Excellent Schools

Summer vacation for the schools is over. Throughout our loved land pupils from the primary grades, on through the University courses have assumed their duties—some with distaste, but others with delight and elation. How tremendous are the responsibilities! Human destinies are to be shaped either for success or failure.

The Carrizozo city schools have opened under the most auspicious surroundings. Parents are in hearty sympathy with teachers and educational boards in their efforts to move forward. The teaching personnel has created a favorable impression on the students and the outlook for a successful, happy year's work is excellent.

Superintendent Ming and his corps of teachers are alert to the needs and requirements of students; they are not only able, but are anxious and willing to assist in every way possible to make this the most successful year we have ever known. Teachers are educated and efficient; the courses of study are well wrought out and thoroughly up-to-date, and last but not the least important, we have modern well equipped buildings.

In addition to regular courses of study, Miss Sorey and Mr. R. A. A. Chase will have in charge a thorough musical department, for both the High school and grade school. These accomplished teachers have demonstrated their superiority in the lines they are to teach.

We would not forget to mention the thorough commercial course which is available, under the supervision of Miss Della M. Ward.

What Do You Think?

Republicans for three long years,
Have shed their coats and skins and tears,
To tell their comrades how they feel,
Regarding Roosevelt's Great New Deal.

For three long years they've prayed for votes,
But never mentioned 9 cent oats,
They say this New Deal stuff is all rotten,
But never mention 4 cent cotton.

For three long years they've wept aloud,
And cursed "this money spending crowd."
They say, "of the Liberty we are shorn",
But not a breath of the 10 cent corn.

For three long years they've wailed and raved,
"The constitution must be saved."
But with their puerile prate and prattle,
They sing no song of 2 cent cattle.

For three long years they've been at sea,
And now they come to you and me,
And offer us as bait for votes,
More 9 cent cattle and 9 cent oats.

They offer as in days of old,
"A crown of thorns, a cross of gold,"
A balanced budget, can you beat it?
Well, one thing sure you can not eat it.

THINK IT OVER

School Notes

Ola C. Jones, Co. School Supt.

A very interesting and instructive meeting was held for the Lincoln County rural teachers on Friday, September fourth, in the court house. George T. McQuillen, president of the Lincoln County Board of Education, gave the welcome address, summarizing the improvements that have been made on the school houses in the past three and a half years.

Mrs. Grace Corrigan, state rural school supervisor, gave an interesting address on Rules and Regulations governing the certification of teachers, and the use of textbooks furnished by the State Department of Education. Miss Ann Raymond, field-worker, Educational Division of the Soil Erosion Department, gave an instructive address on the educational phase of Soil Conservation and how it can be correlated with the studies of Agriculture, Geography, and history. She gave the teachers a wealth of material on aide and helps in planning their units of work throughout the year.

Mrs. Mary Watson, who dealt only with the problems of supervision, and not of administrative work or building program which has been carried out during the past three and a half years, explained the results of the Metropolitan Achievement Tests given in the first eight grades inclusive and stressed what subjects should be given more careful consideration. Miss Ruth Ryden, county health nurse, outlined the health program for the coming year. Mrs. Bert Pungston, vice president of the Lincoln County Board of Education, stressed home visits, playground supervision, and books. L. P. Hall, member of the Lincoln County Board of Education, stressed how important it is for teachers to show impartiality to the children.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Greer and family have moved to Tucuman to live.

State Fair at Roswell

The largest "class" yet admitted to the Old Timers festivities is expected at the Eastern New Mexico State Fair to be held in Roswell October 7, 8, 9, and 10. Those who came to New Mexico in 1906 will for the first time be eligible to enjoy the Old Timers program--from the inside looking out. Again this year this will be one of the big days of the fair, and the thousands who have not yet been in New Mexico thirty years will get a big thrill in watching those who have.

With additional barn space, one new exhibit building and additional room in general exhibit hall directors of the fair expect some of the crowded condition of recent years to be relieved. Directors however, say that already more entries are assured than the total last year.

The big rodeo each afternoon is offering higher prizes and paying final money this year in the three main events, insuring a bigger and better show each afternoon.

Big spectacular event of the week will be the parade on the opening day. Large cash awards are offered in different divisions of the parade. The 4H Club field day and picnic on Thursday October 8 is a new event this year; expected to bring boys and girls from all parts of the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Goodson of Ancho had as their guests the past week their mother, Mrs. Belle Collier, Mrs. Julia White, Mrs. Maude Maidt, and Miss Edna White of Oklahoma, City. The trio left Thursday morning for home but Mrs. Collier, mother of Mrs. Goodson, Mrs. Jack Cleghorn and Clyde Collier will remain for the rest of the summer. Mrs. Goodson and Miss White have been close friends for years. The ladies were very much impressed with New Mexico and its beautiful mountains.

Rev. J. A. Bell and family returned last Wednesday from Abilene, Texas, where they enrolled their oldest son, Stirling in Mc Murry college.

