CARRIZOZO, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1938

Roswell Fair October 5, 6, 7, 8

Children's saddles class in the opening afternoon program at the Eastern New Mexico State Fair to be held in Roswell October 5, 6, 7 and 8 is attracting a lot of interest. There will be two divisions in this class, one for western saddles and one for flat saddles. It is limited to children who have not attained their sixteenth birthday. Judging will be on finish of the rider at all gaits. Particular attention will be paid by the judges to the ease and grace with which the rider handles his mount in the walk, trot and gallop, and sits his saddle. This class is designed to encourage youthful riders to perfect themselves in the art of horsemanship.

This is just another of the new features added to the fair this year to give it a wider appeal—to permit more people to have a part and provide a variety of entertainment for the thousands of spectators. Admission price to the afternoon shows has been reduced this year in line with this general idea—adults being admitted for fifty cents, children for twenty-five. There will be a complete change of program each afternoon, with many novelties to add both fun and thrills to each day's entertainment.

Exhibits will be larger than ever and the opening day's parade will exceed any previous efforts in Eastern New Mexico. Old Timers' Day on Friday will again be one of the high lights of the week.

Court Officials Here

The September term of District Court opened here last Monday, with Judge Numa C. Frenger, presiding. Hon. M. A. Threet, district attorney, Mr. Cuba Clayton, assistant district attorney, and Miss Winifred Riley, are all here. This term of court promises to be quite interesting. In addition to the many civil cases, the Leadinghaus case will be tried here, having been granted a change of venue from Alamogordo. Also the trial of Ben Mixon and sons, Louis and Randall, who are alleged to have been connected with the slaying of George Roberts, Ancho store keeper and his clerk, Edward Ferguson, which occurred July 22.

The Idelwylde

Mr. Hugh Bunch invites the public to watch for the opening of "The Idelwylde", his cocktail parlor, across the street from Rolland's drug store, which will be one of the nicest places in New Mexico. It will be furnished with bar, tables and dance hall, with the latest style equipment. Mr. Bunch states that "Smitty", formerly bar-tender for the Carrizozo Country Club will be in charge.

Off to School

Students who left this week for the various schools and colleges were: Misses Wilma Snow, Rhoda Freeman, Carl Freeman and Frank Perkins, to State College, Las Cruces; Fred H. English, Military Institute, Roswell; Frank Arthur English, State University, Albuquerque; Mozelle McFarland, Teachers' College, Sterling, Kansas; Walter Fulmer, School of Mines, Socorro.

Two big days of fun for old and young—Carrizozo, Sept. 16-17.

Republicans Gather to Hear Oratory of G. O. P. Statesmen

"Down in the corn field,
"Hear that mournful sound—"
Republicans in numbers capable of consuming six thousand chickens; gathered in the maize patch of Homer Capehart in Indiana, to listen to the oratory of G. O. P. statesmen. Homer Capehart is a new name in political circles, but henceforth whenever politicians seek a rural refuge, his name will live, and perhaps that is the mark of success for the assemblage.

Ex-Senator James Wadsworth of New York—now only an humble member of the House of Representatives—delivered the main speech. Incidentally it is a curious development of politics that Mr. Wadsworth, who was a hum-dinger senator; always in the news; always prominent, if not dominant in party councils, has, either consciously or unconsciously, faded into relative obscurity in the lower House. However, he was all there and told of the sins of the Democratic administration with all his old-time vigor. Republican Chairman John Hamilton, another speaker of the corn fest, did not surpass the emphasis of the former New York senator when he said nothing in a long impassioned address.

One would gather from the massed remarks of these two distinguished party spokesmen, that something had to be done about the Democratic diabolism in government. There was accord on this point; which is something of an answer to the jibe that two Republicans could not agree at this stage of the 1938 campaign. Another point where the minds met was an abstention of what it was that had to be done, who was to do it, and when.

Perhaps the detail of the Republican policy that is to sweep the country is just around the corner—that same G. O. P. corner we heard so much about toward the end of the Hoover administration. Come to think of it, perhaps the six thousand chickens consumed had some relation to the two chickens that were to be in every pot if Mr. Hoover continued as President—a sort of belated fulfillment of a platform pledge.

The only thing lacking as the goading of roasting ears drowned out the band, was the presentation of a report from the Dr. Glenn Frank Program Committee. That portentous aggregation of talent under the leadership of the G. O. P. Number One Brain Trustee, has been at its labors, faithfully it is assumed, for about a year. One would think that a group embracing so much wisdom would have something to suggest. Here the Congressional elections are only two months away and the minority party hasn't even the rudiment of a chart to guide it. Its candidates for the Senate and House, with rare exceptions, do not know whether to be New Dealers, who will promise more than the Roosevelt administration offers in that connection, or steadfast Old Guardsmen, who view with alarm everything governmental that has been done since the statesmen ceased wearing stocks and purple shorts and who assure their constituents that a thing is wrong because it's new and hallowed because it worked back in the dark ages of Republican politics.

A minor cornfield orator did say something about the intention of the Republican party to wrest a large number of seats in the House and Senate from the party in power. My recollection is that he suggested seventy as the modest estimate of prospective Republican gains. As this gentleman, with the usual care and caution typical of prophecies along that line, carefully abstained from specifying which Democratic seats were in danger, he might have made the number a hundred without adding to the absurdity of his hope. But suppose the Democratic party closed its headquarters; withdrew its own speakers and did everything else possible to make this orator's dream come true, where would that leave the next Congress?

