Parents of Hollis Martin In N. M

While Hollis Martin's parents and aged grandfather remained secluded in the city the Rev. Al Bowman, pastor of the Altus, Okla., church where the condemned youth attended Sunday School pleaded with Gov. Clyde Tingley to spare 19-year old slayer's life.

The Rey. Mr. Bowman, a former pastor of Roswell and Albuquerque churches, was closeted with the executive for a short time this morning and will return Wednesday to press his case The governor would not comment on the couversation.

Martin was convicted at Carrizozo of first degree murder in connection with the slaying of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Willard Shaffer and their 9-yearold son at their Hondo, N. M. farm house in November 1985.

His appeal to the supreme court was never perfected, and in . May the high tribunal affirmed the death sentence and set July 28 as the execution date.

He said today his sole plea was the members of the Legion and that Hollis Martin "was not normal" and that the fact was never brought out fully during the trial at Carrizozo.

"His own family physician tells me the boy never will be normal." he said, "and the sheriff, his school teacher and Sunday school teacher all say the same thing.

Mr. Bowman said the youth was hit on the head by a falling timber as a child.

"He never could distinguish his hat from your hat." Mr. Bowman said.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Martin, the youth's parents came here today in with Tom Hollis, his grandfather. —New Mexican.

As the season progresses the fascinction of silk prints leads on and on to acquire another and another and "just one more." The latest message is for brilliant flowers in gorgeous purples and vibrant blues and exotic magenta reds and bright greens and other ravishing colors printed on white backgrounds. Typical of this midsummer spirit in prints is the handsome model shown. It is a white slik crepe patterned in medium size florals. A grand dress to wear to afternoon occasions. The neck is high with a ilny collar that flaunts a spaghetti tie in purple. The large hat is most interesting and significant since it worn by dusky market wemen of bespeaks a type of millinery that Nassau and Havana have influenced is new and outstanding. SYNOPSIS

Victoria Herrendeen, a vivacious little girl, had been too young to feel the shock that came when her father, Keith Herrendeen, lost his fortune. A gentle, unobtrusive soul, he is now employed as an obscure chemist in San Francisco. His wife, Magda, cannot adjust herself to the change. She is a beautiful woman, fond of pleasure and a magnet for men's attention. Magda and Victoria have been down at a summer resort and Keith joins them for the week-end. Magda leaves for a bridge party, excusing herself for being such a "runaway." The Herrendeens return to their small San Francisco apartment. Keith does not approve of Magda's mad social life and they quarrel frequently. Magda receives flowers and a diamond from Ferdy Manners, a wealthy man from Argentina whom she had met less than a week before. Manners arrives a few hours later. Magda takes Victoria to Nevada to visit a woman friend who has a daughter named Catherine. There she tells her she is going to get a divorce. Victoria soon is in boarding school with her friend Catherine. Magda marries Manners and they spend two years in Argentina. Victoria has studted in Europe and at eighteen she visits her mother when Ferdy rents a beautiful home. Magda is unhappy over Ferdy's drinking and attentions to other women. When her mother and stepfather return to South America, Victoria refuses to go with them because of Ferdy's unwelcome attentions to her. Magda returns and tells Vic she and Ferdy have separated. Meanwhile Keith has remarried. Victoria is now a student nurse. Magda has fellen in love with Luclus Former, a married artist. While she and Vic prepare for a trip to Europe, Ferdy takes a suite in their hotel. The night before Magda and Vic are to sail, Magda clopes with Lucius Farmer. While nursing the children of Dr. and Mrs. Reats. Vicmeets Dr. Quentin Hardisty, a brilliant physician, much sought after by women who is a widower with a crippled daughter. In a tete-a-teto at the Kents home, he kinses Vic. Ecveral days later he invites her with other guests to spend a week-end at his cabin. Vio is enchanted with the cabin and with the dinner.

"How about a walk?" Quentin said then. The Uphams declined. Chase was sleepy, and Dorn tired. But Victoria, in an old, short skirt, a white cap, an enveloping borrowed owester of Quentin's, was all ready for it. She and her host went off together for one of life's happy hours.