Mrs. S. B. Bostian is very much improved, but is still in the hospital.

Approves PWA Projects

One hundred forty additional Public Works Administration projects, involving 45 per cent grants totalling $4,855,142 were approved today by President Roosevelt.

Indicating that the President had modified his previous requirement that relief labor be used exclusively, PWA officials said 70 per cent of the workmen would be taken from relief rolls.

Today's allotments were made from PWA's share of last year's $4,000,000,000 relief appropriation.

Eight of the 10 states which received no allotments previously because of shortage of suitable relief labor were included in the list, leaving only Delaware and Rhode Island with no projects approved this year.

The eight receiving their first projects were Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, New Mexico, Texas, Virginia and Wyoming.

The allotments average slightly more than $34,000 per project.

A near-accident occurred at the corner of Main Street and Alamo-gordo avenue Wednesday when the steering gear went out of commission on an oil truck which Manuel Ortiz was driving for the City garage and started out across a vacant lot. He succeeded in stopping the truck, and the City garage mechanics got the wheel adjusted.

Mrs. Rhea Doughner will leave tomorrow for her home in El Paso, then in a few days she will go to Missouri to visit her sister Mrs. J. Verle Groce for two weeks.

This Author Has Explored Africa, Hunted Gorillas

A biography of Mary Hastings Bradley, whose latest novel, "Unconfessed," this paper now brings you in serial form, might easily prove as fascinating as many of the eminently thrilling novels and short stories she has produced.

Born and brought up in Chicago, she began to write when only fourteen. Receiving her degree at Smith college, she studied in England, with some travel in Europe and Egypt, and then returned to Chicago where she married Herbert Edwin Bradley, Chicago attorney. Meanwhile her contributions were appearing regularly in Cosmopolitan, Munsey's, and the Woman's Home Companion. Her first novel, "Favor of Kings," appeared in 1912, and since then she has written fiction steadily. Among her more recent successes were "Murder in Room 700" and "Road of Desperation."

But Mrs. Bradley is not alone a successful novelist; she is noted as an African explorer and as a writer about Africa and its wild life. She accompanied her husband on Carl E. Akeley's famous expedition which was sent by the American Museum of Natural History into the Belgian Congo to obtain gorillas. She made a second expedition into Belgian Congo in 1924, and was a member of the first party to traverse the region west of Lake Edward. She went after tigers in Sumatra and Indo-China in 1925 and returned again to Africa in 1931 to study the Pygmy and Mangbetou tribes.

Her travels have resulted in such well-known books as "Caravans and Cannibals," "On the Gorilla Trail," and "Trailing the Tiger," and in such books for younger readers as "Alice in Jungleland" and "Alice in Elephant Land." She is a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and a member of the Society of Women Geographers.

SYNOPSIS

Job Braddon, young and fantastically successful broker of Chicago, is infatuated with Agnes Gleneth, beautiful daughter of a retired manufacturer. Rodney, a doctor, in love with Agnes, visits his brother Job. Rod plans work at Rochester. Job suggests that he make a try for Agnes before leaving. In Rod there is a deeper, obstinate dependency than in Job. Agnes believes to be happy, a girl must bind herself entirely to a man and have adorable babies. Rod visits Agnes and tells her of his great desire, but realizes she can never be fulfilled. Agnes' mother is attempting to regain her husband's love. Agnes has disturbing doubts as to what attracts her father in New York. Job tells Agnes he is going to marry her, and together they view an apartment in Chicago. Job asks Agnes to set an early date, but she tells him she cannot marry him. When the agent, Mr. Colver, offers to show them a furnished apartment, Job asks Agnes to see it alone, saying he must return to his office. Agnes consents and Job leaves. A radio is blaring terrifically from one of the apartments. Colver raps upon the door, which is opened by a scantily clad girl, who draws Agnes into the room. Colver finds her husband, Charles Lorrie, fatally shot. He calls the police. Myrtle Lorrie asks Agnes to phone Cathal O'Mara, a lawyer, to come at once. Agnes does. The police take charge. O'Mara arrives. The officers are antagonistic to him. Agnes sides with O'Mara.

CHAPTER III

Agnes was out; she had passed that door; but the room and the apartment inside it refused to be obliterated. It went with her; they all seemed to travel with her, though she only had been released, she alone had been helped away.

She sat for a few minutes in the women's waiting-room of the Northwestern railroad station, where no one could know that she, this afternoon, had walked in on a murder. After a while, she went to a phone-booth and called her father's office. He was not there, but his secretary grow almost hysterical when she recognized Agnes' voice.

"Where are you, Miss Agnes?"
"At the station; I'm taking a train home in seven minutes." The police had communicated with her father, and he had gone to find her.

Finally she called Job; but he also was out seeking her. For news of the murder of Charles Lorrie was on the air; the announcer had said that Miss Agnes Gleneth had discovered the murder.