Statistics Blast Republican Hopes

The threatened majority party would only have a majority of 80 or 90 votes—just about double the usual majority requisite to easy and comfortable control of the House of Representatives. Over on the Senate side, where even a single change is unlikely, due to the circumstance that nearly all of the vacancies are in conceded solid Democratic States, the utmost variation could not involve more than a seat or two. These simple statistics tell the whole story of the real Republican thought concerning next November's election.

Up to date, the Republican propaganda organs, vocal and written, have devoted themselves almost exclusively to comment on the Democratic primaries, generously advising the Democrats that the safety of the country and the future of the race depended on their selecting Democrats who have opposed Roosevelt policies.

Well, suppose their arguments prevail in such states as have not already voted. How would that alter the situation or give the Republicans any serious encouragement? The senators opposed to the administration will perhaps continue to oppose the administration. So things on Capitol Hill would remain as they have been for the most part. Nothing of consequence that the old Congress had enacted into law would be repealed, and all the cornfield conferences that might be held in the interim could make no difference.

The song, the opening words of which head these comments on Homer Capehart's party, was a sort of dirge, reciting that "Massa's in the cold, cold ground." So perhaps the best estimate of the Indiana gathering would be that it was a sort of wake held over the corpse of a regime that is as dead as old Rameses.

Notice

The first meeting of the Carrizozo Woman's Club will be held at the home of Mrs. Albert Ziegler, Friday, Sept. 16th at 3:00 p. m. Mrs. R. E. Blaney will be in charge of the program.

Murder Will Out

It seems that the Third Judicial District has an epidemic of murders to deal with for the September term of court.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Jackson, of Alamogordo, will be on trial in connection with the Leadinghaus murder which occurred in Alamogordo last February.

Messrs Ben, Lewis and Randall Mixon, Ancho ranchmen, will be tried at this term of court, accused of complicity in the double slaying of Geo. Roberts, Ancho storekeeper, and Edward Ferguson, his clerk.

Another murder, which took place in Las Cruces, and which will require the attention of Judge Frenger and District Attorney Threet, was that of Mrs. Nora Pollard, Aug. 28th. Raymond Navarez, age 24, and Walter Fouillett, age 54, are being held as suspects in this case.

"Substance" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Societies and Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 11th.

The Golden Text is: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst a f t e r righteoussness: for they shall be filled." (Matt. 5:6)

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." (Heb. 11:1.)

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy: "Substance is that which is eternal and incapable of discord and decay. Truth, Life and Love are substance, as the Scriptures use this word in Hebrews: 'The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.' Spirit, the syononym of Mind, Soul or God, is the only real substance."

Cheese Belongs in Class of Staples

Replaces Meat or Fish In the Main Course

By EDITH M. BARBER
CHEESE has the honor of being the first manufactured food. Its discovery was probably accidental. When milk was carried in a skin bottle made from a goat's stomach, it came in contact with the rennin which remained, and separated into curds and whey. Since that time milk curd has been the basis of cheese manufacture.

Cheese retains most of the food value of milk and is, of course, a concentrated food. All European nations have innumerable kinds of cheese of varying texture and flavor. In many of these countries cheese furnishes the largest amount of protein used daily. Cheese should be considered a staple food rather than an accessory. The custom of putting bread and cheese together is excellent from a nutritional standpoint, as one supplements the other. We also are accustomed to serve many cooked cheese dishes on toast and for a very good reason. One cheese made of whole milk is about equal to another made in the same way. Cheese made from skimmed milk, while it is lacking in fat, provides a larger percentage of protein. This essential requirement of the diet is provided in its best form by every type of cheese as well as by milk. While we may all enjoy a bit of cheese after dinner, because of the tang which its flavor provides, it actually belongs in the main course of a meal to replace meat or fish from time to time.

Household Hints

By BETTY WELLS

WE'VE heard of houses with plenty of closet space, but personally we've never met one. Even when the closets looked spacious enough on the blueprints, even when they looked enormous in a vacant house. A family has a way of filling them up to overflowing all too soon. And the first thing you know the lady of the house is trying to figure out a place to tuck an extra closet or cupboard.

Sometimes there's a small porch or an end of a porch or hall that can be remodeled into a grand big closet. And here's a tip—a closet with a window is a joy on all counts so whenever possible, plan on one. It can double as a dressing room; then too, it is easier to keep it fresh and fragrant; and how much easier to find things!

If you must up and take your new closet space from actual room area, there are ever so many ways to keep it from looking awkward. For instance, have two closets in corners of one long wall. In the space between these two closets, have a dressing table, a piano, a bed or a desk. You can put a contrasting wall paper in the alcove, thus left. If you plan to have a single bed here, have the space of a size to fit studio couch or springs and mattress as if the studio-couch were built in.

Or if you want a regular double bed, set the head into an alcove and arrange drapery or a series of pictures above. If you use the alcove for a desk, this is a good place for book shelves. If the alcove will accommodate a dressing table, have a group of wall brackets around the mirror to hold dainty bottles. If the space will be used for a new small piano, plan to have shelves for music at the sides.

If the two new closets are to be whittled off the dining room floor space, what a chance that space-between offers for shelves to hold interesting china or pottery.

A Systematic Housekeeper.