They climbed straight up the great shoulder of the mountain; stopped, panting and flushed, to get their breath and to look down on the sparkling world; went on again. The sun was hot on the singing blue February morning, but the ground under their feet, especially when the trail went into the woods, was coaked and elippery from recent rains. Quentin gave her his hand; she alid against him; they both laughed.

Reaching the summit of the spur with the dark blue rise of Tamalpais high above them, they sat upon a sun-warmed rock for a while, looking down, breathing in the aromatic sweetness of the still, clear air, listening to the cries of larks all about and the occasional scream of a jay or chatter of a chipmunk in the chaparral.

When they started to slip and easier, especially with the treesmothered brown goal of the cabin roof right ahead. Vicky and Quentin came back to the cabin at one o'clock, breathless, ravenous and weary.

Once again the quartette that gathered about the table was in gala mood. More than once again Victoria told herself that this was one of the good days, this was one of the satisfying times!

But just after the leisurely meal there was an interruption. A car came up the circuitous bit of roadway to the porch with the speed of familiarity. Quentin's expression of horrifled expectation, at which Victoria had been laughing, changed to one of odd embarrassment, of something like faint annoyance—like gratification. "It's Marian, it's Mrs. Pool," he had time to say under his breath before he went out to welcome her. "Oh, help!" Dora commented, disgustedly. Victoria said nothing. But the glory, the content of the day instantly were destroyed. It was with a sense of duliness, a vague feeling of hurt that she entered upon the requisite moving of chairs and shifting of places to make room for the newcomer. Marian Pool, lovely in the smartest of sportwear, came i to the room with a rush and stood

"Oh, you're having a partyl Oh, how shameless of mel" she said. "But why on earth are you eating at half-past four o'clock? Sit down, everyone do sit down. Dr. Upham -here, everyone sit down!"

"You did tell me you had a house party!"

"We didn't know it ranked as a house party, did we, Dora?"

"I beg pardon?" Dora stammered, starting. "You don't remember me, Mrs.

Pool?" Victoria said, in the dreadful moment of silence when everyone stirred and smiled, but no one had anything to say. "Victoria Herrendeen-down at the lodge, years

"Oh, frightful, don't remind me of those ghastly days," Mrs. Pool said lightly, her eyes on Quentin. "That was before, all blushes and confusion, I got my divorce! I cried all day, when I was first married, and danced all night when I got my divorce. I mean I really did,

The dullness, the wearisome stupidness of it all deepened. Vic, from the moment her eyes had first fallen upon the visitor, had known that it would.

. "She is beautiful—perfectly beautiful." Victoria said to Dora, when they were gathering brushes and jars in the bathroom.

and the atmosphere of the Keats | Keatses witnessed the very simple nursery, when Victoria entered it, somehow jarred on her nerves.

er, when she and Mrs. Keats were lunching together, "did Dr. Keats talk to you about my going to Honolulu?"

"You mean Miss Reynolds' recommending you for it?" "It's definite now. I've a letter here from Dr. Bert about it." A cloud came over the older woman's face.

"Vicky, I'd be so sorry to see you

"Why would you, Vi?"

"Well, for the obvious reasons, of course." the cultured English voice said. "Because Mother depends so on you, and we all do! But it isn't only that. I'm thinking of you. Girls do get so entirely out of touch in those places. I know it. My father was at Barbados when I was a girl; it's much the same thing: The life gets one: it's easy, insular, unambitious. After a bit you're telling visitors that you've been there ten years, fifteen years. In a few years there's no out."

"Vi, I'm going away on account of Quentin Hardisty." Victoria said. Mrs. Keats was standing beside. her at the window: they did not look at each other; there was a silence. "We're all driving up for supper | "I've got to get away before I make a complete fool of myself-Tve dropped Sally and George in | before he knows," Victoria pres-

"You mean you—you like him?" Violet Keats said in a stunned voice. "I guess that about expresses it," Victoria said, with a brief laugh.

The thing happened quite simply about ten days later. Victoria had taken Kate down to Dr. Hardisty's offices to have one of the younger men there look at a small sprained elbow. He stood looking thoughtfully at Vic and the child for a long minute, finally asked her, in almost an absent voice, if she would see him in his own office before she went away.