The wife of a man in Job's office had picked this up at home not ten minutes ago, and had phoned her husband in the office; and Job had set out.

Agnes sat in the train where nobody knew. Nobody—yet. But by night they would know; by morning all her world would learn that she had "walked in" on a murder while she had been looking for an apartment with Job Braddon.

That meant, of course, that she was to marry Job. Marry, marry, marry, the bells ran again under the car wheels.

She had selected a cent amid strangers; she leaned her head against the window and shut her eyes.
See. You opened your eyes, but that room was there; Myrtle was there, reaching for her, clinging to her, forever clinging. "It" was down the hall, half in the bedroom; the husband whom Myrtle had shot, four times, after being his wife for two years.

Agnes closed her eyes again.
Who was Bert, and where was he? Myrtle's Bert.

"Shut up about Bert!" Myrtle had begged. And Agnes had omitted mention of him. Why?

For the sake of Myrtle? Or of Martin O'Mara?

What did Martin O'Mara mean by saying "you" never do a thing like that, but your dragons drove you to it? What were the dragons, which Myrtle's soft sensuousness might have known, but which Agnes knew naught of, because God had been good to her?

The train was stopped again, and it was at her station. There were her mother and Bee, and Simmons behind them. Her father, it proved, had phoned to them from the city to meet this train. They hurried her home, where her mother, after learning all that Agnes could tell, offered to start her off the next morning for the East and for Europe.

"Your Aunt Esther will take you. I'll telephone her this evening." Aunt Esther was her mother's older sister, a widow living in Hartford. "I'd go with you myself, Agnes; but it is no time to leave your father."

"No," said Agnes. "But I can't possibly leave Mother."

"Why not?"

"I'm a witness. I must appear before the coroner's jury tomorrow, probably; then before the Grand Jury; and then at the trial."

"I can't imagine it!" her mother said.

"But I have to."
Job arrived before her father; he had driven again from the city. Agnes had him come to her room, where she remained.

Job crossed the room in long, strong strides and seized her in his arms.

She said no word, but she pushed away from him.

"What's the matter, Glen?" he over-powered her again. "I love you so; and I left you to walk into that—when I love you so!"

"Love?" Agnes repeated as much to herself as to him, looking up at him. "Do we love, Job? . . . Or what is it we feel for each other?"

He held her only tighter. "I know," he said. "You're mixing us up with them. Don't! . . . Oh, I wish to God I'd stayed there with you."

"You didn't, Job. . . I'm glad."

It was nearly midnight, and after Job was gone, when she had a talk with her mother and father.

"You're not to blame, Agnes, little Light One," he repeated, petting her hair. "It was bad luck; that's all. But why in the world did you phone for that lawyer?"

"O'Mara?" said Agnes.

"I wish you hadn't done it."

"Why?"

"If all goes you with her—and him."

"Does it?"

"She won't go away," her mother returned to her own remedy in the emergency. "She insists that she can't leave at all."

"That's true," said her father.

"At least," said her mother, "you'll not go back to New York tomorrow, Bob?"

"Were you going tomorrow, Father?"

He looked at his daughter, who had walked in on a murder that afternoon.

"Yes," he said.

"Why?" she asked him, as never she would have before.

"Business, of course, Light One."

What was Father doing in New York? How could he do it? He, who had been so happy with Mother—so completely happy—during all those eleven years in the house on Easter Lane? But they were passed—as two years had passed in that apartment which she had visited, where Myrtle had shot her husband. How could she have done it?

She didn't do it; not the bride who had married him two years ago and once had been happy with him. Father—Father, who had brought Mother as a bride to the house on Easter Lane—that father was not doing what Father was doing against Mother today.

"When such a thing is done, you don't do it," Martin O'Mara had told her. "It's your dragons you have in you that drive you."

Were the dragons of desire that fed on Myrtle's soft sensuousness, also affecting Father?

Agnes lay long awake, if she could, by willing it, obliterate her hours in the apartment so that never they could touch her again, would she do it?

No, she knew. No. Who, having passed from innocence, would return to it again? Who, having encountered him, would obliterate from all her life ahead, Martin O'Mara?

Who was he? Who—what wife or what other woman—might now be awaiting him?

Twenty miles away in the city a woman was awaiting him at that hour, though it was long after midnight. She was at a window beside the door of a little frame house, and she watched out with the shade up from the window.

She watched for him and listened hour after hour, eagerly but not impatiently or critically. She lived for his coming, wherever it might be.

She was slight but straight and strong. Five foot two, she stood, a little mother of big men; for both her sons had been a full foot taller. "And here is the likes of me," she'd say, "outstrip the both in this. And their father! But please, God, let me never bury him."

Him—none like him, to her; not even her own sons, or her own man, whose memory never failed her. Him was her grandson, Cathal Martin O'Mara. And little as she was, and old as she was,—nearing two and seventy,—you could see resemblances between them. He had his good hands from her, and much of the strong, sensitive modeling of his head. His hair was like hers, fine and straight and abundant.

