their meanings. Our minds can not be so busied and be otherwise occupied. Another rule is to get in accord with nature; a walk, a drive through the country, working in a garden, or pottering about plants in the house. In some mysterious way kindly nature helps by supplying a right perspective.

Divert the thoughts into pleasant channels by reading, writing a letter to a friend, playing the piano; planning some good times, or best of all consider ways and means of bringing happiness to someone in trouble, or how to bring cheer to some lonely soul. Put these plans into action. The mind must be kept constructively active.

ONE DESSERT TO SERVE FOR TWO

Make It to Fit Both Grown-Ups and Children.

By EDITH M. BARBER

DESSERTS for the family should appeal to the older members as well as to the children if we want to keep everybody happy. No housekeeper cares to waste her time making two desserts and yet occasionally husband's craving for pie should be satisfied.

One of the easiest ways to make one dessert do the work of two is to make a filling which can be used come, while the for the pie and also for a pudding. latter adds a note | A cocoanut cream filling will delight of regret that the in either case. 2-3 cup brown sugar. 1 teaspoon/cinnamon 1/2 teaspoon ginger

2 eggs 11/2 cups milk

14 teaspoon salt

1/2 cup cream Mix ingredients in the order given and pour into greased custard cups. Place cups in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F., about forty minutes, until pumpkin mixture is set. Chill and serve with whipped cream.

Lemon Filling.

3.egg yolks 1 1-3 cups sweetened condensed

Juice of 3 lemons Grated rind of 144 lemons 3 egg whiten

6 tablespoons sugar. Beat egg yolks, add milk, lemon juice and rind and mix well. Pour filling in pie plate lined with pie crust. Cover with a meringue made by beating the egg whites and adding the sugar. Bake in a slow oven, 325 degrees F., just until the meringue is delicately brown. Chill two to three hours in the refrigerator.

Lemon Tarts.

2 lemons 2 cups sugar

2 eggs

1 cup sponge cake crumbs Pastry

Mix the juice and grated rind of the lemons, sugar, eggs and cake crumbs. Beat until smooth. Put into patty tins lined with pastry and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) about seven minutes, until crust is light brown.

How to Use Enamel In painting with enamel, take up an ample, but not excessive amount on the brush and flow it on with broad, sweeping strokes. Go over the coating again if necessary, but do not brush it back and forth as you would with paint. The first two coats may be flat paint—that is, non-glossy. For very particular work, each coat should be rubbed lightly with fine sandpaper or pumice and water.

About Lacquer

Lacquer is a solution of a substance similar to celluloid in which the desired coloring pigment has been mixed. It differs from paint primarily in that it dries by the simple evaporation of solvents whereas paints and varnishes depend for their drying upon a slow chemical process of oxidation.

rear wheels of his car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires. This wonderful new tire was designed and developed by Harvey S. Firestone working with his engineers on his own farm in Columbiana County, Ohio. It was tested on all kinds of roads and found so efficient that it was also adopted for tractors and all wheeled farm implements.

The rubber lugs of the tread are so placed that they clean as they pull, and since the design is continuous, the tire does not bump when used on paved roads. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords are placed under the tread — a patented Firestone construction feature which welds the powerful super-traction tread to the patented Gum-Dipped cord body, making them one inseparable unit. Gum-Dipping is used only in Firestone tires.

Farmers, country doctors, school bus operators, rural mail carriers, in facts all who do most of their driving off the paved roads cannot afford to be without Ground Grip Tires. Go to your nearest Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and equip your car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires — the tire that makes its own road.