Emily is one of those women who do everything off the shoulder and manage to keep fresh as a daisy at the same time. She has four children, is president of the woman's society at the church, keeps up her piano practice and makes a good many of her own clothes. And her house always shines—as is often the case with the busiest of women. "But I'm no plaster saint," insisted Emily when we asked her for formula. "I just organize things—I get that from secretarial experience before I married. I'm firm about having the children help for their sakes as well as mine. And I have a blackboard in the back hall where I leave assignments and directions and where they keep a program of their day's activities—with four, it would be a job to keep track otherwise. But I don't ask anything of my husband around the house—all his tinkering are his own hobbies. "As for the kitchen I have that down to a grand system with a pencil and paper as my maid-chef-

Have everything in reach.

butler. I mean I write everything down as I think of it and make my plans in writing. Then I'm not always forgetting things. "I'm a stickler for marketing just once a week for staples, and I keep lots of dried and canned goods on hand—with midweek shopping for fresh things only.

"I have quite a system for preparing meat. I cook up a lot of things at once—lamb for stew, soup stock, ham all boiled and ready to bake—and put them in covered containers in the refrigerator, all ready for the final last minute preparation. Sometimes I even boil up chicken ahead and put it away to combine with noodles or dumplings just before serving.

"There, now you see I'm not so smart. I just like to do certain things I couldn't do if I didn't get the basic jobs done efficiently. Because I think a woman's first duty is her home and family, and I don't feel free to assume outside responsibility until I've seen to it that the house and the children are started merrily on their way. When I can do that first, I think I'm worth more to them for keeping active in other fields, too.

OUR INLAND 'SEACOAST'

Roosevelt's Canadian Speech Revives Hope for St. Lawrence Waterway, International Problem for 20 Years

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

Franklin Roosevelt's mind wandered away from his neatly typed manuscript. Out front stood several thousand people come to hear him dedicate the Thousand Islands bridge near Ivy Lea, Ontario. Beside him sat Canadian Prime Minister Mackenzie King. But the President of the United States thought only of water. Finally he spoke of it:

"I look forward to the day when a Canadian Prime Minister and an American President can meet to dedicate, not a bridge across this water, but the very water itself, to the lasting and productive use of their respective peoples."

Franklin Roosevelt was thinking about the St. Lawrence waterway system, a dream he has cherished since he was governor of New York, a dream that marked his first defeat in the United States senate back in 1934. That was the year Herbert Hoover's ambitious waterway treaty came up for ratification with Mr. Roosevelt's blessing, only to land in the legislative graveyard.

But last May 31, Secretary of State Cordell Hull submitted to Canada the draft for a new treaty. And several weeks ago President Roosevelt made the above remarks at Thousand Islands. So once more the St. Lawrence waterway commands North America's attention; once more two internationally minded nations wonder if the $350,000,000 project will ever be built.

An Inland "Seacoast."

The dream is an alluring one. It envisions a new seacoast for the United States, 3,570 miles long and reaching into the heart of the country. It would encompass 20,000-ton ocean-going vessels plying their way from Europe to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, thence up the river and down through the lakes to Chicago or Duluth. It would include an abundance of cheap power, principally for New York state.

At Massena, N. Y., which state department officials believe would become a new Chicago or Detroit once the waterway is completed, conservative residents are not too optimistic.

"It's bound to come," they say, "but we won't live to see it."

Objections to the plan go back pretty far, back to the days when railroads first found themselves competing with lake boats. Of late more objections have developed, but to appreciate this situation you must know its history.

Canadians Built Early Canals.

Just as Americans view the Mississippi as the Father of Waters, so do Canadians call the St. Lawrence the Mother of Waters. One hundred years before Boston was settled, valiant Cartier reached the site of Montreal. And before the American Revolution, canal-minded Canadians began digging their way around the rapids between Montreal and Lake Ontario, and the equally dangerous rapids of the Sault Sainte Marie. Canada's canal building has gone on ever since, most recent being the Welland canal to carry lake boats around Niagara falls.

Today the chief remaining job is a system of dams to quiet those rapids between Montreal and Lake Ontario.

It was in 1919 that the senate first requested an international committee to investigate the rapids. Immediately came support from the West, Midwest and South, stacked against opposition from New York and New England. Up sprang the St. Lawrence Tidewater association, sponsored by active membership in 22 midwestern states and supported by the powerful Farm Bureau federation. By 1928 the Republican party made the waterway plan its major farm relief plank, promising reductions of from 8 to 10 cents a bushel in grain exports.

America's impetuosity was not thaxed by slow-moving Canadians. The United States commission urged immediate development to capitalize on the 5,000,000 potential horsepower which it discovered along the St. Lawrence. In less need of power, and fearing that her government-operated railroads would suffer at the hands of this new transportation competitor, Canada preferred to wait. Eastern objection grew, too, in the fear that commercial life would be ruined.

Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario, the waterway's biggest foe, who refuses to consider it until Canada's railroad problem is solved.

"Greatest Internal Improvement."

But by the end of his term, Herbert Hoover had drafted and won Canadian acceptance of a waterway treaty. He hailed the project as the "greatest internal improvement yet undertaken on the North American continent." Canadian officials had good reason to sign it enthusiastically; the Hoover plan gave Canadian labor and materials much more than a proportionate share.

This helped win the senate's disfavor, however, as did another stipulation in the treaty forbidding Chicago from diverting Lake Michigan's waters. Almost overnight had arisen a rival plan to deepen the Mississippi for a Lakes-to-Gulf waterway, requiring water from Lake Michigan. Both Illinois senators voted against the treaty, which failed by a scant dozen votes.