He had his blue eyes from her, even to the sparkle in them; and much, much more than can ever be told. And it was through her that he, had the event which, of all elements that entered into his making, most affected him. She had seen it with her own eyes; and as soon as he had become old enough to understand, she had herself related it to him.

The tenth of July, it was, in eighteen ninety-three; and the lake shore along Jackson park was white with the great fine World's Fair buildings. And this day was fine, and the Fair was full crowded to the tumults.

She was seeing the Fair on that fine day, was Winnie O'Connor O'Mara, wife—and proud of him—of Cathal Martin O'Mara, of Engine Company Number Two.

Few had been the fires at the Fair, and none that did either hurt or damage. But this day was to pay up for it.

There were the white, tall towers reaching up to the blue skies, and none of them nearer to heaven than the tower of the Cold Storage building. And it was the bulk below that caught fire on this fine afternoon; it wasn't the tower at all, at the beginning. The alarms went out; and the fire companies came by, their fire engines rattling, and their big pumps beating.

"Play away, Two! Play away, One. Play away, Company Eight! Up with ye, Chemical Fourteen!" And up the men went to the roof, from roof and from ground playing their streams on the building. . . . But the fire was full blazing and leaping; and it licked up the water that reached it; and more of the water fell short.

"To the tower!" shouts Fitzpatrick—him, that was captain of Engine Company Two, and assistant chief of battalion. "To the tower with the water, and play on from above! Who's up to the tower with me?" And he set foot for the climb.

And twenty good men—the good of the best—the fair score of them went up from the roof to the tower after him, dragging their hoses with them. And they got up and signed for water; and the engines give it to them, and there they played it down from the tower on the side of the roof that was blazing.

Sure it was a sight—From the Court of Honor, from the Manufactures exhibits, from the Art Galleries, from the Midway and all the shows between, the people came crowding to see. Thousands and tens of thousands of them. Faith, pushing at the fire-lines that day was a city of people.

For the fire kept on gaining. The water from the tower, like the water from the ground, was nothing to it. The blaze, it ran on top of the roof; and that was not so bad, for that the men on the tower could see. But the flame, it ran along under the roof; and that they couldn't see till it broke up from below sudden on all sides at once, and cut off the tower entirely.

One man,—John Davis, of the Midway company,—he saw it the second before it burst up; and he hugged the hose-line and came down; and he reached the roof and ran over it before it all was blazing. But scarce was he down before the hose he rode was burned away; all other hose to the tower was burned away; and the life-line like them. Twenty men—the even score of them—stood at the top of the tower, the blaze all about below them.

One hundred and ninety-one feet from the ground, they stood; seventy above the roof blazing all about below them. And God alone could help them.

Winnie O'Connor O'Mara—she was thirty-five years old that month, and her sons were twelve and fifteen, but neither were there to witness the deed of this day—Winnie O'Mara, wife of a fireman, got through the throng to the fire-line.

"Who's them on the tower, can ye tell me?"

"Fitzpatrick, assistant chief of battalion."

"That I know; can ye name some that stand up there with him?"

Cathal of Company Eight, I hear; Bill Denning of One; Lieutenant Freeman, One; Garvey; and Breen of Chemical Fourteen; O'Mara of Two; Nat Howard—"

"O'Mara, did ye say, of Engine Company Two?"

"O'Mara. Yis; I hear he went up—"

"He would!"

"Lord save ye, is he yours? Do ye know him?"

"Yes; I know him."

Then she saw him on the tower; she knew which, of the score of men beyond all human help, was he that was hers.

They crouched, for shelter from the heat of the flames below, on a bit of a balcony near the top. There, if the tower burned fast, they had ten minutes left them; at best, maybe twenty—bare minutes of life to those fine strong men that stood in the sight of all and must die. And they, best of all, knew it, as they looked down, the twenty of them.

And it struck all to silence. Higher the blaze burnt, and hotter. Faith, you could feel it hot on the ground where you was thrust back by the fire-line. What was it to them on the tower!

But no shame showed there; there was not a coward among them. All could see on the tower a man shaking hands with his fellow beside him. Farewell between men, it was; and another gave his hand to him.

Then the form of him hung in the air over the flames. For a flash of second, he seemed to stand in the air; for your heart had stopped for him. Then he came down. He'd taken his choice and jumped; and into the blaze he went, to the end of him.

Now a second shook his fellow's hands; and he jumped. Then they stopped that.

Some one on the tower had found a length of life-line. Like enough, they'd spliced—some poor pieces together. They let it down but only to see it burn off. Yet twenty feet of line hung down from the shelf; it may have been twenty-five, but the end of it burning. One came down the rope to the end—the hands of him snuffing the fire where the hemp was burning.

He swung a bit on the rope, and those above tried to swing him out; so now you could see the dream of them. There was a spot on the roof below, which was not yet in flame, and the plan was to swing him at it.