Vic found her way to this guarded and inaccessible sanctum made strangely easy. Kate had a wrapped molasses peppermint to console herfor recent indignities, and Vic sat earnest and pretty in her new spring clothes, looking in puzzled expectancy at the doctor.

"I want to talk for a few minutes. and then you talk," Quentin began. He drew four firm parallel lines in pencil on a scrap of paper, looking at them, crumpled the paper and threw it aside.

"I thought you said the other night" that you were lonesome, that you were thinking of going to Honolulu because you were lonesome?"

"I said it to Vi," Vic admitted, after a moment. Her heart thumped.

"Why do you say that you said it to Vi in that funny way?"

"I didn't know I said it in a funny way. I suppose I meant that I didn't say it to you."

the man recommenced:

"The thing is—" He hesitated. "The thing is that I want a home," he said. "I want my little girl with me. I told Violet about it and asked her if she thought you'd take the job. She said—did she tell you this?"

"She didn't tell me anything." "Well, she said, 'D'you mean as a nurse and housekeeper, or as a wife?' I said, 'Well, if you put it that way, as a wife!' D'you get what I mean?" he finished. "I had been saying 'housekeeper,' but maybe what I meant all along was wife." He oat back.

"I see," Victoria mused, not moving her eyes from his. Color came into her face and receded again and they both laughed nervously.

"And-and, thank you!" she said then, a little confusedly. "I need a wife, badly," the man presently added. "Everyone knows that-Violet and John, everyone. You're the kind of woman I want to marry, I admire you tremendously. I-I like you very much." "You mean without loving me?" Victoria aaked.

"I thought—I thought that was how you wanted it to be," the man said, simply.

Victoria looked at him thoughtfully, her breath uneven, her face scarlet.

"Here's the thing," Quentin said, as she did not speak. "I'd be awfully proud if you'd do it, really I would. If you won't I'm going to get out for a while—I'll go to Germony. But I'd much rother not get out, on account of Gwen, and my hospital work-everything. What do you say?''

"I think you'd better try Germany." For a few seconds Victoria really thought she had said it. Then she knew that she had said nothing audible, but that she was looking at him with her throat dry, and her heart beating hard, and all her senses in wild confusion. "If a man wanted you he could get you," she heard him saying. "If a man wanted you he could get you."

"I say yes, of course," she said steadily.

"Good!" he said. "I'll come out to dinner tonight and we'll tell Vi and Johnny. Good-by, Kate, give me a kiss—that's the girl! No, this Victoria left him standing there, in his white coat, with the little instrument still in his big hand.

staunchly. Afterward, when the doctor and Violet had kissed her, and she and Quentin were down beside the parked car, she had another moment of irresolution.

"Are we going to Mill Valley?" "Well, you knew that," Quentin

"Yes. I know." Victoria got into the car. "We'll be back Monday. Vi." she said, through the opened window. The Keatses waved: Quentin started the engine; they were moving.

Selfishness Destroys Happiness When we avoid our neighbor who is suffering, when we wrap ourselves in the cold blanket of selfishness, we forget the possibilities of real happiness, for true happiness comes only through sympathy and by comparison. FRED MACMURRAY WASHED CARS FOR A LIVING TECESSITY is the mother of invention, they say; and if that is so I think someone should emphasize that "Courage is the father of opportunity." So many times, when things look blackest, it seems that only by drawing on reserve strength can we keep going. Suddenly we find ourselves face to face with opportunity. Everything looked hopeless before. We were really almost ready to give up. And, then looking back, we wonder how things could have seemed as bad as they were.

Fred MacMurnay was born in Kankakee, Ill., in 1908, and spent his boyhood in Beaver Dam, Wis. He lived a normal small town life for an American youngster. In 1925, when he was seventeen, he was awarded the annual American Lesports. His mother worked in offices to support them both, and Fred attended Carroll college in Waukesha, Wis., carning his way by playing the saxophone. A broken hip forced, his mother to quit work, and Fred left college to try to blow a living out of his saxophone. They moved to Hollywood. Calif., for her health and the boy was glad to get a job washing cars in a gerage, to pay her hospital bills. Before he could collect his pay, the garage went bankrupt, and Fred MacMurray faced a discouraging period without a job. Ho tried to obtain work in the picture studios as a saxophone player, but had no luck. Things looked very black, indeed. Then, he was signed up with a band called the California Collegions, which worked its way to New York city and was hired for the play "Three's a Crowd." Fred had a small bit which led to a slightly better part in "Roberta," A talent scout for Paramount saw him, brought him back to Hollywood, and he was given a contract which led to his success in pictures.