For the past year and a half President Roosevelt has worked actively to revive it, climaxing these efforts with the new proposal drafted last spring by Secretary Hull. In fairness to Herbert Hoover, it must be admitted that his plan was no more considerate of Canada than the Roosevelt idea, which would allow our northern neighbor to delay another 11 years in starting her part of the construction. Canada would also be given credit for the $128,000,000 she has just spent on the Welland canal, in her half of the $350, 000,000 program. This latter concession is most certainly justified.

Canals to Be Dredged.

One part of the job, consists principally of deepening channels. To carry a 27-foot ship from Duluth to the sea, Canada would deepen her locks at Sault Sainte Marie and increase the depth of locks in the Welland project. The United States would deepen the channel of the Detroit and St. Clair rivers between Lakes Huron and Erie.

But the biggest job would be in the 183-mile stretch from Montreal to Lake Ontario, where those rapids are located. Here, four great dams would be built to deepen the waters and generate power. Ships would run around the dams. An estimated 2,200,000 horsepower would be developed, half going to New York, the other half to Ontario. Therefore these commonwealths would pay a large part of the bill, New York being assessed $93,728,750 against $102,728,250 for the United States government.

A large portion of Canada's expenditures would be channeled against Ontario, but the treaty has been arranged so that these outlays need not start until 1949. Nevertheless, it is from Ontario's Premier Mitchell Hepburn that major objections to the waterway plan are coming. Three years ago he announced that his province would not abide by the Hoover treaty, which automatically died in the United States senate.

Hepburn Fears for Railroads. Premier Hepburn's objections are valid enough. He refuses to take action on the waterway until Canada's railroads are in better shape. President Roosevelt's answer to this same problem is that improved communications have always worked to the benefit of all sections.

Looking beyond the practical purposes of lake navigation and power development, far-sighted idealists regard the project as but another step in welding North America into a continent of unified social and economic ambition. But the expenditure of $550,000,000 is no task for idealists.

Prime Minister King has promised to give the proposed treaty "careful study." Premier Hepburn shows no signs of weakening. Meanwhile, hard-pressed American railroads will not stand idle when their already dubious future is jeopardized. It's beginning to look like the folks in Massena, N. Y., were right. The St. Lawrence waterway is coming, but maybe we won't live to see it!

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Enumerates the Nutritious Values of the BANANA

Explains How Our Most Satisfying Food Fruit Helps to Maintain Health at All Ages.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City

BEFORE the discovery of the vitamins and before we knew so much regarding the body's mineral requirements, interest in food was centered around proteins, carbohydrates and fats. Fruits which in general supply little protein and fat, and widely varying amounts of carbohydrates, received scant consideration as a source of essential nutrients.

But with our steadily increasing knowledge of vitamins and of the importance to the body of a long list of essential mineral elements; fruits have assumed a commanding place in nutrition. And those who follow the primary rule of a well balanced diet and serve fruit twice daily have been rewarded with increased health and vigor.

In addition to their minerals and vitamins, fruits are valued because of their bulk or cellulose which helps to insure regular health habits.

The Most Economical Fruit

Many homemakers consider that fruits as a class are among the more expensive items included in the food budget.

But that statement is far too general and indicates a lack of information concerning the comparative nutritive values of the different kinds of fruit. For example, it has been said of the delicious and economical banana, that it gives more nutritive as well as money value than almost any other food.

Fruits, in general, are frequently divided into two classes; they are known as flavor fruits when they contain 60 per cent or more of water and an acid taste when the water content is less than 60 per cent. Bananas are a food fruit of the first order!

Ripe bananas are rich in carbohydrates and furnish the body with splendid energy values, with a minimum tax on the digestive system.

Double Fuel Value

When fully ripened, this fruit provides quick energy because a certain amount of its sugars are almost immediately absorbed by the body. On the other hand, several hours must elapse before the remaining sugars are completely assimilated. Thus, eating bananas provides a continuous supply of energy for a considerable period. They not only help to promote rapid recovery from fatigue but also furnish a continuing supply of energy which keeps one from becoming hungry again too soon after a meal.

The edible portion of one average-sized banana weighs about 3 1/2 ounces and provides 100 calories. It takes almost the same weight of white potato to yield the same number of calories.

Bananas a Protective Food

Bananas take an important position among the protective foods, because they are a good source of four vitamins, A, B, C and G, and contain a total of 11 minerals. They leave an alkaline-ash following digestion.

Fully ripened bananas are easily digested and are mildly laxative.

Valuable in Child's Diet

Bananas deserve a prominent place in the child's diet from infancy to maturity. Some baby specialists prescribe mashed and strained ripe bananas as one of the first solid foods to be introduced in the infant's diet. The ripe banana is considered to be especially valuable at the time when sugar is withdrawn from the formula and the baby is given whole milk for the first time. The calories in the bananas take the place of the calories previously received from the sugar; and thus weight gains are steadily maintained.

Help Children Gain Weight

Because of their high caloric value, plus their content of minerals and vitamins, bananas may well be used regularly throughout childhood.

Bananas and milk make an excellent food combination because the milk supplements the fruit with protein, fat, minerals and vitamins. This combination is often used as a supplementary lunch for underweight children, and carefully conducted studies have indicated its usefulness in helping youngsters to gain weight.

Almost all children like the taste of bananas and they do not seem to tire of this bland and pleasing fruit. And though the banana is regarded as a solid food, it can, if desired, be mashed and whipped into liquid form and combined with milk to make a healthful and nourishing beverage.