He let go and dropped. And the rope, where his hands had been, caught fire again.

A fourth came down; and his fellows above swung to help him. He dropped, and there was the rope afire again, and each time shorter.

Who'd be next? On that tower there was no man that shamed himself, not one! "Ye go! I'll wait! . . . Ye go!" ye could see them saying.

Fitzpatrick, he had to order them; and all could see him do it, as they came down, one by one, each snuffing the flame from the rope as he hung and swung; and dropped; and then the line caught fire again.

SEEING IS FOUND MOST IMPORTANT OF FIVE SENSES

Scientific research discloses that the eyes receive 87 per cent of all impressions we receive. Our ears receive but 7 per cent; our sense of smell, 3.5 per cent; touch, 1.5 per cent; taste, 1 per cent.

These five senses form our sole contact with the world and the people in it. All that we know comes to us through our senses.

Though the eyes represent our most priceless physical asset, most of us subject our eyes to needless abuse. That this is so, is seen in the fact that 22 per cent of all children in the country have defective sight. At college age 42 per cent have impaired vision. At age forty, the figure jumps to 60 per cent. And after the sixtieth birthday, only 5 per cent have unimpaired eyesight.

These statistics are the more appalling when we consider that our own carelessness is largely responsible for these deficiencies. Yet it may not be so much of carelessness as a lack of understanding as to what causes eyestrain.

Of all the abuses to which we subject our eyes, poor lighting is said to be one of the greatest. Oddly enough, this is also the easiest cause to prevent. All we need do is remember that light is as important to seeing as the eyes themselves. Eyestrain comes not so much from bad eyes as from the efforts of good eyes to see where there is not enough light.

It is significant perhaps that defective eyesight is common among farm families. This is thought to be due to the fact that there are still several million farm homes to whom the advantages of electric lighting are not available. Yet if this is so, it again reflects a lack of understanding of the need for good light, for there are available today, types of portable lamps that provide daylight brilliance for every night-time task.

Perhaps the most popular of these are the gasoline and kerosene pressure mantle lamps—popular not alone because of their exceptional brilliance, but because they are economical to use and priced within the reach of all.

For reading, sewing, and all the after-dark pursuits which require prolonged and close use of the eyes, abundant light is imperative to those who would protect that greatest of God-given gifts, the eyes. And this is more especially important where there are children in the family. Children's eyes are much more easily strained than those of adults.

Rubinoff Holds World Record for Broadcasting

Rubinoff and his violin--and Chevrolet--are a combination that few, if any, radio listeners in the United States have not received in their homes via the air. The famous violinist and his Stradivarius, stars of the Chevrolet Musical Moments programs, have the distinction of going on the air from more broadcasting stations than any other program in the history of radio.

Big Airport Which San Francisco Will Build

First official sketch of San Francisco's new municipal airport, to be opened in 1940 at Yerba Buena Shoals. The 430-acre site, now under reclamation by army engineers, will be the scene of the Golden Gate International exposition in 1939. Part of the exposition program is the construction of the three permanent structures shown in this oil painting—the Administration building, embodying the most modern design and equipment of aeronautical engineering, and the two hangars. The three buildings, financed by PWA grants, will cost more than $1,000,000.

Keeping Up With Science

Stars Are Factories Producing Energy From Simple Element

Stellar Bodies Have Life of Several Billion Years

SEATTLE.—The inside of a star is a factory which makes complex elements out of the simplest element of all, namely hydrogen. This is the point of view presented to the American Physical society here by Dr. R. M. Langer of the California Institute of Technology.

The output of the factory is not complex elements but energy which is radiated away as the star shines a few-billion years. The complex atoms are left behind mostly in the form of iron.

Only a minute fraction of the energy of a single star, the sun, is caught by our earth and this energy is what makes our factories work to make complex things out of simple ones.

Hydrogen Is Stabilizer.

The stellar factory would blow up in its enthusiasm for energy production were it not for the stabilizing effect of the complex atoms. Of these the most important stabilizer is heavy hydrogen. When things get too hot heavy hydrogen breaks up into a neutron and an ordinary hydrogen atom and things are back where they started.

It is this accident of the balance between neutrons and deuterium which determines how hot the star becomes and how long it lives. The internal temperatures are about half a billion degrees and the life is several billion years.

According to Sir James Jeans the stars shine much longer than that but few agree with him. No process known to happen is competent to keep a star going over ten billion years. No process known is able to heat a star over a billion degrees. Dr. Langer pointed out, because the radiation at that temperature would exhaust any process ever suggested before that temperature would be reached.

Photons Rage.

At these high temperatures matter is quite different from the matter we know. No compounds exist. No solids or liquids are possible. Neutrons, positive electrons, and deuterium, all newly discovered and rare on the earth, abound. Above all and predominating everything, photons of light fierce as X-rays rage to and fro.