Great Heat Hurts Corn More Than Lack of Moisture

Meteorologist Explains How Drouth Cuts Crop

Detroit.—Excessive heat in drouth years is a more potent of Rochester present new evidence cause of corn crop failure than lack of water, Senior Meteorologist Charles D. Reed of the United States weather bureau station at Des Moines, Iowa, told the third Dearborn conference of agriculture, industry and science session here.

In support of his thesis, Mr. Reed cited recent drouth history in his own state:

"In 1934, summer precipitation averaged 2.08 inches greater than in 1933 in Iowa, yet there was a bumper crop in 1933 and nearly a corn failure in the southern counties in prolonged heat, with an average of 19.7 days with temperatures 100 degrees or higher, the greatest of record up to that time. This cut the 1934 corn yield to 21.0 bushels as compared with 14 in 1894.

Lost 235 Million Bushels.

"Then came the calamitous summer of 1938. The heat of July and August averaged 81.3 degrees, surpassing by 3.2 degrees the record hot July and August, 1901, with an average of 25.0 days 100 degrees or higher.

"During the last half of July, 1938, the Iowa corn crop was reduced 235,000,000 bushels to an average yield per acro of about 17 bushels. . In small areas the destruction was even more complete than in 1894. Whole townships in the couth part of Plymouth and the central part of Woodbury counties, report only two or three wagen loads of corn.

"We used to say, 'It can't happen in Iowa, but like the Californians. we must reluctantly admit that we had some unusual weather."

Deprecates "Cycle" Theory. Discussing the much - debated question of weather cycles, Mr. Reed found come difficulties, but also offered aweltering humanity promise of come, relief:

"Considerable has been said about precipitation cycles but since precipitation is a resultant of many complex factors of which temperature is the major one, the search for precipitation cycles is not likely to be very fruitful. There is, however. a rough rhythm to the temperature graph for the state of Iowa which can, with a little imagination, be divided into cycles or periods after eliminating volcanic and other influences.

"There is little doubt that we have just passed a historic peak in the temperature cycle that must be followed by a summer in 1937 much cooler than recent summers and probably averaging near or slightly studied the alpha particle ranges as baking dish in layers, sprinkling below the long time summer over- their method in seeking actinium's age. And the cycles that have gone before lead one to believe that there will be a tendency for the next 2 or 3 summers to grow cooler."

Early Eocene Pig, Found in Badlands

Buffalo, N. Y. - Discovery of the fossilized brain of a primitive pig-like animal, the Oreodon, which existed in the western United States during early eocene times, some 40 million years ago, has just been reported by Irving G. Reimann, curator of geology at the Buffalo Museum of Science.

Mr. Reimann discovered the brain while collecting remains of these extinct peccaries at a famous locality near Scenic, S. D., in the Badlands. He found the place well picked over/when he arrived, with fragments of bones littering the ground. As he was turning away with disappointment, he noticed the skull of an Oreodon, badly weathered. As he picked it up, the top of the cranium came off, revealing an excellent cast of the brain. The various areas and convolutions could be recognized.

Science, Like Law, Has Own "Bureau of Missing Persons"

Hunt Is On Now for Long Lost Parents of Actinium

Rochester, N. Y.—The police may have their missing persons bureaus who hunt for the Charley Rosses and Judge Craters of the world but science too has similar mysteries and none so famous as the "missing" parents of the element actinium.

In a report to the American Physical society, Prof. T. R. Wilkins and Dr. W. M. Rayton of the University which helps make clearer the origins of the missing long-lived parents of the actinium series of radioelements.

How Lost Are Traced.