Ideal for the Elderly

If elderly individuals are to maintain top health, fruits should be given a prominent place in their diet. But many fruits are avoided by individuals past middle age, either because their acid taste is displeasing or because they present difficulties in mastication. Ripe bananas, however, practically melt in the mouth. Being easily digested, they are a fortunate choice for elderly persons, providing necessary energy

OVERWEIGHT. Spoils Your Looks Impairs Efficiency

... And it may seriously affect your health. If you are over 30, and weigh more than the normal weight for your height at the age of 30, the chances are that you would benefit greatly by a rational program of weight reduction.

You are invited to write to C. Houston Goudiss for his scientific Reducing Bulletin, which outlines the safe, certain and comfortable method of weight reduction by counting calories. It includes balanced reducing menus and a chart showing the caloric value of all the commonly used foods.

With it, you can easily compute the caloric value of every meal you eat.

Just write to: C. Houston Goudiss, 6 East 39th St., New York City—a post card will do—and ask for the Reducing Bulletin.

values with a minimum of digestive effort.

Bananas are always in season and are usually most inexpensive. It is desirable, of course, that only fully ripened bananas be eaten raw. That is because their constituents vary with the degree of ripeness.

Bananas are picked when they are green and hard, and the carbohydrate content is almost entirely starch. As they ripen, the starch is converted into easily digested sugars.

In fully ripened bananas—those in which brown flecks appear on the yellow skins—the starch has almost entirely disappeared and the flavor has been developed to its highest point. The all-yellow banana is also ripe enough for eating and it is likewise firm enough for cooking. Partially ripe bananas—those which are yellow with a green tip—may be cooked and served as a vegetable or as dessert.

Considering their availability, ease of digestion, high food value and economy, bananas deserve to be classed as one of the staple foods in every well planned dietary.

Questions Answered

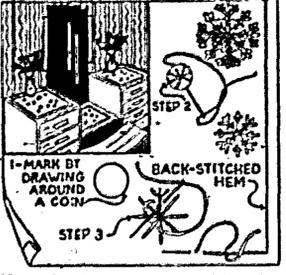

Mrs. G. R. McK.—When peas and beans cause discomfort, owing to their tendency to form gas, they can frequently be eaten without distress in pureed form.

Miss M. L. A.—Both sweet and white potatoes contain vitamins A, B and C; but sweet potatoes are a much better source of vitamin A than white potatoes.

HOW to SEW RUTH WYETH SPEARS

A LETTER comes telling the story of a clever girl designed for her dressing table. The problem was to make them to fit spaces of unusual size. Her room color scheme was blue and white and a design of white embroidered snow crystals on cool blue linen was what she wanted.

Here is the way she achieved a charming result.

The linen was cut the desired size and narrow hems creased with a warm iron. The hems were then backstitched in white from the right side with three strands of six-strand mercerized embroidery cotton. She wanted the arrangement of the snow crystals to be better-keller—just as they would fall; so she took a handful of coins and tossed them onto the linen. There was a 50-cent piece; a quarter; some dimes, nickels and pennies. After several tosses she drew around each coin where it fell.

Still using three strands of the white cotton she took four stitches across the marked circle and then brought the needle out in the center, as shown here in step 2, ready to take a tiny stitch to bind the long stitches together. The crystals were embroidered over the long stitches, the larger ones being more elaborate than the smaller as illustrated here. The stitch used is shown in step 3. Ninety other embroidery stitches are pictured in my Sewing Book No. 2. Also dozens of things you can make in your spare time to use or to sell. Hard to Spend

If Pontius Pilate had 1,000,000,000 coins of any denomination on the morning of that tragic trial about 1,900 years ago, and also the necessary longevity, he might have started spending one coin per minute, kept it up continuously, day and night, and only relatively recently tossed away his last coin. Nineteen hundred years contain approximately 693,500 days. And that many days contain 16,844,000 hours or 998,640,000 minutes. So if Pilate had started flinging away his monetary substance back there on the morning of the famous trial of Jesus, and could have kept it at without interruption, Pilate would have been eligible to relief along about 1910.—Fort Wayne News-Sentinel.

The Livestock Situation

By J. A. McNaughton
 Los Angeles Union Stock Yards, Sept. 7. Exhibitors and visitors at the Great Western Livestock Show at Los Angeles will be glad to know that there is reasonable assurance of a pavilion being built for this show and other exhibits along agricultural and industrial lines. At a recent meeting of the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, a budget was approved that contained $125,000 to be used in buying the land for such a building. After its purchase, this land is to be conveyed to the State as a site for the stock show building.

Funds from the state's share of racing money added to P. W. A. and W. P. A. assistance are expected to take care of the costs of construction. When completed the building will be under the jurisdiction of the 48th District Agricultural Association of the State of California. Premium money will be available, as it has been in the past, from the 48th District's share of State pari-mutuel money.

The building will be located near the stock yards, so that it will have the benefit of stock yards facilities, but the stock yards will have no proprietary interest in it. The seating capacity will be about 10,000 so that large gatherings of stockmen, agriculturalists can be accommodated.

The building will provide headquarters for annual convention and other meetings of 4-H and FFA members of California and the 11 western states. 4-H and FFA members total 15,000 in California alone, while the aggregate for the 11 western states is estimated at 100,000.

Dairy shows, horse shows, rodeos, and industrial exhibits can be held in this building. In all probability, a dairy cattle and horse department will become a regular part of the Great Western Livestock show. Dairying is of particular importance in the west and especially in Southern California. Los Angeles county is the largest milkshed in the United States, containing more than 90,000 dairy cows of milking age. Exhibits of dairy cattle and dairy products will bring about more scientific dairy practices.