Things are so lively that we can never hope to make any direct experiments under these conditions. Yet the basis for Dr. Langer's calculations are the experiments which are being made in many laboratories with comparative ease shooting atoms at one another at high speed and scoring the hits.

Bears Follow "Handout" 50 Miles Over Mountain

YELLOWSTONE PARK.—Bears, like hoboes, seem to have an uncanny knack of finding out where the handouts grow.

A little less than two months ago, when Yellowstone National park opened up for the annual tourist season, the bear "cafeteria" at Old Faithful, where the Bruins have for years been regaling themselves nightly on hotel and camp table scraps, was shut down in accordance with the park service policy of making the bears rustle for their own grub.

Many Old Customers.

Only the "cafeteria" at the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone, about fifty miles away, was kept open for business this season.

Now, Ranger Wayne Kephogle, who got to know a lot of the bears at sight during several seasons on "bear ground" duty at Old Faithful, has recognized quite a number of his old friends in the new locality.

Hugest Extinct Animal Restored in New York

NEW YORK.—The biggest beast that ever trod on dry land, Central Asia's giant Baluchitherium, is now shown as he was in life, at the American Museum of Natural History, in a restoration sculpture which will be placed on display in the near future. Museum artists are now putting the finishing touches on the enormous image, which mounts a body as big as two elephants on top of massive six-foot-high legs.

Towering higher than any living giraffe, the Baluchitherium was a primitive representative of the rhinoceros family. It lived some 25,000,000 years ago.

Instinct Is Faulty Guide to Choice of Diet, Doctors Say

Selection of Best Foods Is Matter of Experience

MANY a person, resentful of modern dietary directions, of being told to eat foods he does not like or to forego favorite items of diet because of their effect on his health, has revived the old idea that instinct or appetite is a good dietary guide.

The reason why one cannot rely on instinct in choosing foods is told by Dr. Leslie J. Harris, of the Nutritional Laboratory, University of Cambridge, and the Medical Research Council, in his book, "Vitamins in Theory and Practice." As Dr. Harris explains it, the reason chiefly is a matter of time.

"You demand a hot drink when you are cold because of a subconscious recollection of having felt warmer after you had had one last time," he points out.

Pains After Dumplings.

"Similarly with the elementary feelings of hunger itself. The sensation of well-being following a hearty dinner will encourage you to repeat the treatment another time. And again, if you have pains after eating dumplings, you will soon learn to forego them (granted ordinary intelligence).

"But now compare this with the effects of foods which are less immediate and dramatic in action. If you are getting rickety from insufficient vitamin D, or, shall we say, anemic from insufficient iron, it is hard to see that instinct will teach you which foods would cure you—for the simple reason that they do not produce their good effect quickly enough for you to notice it. But you would none the less suffer permanent damage from their lack, and many thousands do."

How Animals Choose.

Dr. Harris and associates actually tested the theory that animals can instinctively pick the correct foods. After several years of research, they found that animals were able to choose the right food if it made them feel better immediately after eating it. If it had a particular taste or smell or color by which they could recognize it, they learned to take such foods quite easily.

Thus the matter of choosing foods that are good for you, whether you are a human animal or a dog, "is a matter of experience."

Old Incan Empire Called Lesson for Economists

CHICAGO.—Modern economists can take a lesson in planned economy from the old Incan empire. It ruled millions of South American Indians until Spanish conquest made it collapse like a house of cards.

Lives were strictly regulated in this empire. No one of humble birth could rise to an important office. Each clan owned its land, and the community cultivated it, working the private sections, sections devoted to religious contribution, and those devoted to government revenues.

Birth and death records were kept. Roads were built by quota labor. The nobles or Incas ruled, considering themselves the brains of the Communistic state.

"It gives us an insight," he says, "into the function of an autocracy grafted on Communism, and an opportunity of studying the successes and failures of that novel system."

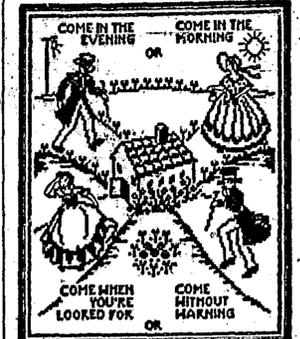

Loudspeakers for Cars Quiet "Drive-In" Shows

WASHINGTON.—Neighbors of "drive-in" motion picture theaters, the kind where patrons drive in and sit in their autos while seeing and listening to the show, would not be annoyed by the loud blasts of the screen's loudspeakers, if a new way of quieting the "talkies" should go into widespread use.

Individual loudspeakers for each car is the feature of the invention for which a patent has just been granted to G. Douthwaite of Los Angeles, Calif. Each parking space in the open air theater would be provided with a loudspeaker. A car would pull into the parking space and drive up a ramp until the radiator of the auto would almost contact with the cone of the loudspeaker.