Scientific happenings which make it possible to throw light on the atomic "missing persons" problem are that sometimes the change from one element to another is accompanied by a loss of weight and sometimes merely by a loss of electrical charge without the weight loss.

The loss of weight occurs when the nucleus of a helium atom, known as an alpha particle, is liberated in the radioactive disintegra-1934, because of the excessive and tion. Then, the parent atom drops down two whole numbers in the numerical scale which rates chemlcal element from hydrogen as one, to uranium at 92.

> When electricity is given off by the emission of an electron the atomic number of the element jumps back up the scale by one unit. Thus Uranium I (92) gives off an alpha particle and becomes Uranium X. (90). But Uranium X. gives off an electron and becomes Uranium X., with atomic number 91.

Radium Best Known.

Thus in stepwise fashion, but cometimes up and cometimes down the scale of atomic numbers, go the pitcher filled with cracked ice. disintegrations of the heavy radioactive elements, of which the best known is, perhaps, radium with atomic number 88. Common, gray and soft lead are the final offspring of all these spontaneous changes and there are four different kinds of lead; radium lead, thorium lead. actinium lead and just lead. The radium, thorium and actinium here mean that it is lead which had each of these specific origins. Plain lead merely means that scientists cannot specifically fix its origin.

The ability of the radioactive atoms to lose or take on weight at various stages means that there will frequently be two or more varieties all having the same chemical properties but alightly different masses even though they may have the same atomic number rating. Thus Uranium X, and its three isotopes (as they are known) all have atomic weight of 234. One has an atomic number of 00, another is number 92 and two are number 91.

While chemical methods are not sufficiently exact to permit distinguishing between all these varieties. other methods, and in particular, the range with which alpha particles are emitted, serve as experimental checks.

Drs. Wilkins and Rayton have "lost parent." The investigation also throws much needed light on the way alpha particles are emitted from the nucleus of atoms; a problem which has bearing on the muchstudied and important field of the constitution of the inner cores of

Details of the methods used will interest scientists but need not necessarily be presented for the layman. Suffice it to say that a previcusly-unfound isotope of uranium has been indicated, at least tentatively, which might well serve as the parent for the now-orphaned se ries of actinium radio-elements.

Uncle Sam Breeds His Own Huskies for Alaskan Use

McKinley Park, Alaska.—Advent of the airplane in Alaska, and resultant air-mail contracts, have resulted in the past few years in a diminution of the supply of huskies available to pull dog teams. The result is that park authorities in Mount McKinley National park are raising their own dogs, reports Superintendent Harry J.

Previous to the use of air-mail. mail delivery was mainly by dogteam throughout the territory, so that the breeding of huskies was a thriving business. Now that the dogteam delivery has been discontinued in most sections, huskies are scarce and difficult to purchase.

The dogicam still remains the winter mode of transportation in Mount McKinley park, however, hence the decision to breed huskies in the park for government needs.

BETTER BE KIND TO YOUR LIVER

Organ Has Lot to Do With Making Food Do Its Duty.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE liver is one of the most important organs of the digestive system. It does its part in the preparation of fats and proteins for absorption and also acts upon all carbohydrates after they are ready for absorption by changing them into a form in which they can be stored in the liver itself until needed by the body. The continuous flow of bile from the liver into the intestines prevents putrefaction of food. The livez also is a storehouse for iron and for vitamins A and D.

For all these reasons any derangement of the liver functions is serious, although not always acute. The so-called bilious attack whose symptoms are headache and nausea is often a warning that the liver has been mistreated by overeating or by allowing a condition of constipation to arise. The remedy lies in avoiding all food except fruit juices for a day or two, after which milk may be given. This may be followed by soft food with a gradual return-to a normal diet.

Jaundice is a more serious affection in which bile overflows into the blood. This is shown by the yellow color of the skin. The diet usually prescribed in these cases consists of plenty of fruit juices, cereals, toast, starchy vegetables with plenty of skimmed milk. Jellies, jams and marmalades may be used, but meats, eggs and all fats are prohibited. Foods with fibrous content, such as whole grains, raw vegetables and highly seasoned food must be avoided. Coffee and tea are allowed, but alcoholic drinks are forbidden.