Realization of the fact that livestock and dairying form the most important industry in the west brings out the necessity of such a building. The Great Western Livestock Show will be able to expand as it should, and by encouraging the use of better livestock, will add to the income of the west.

Conditions of Western States
C. P. Simpson, general sales manager for Pontiac Motors, has just made his annual harvest-time swing through the great Agricultural West in the bumper crop and livestock conditions that bid fair to reach record-breaking proportions, he sees one of the chief reasons back of the recent upturn in the stock market and the improvement of business in general, and looks to a continued upswing for a prolonged period.
"It is my opinion," says Mr. Simpson, "that a trip through the vast farm belt of the Mississippi and Missouri river valleys during June or July always furnishes any close observer with the best basis for an accurate forecast of business conditions for several months to come."
"An economic fact that never has been successfully refuted," he continued, "is that all wealth comes out of the ground. Records of this country show definitely that big crops are always followed by good business, and the history of the world will prove that where there have been no crops there has been chaos."
"Crop reports forecast a yield the country over this year that will far exceed the ten-year average of 1927 to 1936, and may be perhaps the second greatest year in the history of the nation, crop-wise."
"James J. McMahon, of the Corn Belt Dailies, points out that 'the only exception is cotton.'"
"The big crop outlook has been front page news for weeks and I believe that the sudden and unexpected upward trend in business was due to the certainty of record crops, fine pastures and higher livestock prices. All the stock market needed was a change of attitude, and without a good crop and livestock outlook, there would not have been a real foundation on which the advance could stand."
"The record books for generations back tell the story of the healing effect of The Good Earth on depressions of the metal and psychological kind thru which we have been going. Corn belt dailies believe that 'the good earth, along with beneficial rains and sufficient sunlight, was the real cause of the improvement in business all along the line.'

"The present crop situation which has made page one news together with the mental attitude of the farmers and small town people living in the vicinity of the crops, as well as the fact that millions of people either through train or automobile windows have noticed the improvement in pastures and crops, have had a

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—Policemen seem to have more social security than almost anybody else, if they behave themselves, and yet about 70 of them have committed suicide in New York in the last few years. Just why "a policeman's life is not a happy one" was not made clear by Gilbert and Sullivan, but members of the New York force are out to find out and do something about it.

Their new and unique "trouble clinic" has been investigating and prescribing. It lists eight reasons why policemen get in distress, and the list includes just eight brands of money trouble. The news today is that the department clinic has official sanction and is opening headquarters in the old World building.

Patrolman Joseph J. Burkard of the traffic squad, an energetic, resourceful self-starter, in the department 20 years, pioneers the new clinic, with the aid of a young patrolman who is a student of psychology at Columbia university.

They brought in Dr. Menas S. Gregory, famous psychiatrist, and Dr. Carmyn J. Lombardo, also widely known as a specialist in mental disturbance. The clinic already has handled 150 cases, some of them of extremely serious nature.

The clinic was established under the Patrolmen's Benevolent association, of which Mr. Burkard was elected president last year. It is said to have been his original idea, suggested by similar work by the American Legion, of which Mr. Burkard is a former New York county commander.

He has been a genial mixer in the department for many years, vice president of the glee club and long active in the affairs of the P. B. A.

A friend of this writer, gathering material for a book on New York, quoted to a young police lieutenant Inspector Williams' remark that "There is more law on the end of a policeman's night-stick than there is in a decision of the Supreme court."

"That's bunk, and it always was," said the lieutenant. "College men are joining both the police and fire departments. J. Edgar Hoover, and others, are helping to bring about a new conception of a policeman. The 'fat-foot' era is ending."

And then, said my friend, the lieutenant disclosed that he was a college graduate and engaged in an informal discussion of psychiatric training and methods in connection with police work. Would the cops have made their own psychological clinic in Inspector Williams' day?

THE late Texas Guinan gave George Raft a pair of gold-plated garters. They brought him luck and he still wears them. The sleek, slow-eyed young Italian, alumnus of New York's Hell's Kitchen, has taken success in his easy dancing stride—ho's an ex-hooper—but, like other moving picture stars, he's beginning to look a gift-horse in the mouth.

He doesn't like his role in Paramount's "St. Louis Blues," and the company suspends him. It is one more instance of increasing esthetic sensitivity in movieland.

In and around Hell's Kitchen, he was a professional light-weight boxer, winning 25 fights, kayeed seven times. He was an outsider for the Springfield (Mass.) minor league team for two seasons. He did well enough, but it was a sideline of impromptu boxing and spoofing which paved him into the night clubs and the big Broadway shows.

He achieved a sinister, reptilian suggestion in his dancing which made him known fraternally up and down Broadway as "The Old Black-smoke."

He was just looking on at the Brown Derby in Hollywood when a prowling director seized him as a "type" and ruthlessly sloughed him into fame and fortune. His 1937 earnings report was $202,696, topped only by Cooper and Baxter, among the male stars. He owns 43 suits of clothes and a piece of Henry Armstrong.

Light-Colored Paints
Good light-colored outside paints contain white lead, often mixed with smaller quantities of other pigments. Colored pigments are added to the white to produce tinted paints, or used without the white to produce dark paints. It is generally recognized that the dark paints give better service under the same weather and exposure conditions.

Hand-Knits Combine Style, Service for Campus Wear

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

STURDY and protective from the elements were things knitted in "long, long ago" pioneer days, but they lacked the esthetic. But modern knits are as if knitting in this day and generation had become a magic art whereby designers have dramatized the theme to a point of high styling such as our faithful ever-knitting great-great-ancestresses no'er dreamed could be.