In this way sound would travel from the loudspeaker, through the radiator of the car, through the dashboard into the auto proper. Each car would thus be literally coupled to a loudspeaker through its radiator. In this way, it is claimed that sound is confined to the car, and little escapes to the open air and the surrounding neighborhood.

THERE is usually a definite reason for such complaints...so, now let's reason sensibly.

FABLES IN SLANG

By GEORGE ADE

He Wanted to Be Like a British Nobleman Who Can Go Through an Explosion Without Shifting His Monocle.

THE SLUMBERING VOLCANO

ONCE there was a Young Man named Cyril Frappey who prided himself on the fact that he never made a Show of his Emotions.

Mr. Frappey didn't have any Ancestors whose Pictures he could produce. If he had secured the Pictures, he wouldn't have dared to hang them on the Wall.

In this Country, when a Lad of Lively Birth keeps himself in a Condition of antiseptic Cleanliness and comports himself with Dignity and looks down at the Universe from Heights above, he is sure to rise above the Common Herd and finish either in the Aisle of the Dress Goods Department or the Private Office of some phoney Development Proposition.

HE WAS A SPECIALIST Our Hero specialized on the suppression of all the common and familiar Manifestations of Human Weakness.

If he happened to be walking along the Street and saw 80 or 100 Men grouped in front of a Window watching a perfectly developed Blond demonstrate a frothy Washing Machine he would elevate the old Chin and go straight ahead, without trying to sneak a Flash.

Funerals bored him. He was annoyed by the Presence of so many clammy Weepers.

Mr. Frappey had mapped out for himself a very strict and definite Policy in regard to Women. He had observed that smirking Lovers who answer the Bell and run Errands and are always Johnny-on-the-Spot enjoy a kind of second-rate, domesticated Popularity, the same as Boston Terriers, but the Maidens are yearning, all the time, for some one who is calm, superior and inscrutable, the same as Ronald Colman in the Movies.

So whenever Mr. Frappey found himself in the Company of a Flossie, he treated her with courtly Politeness but he made it a rule never to cajole and flatter. It was Indifference that shook up the Girls and made them work overtime.

If you want the Low Down, and Inside on Mr. Frappey, the Facts are these: As a Cynic he was a False Alarm and as a Stoic he was all Veneer. Under the hard crust of his cultivated Personality, all of the customary primeval Passions surged and bubbled. He retained all of the Fool Impulses of the Wealthlings who had preceded him, but he thought he had them harnessed.

For instance when he met Miss Estelle Gimpey, the trained and disciplined Frappey told himself that he was merely in the presence of a living Organism composed largely of Oxygen, Hydrogen, Carbon, Iron, Phosphorus and various Mineral Salts. The hidden and submerged Ego began to quiver like an Aspen and was ready to admit that Estelle was the logical Miss America and Queen of the Wows. From the Outside he was a Glacier but internally he enjoyed the Temperature used at Bethlehem, Penna., in boiling up Steel for Armor Plates.

Miss Gimpey, for the first time in her brief Career as a high-voltage Vamp, found herself in the Presence of a Male who did not fall for the Shoulder Action and a very superior line of Work with the Eyes. She was plucked and puzzled and to be Literary for the Nonce, one might almost say, that she was intrigued. She was accustomed to see them curl up like Bacon in a Skillet.

HE REVERTED TO TYPE She carried the Battle to him and let him have Volley after Volley of Soft Sighs and coy Glances. One Evening, when it seemed as if she had lost, he wrapped his muscular Right Fin around her supple Waist and reverted to Type. He began to gurgle all of the incoherent and idiotic platitudes of conventional Courtship. He wanted her to marry him early next morning.

After she got back to her Room and straightened her bob, she realized that Sir Launcelot was just an ordinary Dub and would be an Awful Thing to have around the House. She knew that if he had repulsed her and continued to treat her as a Silly Child, she might have worshiped him throughout Eternity and even beyond. As it was, she sent a curt Note, in which she explained that she would always entertain a certain Respect for him but she was dead sure they never could hit off as Man and Wife, because their Natures were not compatible. In a very nice and diplomatic way she dropped him from a Fourth Story Window onto the hard Concrete.

When he read her Note by the morning Light of cold Philosophy he was much relieved. He knew that she had tricked him by having a Battery concealed somewhere on her Person. Being once more under Restraint he was more than ever convinced that a Man is a Champ to give way to any natural Impulse or recognize the Existence of what is sometimes known as the Opposite Sex.

She told everybody about it but no one believed her.

The Man Who... Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY ONE VOTE

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES of Ohio, nineteenth President of the United States, can be designated "the man who was elected by a single vote."

His contest with Samuel J. Tilden of New York, the Democratic nominee, threatened for a time in 1876 and early 1877 to bring about a resumption of the Civil war. Perhaps it explains in some measure the bitterness of battles today between Republicans and Democrats.

Hayes faced the disadvantage of running in the wake of the eight years of the Grant administrations, followed as they were by sensational accusations of financial frauds. There was little to choose between abilities of the candidates and when first returns were in, Tilden was acclaimed as winner.