Back to college in a knit bolero frock such as the stunning model to the right in the group illustrated will cause one's sorority sisters to voice a chorus of oh's and ah's of admiration. It's worth the experiment, just see if it isn't! A bumpy crochot cotton lends itself beautifully to this knit design because of its resiliency and smart rough surface effect. Boleros come in so "handy" and you can wear this one separately with other frocks if you wish. You'll like the flattery of the figure-molding dress that, together with the bolero, forms as stylish a costume as ever might be.

With fringes all the rage this year you will be right on your toes come autumn if you wear a trim sports outfit as shown centered in the trio. It is knit of a nubby crochot cotton and what endless wear one does get out of these cotton crochets! Wash them and wash them and it never fades their good looks. Then, too, being handknit, they have style and distinction. It is not only that the fringe that finishes the edges is definitely fashion correct but it gives opportunities for interesting color combinations. The jacket fits snug around the waistline to give a neat line, which is a highly important styling item—that of the fitted-defined waistline.

Wouldn't any school girl, business woman, debutante, clubwoman—wouldn't any member of the fair sex that goes motoring, or treks about town love a handknit coat as here pictured? It surely is an inspiration to start knitting needles clicking. It is knit of a nubby crochot cotton in a striking plaid patterning with immense patch pockets of the darker color. They will tell you at any fancywork department where you get the yarn as to effective color combinations. You can make this colorful coat up very quickly if you get at it with a will. Grand to wear to the early autumn games!

Here are a few general items in regard to latest knitting trends. The tendency this season is to knit entire suits or ensembles, the exquisite simplicity of which achieves a smart tailored look. Interesting skirts are ribbed around to simulate pleats. Wear gold jewelry with your new black knit frock. Sweater jackets are "dolled up" with silver buttons of hand-wrought type. Knit-combined with woven fabric is very popular, as for instance a cloth jacket with knitted sleeves. Plaid skirt with bright sweater is popular schoolgirl formula.

Sweater and Skirt

Little fashion-correct "Missy" in this picture is dressed in her new sweater and skirt outfit ready to answer first-day-of-school roll call. It's the smart vogue this season for little girls to companion a suspender skirt of handsome wool with a sweater of exact color match. In this instance the skirt of fine Arlington wool comes in interesting colors of Scandinavian influence such as Viking-copper and Peer Gynt blue, also navy, green and brown has a novel suspender fashioning that widens as it buttons to the skirt belt.

Muffs Match Hats In Latest Trend

Muffs that match hats are among the latest fads to tempt women seeking the unusual in costume accents. Many different decorative fabrics such as matelasse crepe, embroidered wool and velvets are being used for these as are the numerous fur fabrics. The hats are of the turban type, always high and often draped. The muffs are variously shaped, depending upon the fabric. Fur materials, for example, are cut very simple, while the decorative materials are draped, twisted and bow-trimmed.

Don't Be Deceived By New 'Doll Hats'

It's a fact that doll hats are gay deceivers. They look so impossible off the head you think you can't possibly wear them. But you can! And to your amazement you will find them actually becoming. Step in to your favorite milliner's, try on a few, and you will find they are irresistible.

Just now the shops are displaying little black velvet types that pose over one eye with a head strap at the back which holds them firmly into place.

Veil Tied Over the Face
That is the way smart Paris women are wearing their veils—tied over the face. They are wearing veils to a far greater extent abroad than we in America are doing.

Huge Jeweled Pendants
The latest is to suspend a handsome antique-looking pendant from a thin necklace. Earrings are very much in evidence, too, and they also favor the pendant motif.

Jet Embroidery
See the hat and bolero "sets" of black velvet that are embroidered in jet. Newest thing out!

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

It was during the evening rush hour. The Coney Island train that pulled out of the Times Square station of the B. M. T. was so crowded there was hardly breathing space. Among the swaying standers was a woman well past middle age whose face held many fatigue lines. Most of the passengers didn't see her—they had become too thoroughly immersed in newspapers to take any notice. However, one man did see her. Sixty years old at least, about him were unmistakable evidences of hard labor, from calloused hands to plaster dust on his heavy shoes. On his lap was a battered tin lunch box. He was tired. That was apparent. But as soon as he noticed the older woman, he arose, raised his hat and offered her his seat. She didn't get it. Before she could sit down, a pert young girl, red fingernails, permanent, lips like a tomato and unchanging blush, slipped into it with a smirk of satisfaction. And so she sat, complacently polishing her nails, until almost the end of the line, while the man and woman clung to straps side by side.

"The incident didn't cause any indignation. Even the woman cheated out of a seat and the man who had surrendered his apparently didn't resent the impertinence of the young miss. The reason was simple. The occurrence was entirely too common to attract any attention. The general attitude in New York's subways is, "I paid my nickel and I'm entitled to a seat if I can get it." It doesn't make any difference who stands. The only exception seems to be women carrying babies. Usually some one will give up a seat to a mother burdened with an infant. But observation has shown that most often the one who gets up is not a man but another woman. That also holds true in cases of women weakened by age or sudden illness. For some reason or other, New York men seem permanently attached to subway seats.

When I first came here from the Middle West, the sight of women standing while men sat comfortably got under my collar. So I was always bouncing up. Then I learned that such consideration was not always appreciated. In fact, often it was looked upon with suspicion. An attempt to flirt. So now I've adopted a rule. A young and pretty miss can stand. But if the stander is old, ill or extremely tired, then I stand. Sometimes I'm thanked. More often I'm not. But thanks or not, I don't have any arguments with myself.