Shortly after election day, it was revealed that Tilden's managers were uncertain as to the results their party had achieved in Florida, South Carolina and Louisiana. Normally Democratic, these states still were in the hands of carpet-bagger governments.

Tilden had 184 electoral votes and the ballots of any of the three states named would have elected him. Hayes, with 169, needed all of them to have one more electoral vote than Tilden. In Louisiana, the canvassing board threw out 13,250 Democratic votes and gave the state to Hayes. Republicans asserted their candidate had won in both South Carolina and Florida. But Democrats of the three states returned votes for Tilden.

To make the situation a typical American scene, congress was divided, one branch being Democratic, the other Republican.

It was decided finally to appoint five congressmen from each party and five judges of the Supreme court to make the decision as to which set of returns from the disputed states should be accepted.

The election of Hayes was assured by the vote of Justice Bradley, whose participation gave the deliberative body a margin of eight Republicans to seven Democrats. And congress approved these momentous findings just in time to enable Rutherford B. Hayes to take the oath of office as President.

NAMING A PARTY

IRONICALLY enough, the names of the two principal political parties once were combined as Democratic Republicans, a group of which the standard bearer was Thomas Jefferson, referred to perhaps oftener than any other leader when Democrats trace their political origin.

Under Jackson the party name was shortened to Democrat, which it continues to bear.

Republicans emerged as a separate party as early as 1854, although its first nominating convention was held two years later. Up at Ripon, Wis., in a corner of the campus of Ripon college, stands the Ripon Congregational church, scene of the first G. O. P. meeting.

The Ripon meeting had been called by Major Alvan E. Bovay, a Whig lawyer, who generally receives credit for suggesting the name of the party.

He had passed on his idea to Horace Greeley who later advocated the name Republican at a convention in Jackson, Mich.

Although Ripon had a voting list that hardly exceeded 100 in those days of exclusively male suffrage, more than half of them attended Bovay's first gathering. The impulse which brought them together was the conviction that the slavery question was coming rapidly to a head and that those who opposed must unite in a new group, regardless of geographical lines.

Northern states naturally proved the most fertile ground for spreading the new doctrine. Before the party's first national convention, which was held in Philadelphia on June 17, 1854—a firm "toehold" had been secured by senatorial representation at Washington.

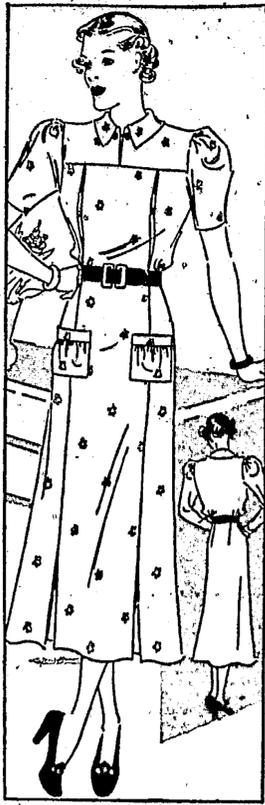

History fails to record what part, if any, Major Bovay played in the Philadelphia meeting. The delegates were unanimously in favor of nominating John C. Fremont and he was selected on the first ballot.

Another Republican attended, however. He was the gangling Illinois rail-splitter, Abe Lincoln, and some of his colleagues had the temerity to advance his name as a candidate for vice-president. "Honest Abe" lost the nomination but four years later he was to carry the party to victory.

Rivers That Flow North

The St. Johns River in Florida is supposedly the only river in the United States which flows northward throughout its entire course. There are others, however, which flow north for a part of their course. These include the Monongahela in Pennsylvania, the Tennessee in Tennessee and Kentucky, the Red River of the North in Minnesota and North Dakota, Big Horn in Wyoming and Montana, Powder in Wyoming and Montana.

Household Questions

To prevent the juice in fruit tart boiling over, mix a little cornstarch with the sugar before adding it to tart filling.

Green bananas may be ripened by placing in a paper bag and keeping in a dark closet for a few days.

To remove water spots from silk, dampen evenly and press material while still damp. This may be done by sponging carefully with clear water or by shaking it in the steam from a briskly boiling tea kettle until it is thoroughly damp.

After bottles have been washed with soap and water they can be further cleaned and sweetened by dropping small pieces of fresh lemon into each bottle half filled with water and shaking.

When making cole slaw, or cabbage salad, add half a small onion, shredded fine and mix with the cabbage. It improves the flavor.

Leftover juices if boiled and used instead of water to dissolve gelatin will give gelatin a richer flavor.

Aluminum pots and pans that have become discolored may be brightened by rubbing with a cloth moistened with lemon juice.

Mr. Kudner's Barbeque

Many expressions of appreciation were heard on every hand for Mr. Kudner and his helpers who gave this splendid entertainment, and enabled people from all over the county to get together for a care-free and memorable day.