Speaking of subway seats, there was that neat scheme worked out by husband and wife whereby they each sat. If a seat were available, he'd rush in ahead, push his wife out of the way and grab it. Generally some indignant male passenger would bounce up that the wife might sit down. The husband missed glares by burying his snout in a newspaper. One day a big man, evidently from out of town, got up. But he didn't stop with giving the wife his seat. He yanked the husband up and, giving him the bum's rush, tossed him out onto the platform just as the car doors closed.

Despite the fact that I'm no lightweight and am fully crowd trained, there is one place I avoid during the rush hour whenever possible. That's the Times Square shuttle. Both at Grand Central and Times Square there are mob scenes that result in trampling, torn clothing, fist fights, and sometimes injuries. The trains are spaced just about a minute apart but apparently these 60 seconds mean more than mayhem, fights or sense of decency. That holds true to such an extent that, to me, a football scrimmage seems like child's play in comparison.

Town Boasts Politest Children; Here's Reason

MASHPEE, MASS.—Some of the politest children in the United States live in this town.

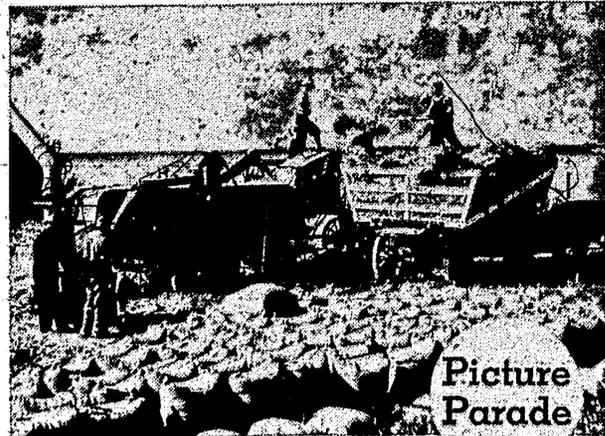

A bequest in the will of the late Samuel G. Davis may have something to do with it. The will stipulates that 25 Mashpee grammar school pupils every year receive $10 and $5 awards and gold medals in recognition of the most consistent showing of "kindness and good manners" during the school year.

Wary Gunshoe Foils 'Em With Safety Pin

PEORIA, ILL.—City Detective William Kunst, an expert in spotting pickpockets, believes in taking no chances. He wears a big safety pin on his wallet pocket as a guard against raids of the "soft-fingered gentry."

During recent years Kunst has acquired national and international attention as a detector of pickpockets. Many city police forces have borrowed him on occasions of local expositions or celebrations to watch for pickpockets. He was once assigned to a Canadian city where an exposition was in progress.

One Nation Indivisible

WHEREAS young America consumed more than it produced, the America of 1938 approaches self-sufficiency as the farm buys from the city, the city from the farm. Each is dependent on the other. When farmers above harvested a bumper crop near Devers, Texas, the implied surplus threatened wages of Detroit automobile workers at right. And this year, new surpluses brought further complications. The cotton surplus alone was 13,000,000 bales. Apple growers had a surplus of 51,000,000-bushels at the start of the year. Milk production was higher in the early part of the year than in any corresponding period in the last seven years and granaries and warehouses bulged with lavish nature's excess production.

Here is an illustration of this 'indivisibility.' Farmers above deliver cattle and crops to great cities for distribution throughout the nation. And from cities, farm machinery (below) and automobiles flow in steady streams to the farms. Wages of industrial workers must be paid from the sale of their products. And the farm is a major market for products manufactured in the factories of our major cities.

To enable them to buy factory goods, farmers are co-operating with experts in finding new uses for crops, and putting chain stores to work buying surpluses and selling farm products to city workers.

SYNOPSIS

Barbara Sentry, seeking to sober up her escort, Johnnie Boyd, on the way home from a party, slaps him, and attracts the attention of a policeman, whom the boy knocks down. As he arrests him, Professor Brace of Furness comes to the rescue and drives Barbara home. On the way they see Barbara's father driving from the direction of his office at 12:45, but when he gets home he tells his wife it is 11:15 and that he's been playing bridge at the club. Next morning, while Barbara is telling her mother about her adventure, an urgent phone call comes from Mr. Sentry's office after his departure. Arriving home in the late afternoon, Sentry reports his office has been robbed and a Miss Wines, former temporary employee, killed.

"Not much here!" Mr. Sentry said and then: "The police think she was one of the robbers. They're looking for a young Italian who has been paying her some attention; a wild youngster whose father is one of our customers. They found a key in her pocketbook that fits the lock on the back door." He spoke to Ray again. "There are back stairs," he said. "Mr. Loran and I use them on Sundays or when the place isn't open for business. This back door admits to the stairs and our offices. She had this key."

Mrs. Sentry realized that Arthur somehow found comfort in thus detailing the day's events; and she felt a dry scorn at Neil Ray's obvious desire to escape. "Afraid of being compromised," she thought; and she thought defiantly that a good many people would be maliciously pleased because the old firm of Sentry and Loran was thus involved in sudden sensational publicity.

Ray had nodded uneasily, and Mr. Sentry went on: "She must have remembered the combination of the safe. It's just an old iron box, bought in my father's time. We never had enough cash on hand to need a real one; and a safe-cracker could have opened this easily enough. But it was opened last night by someone who knew the combination. She probably learned it last summer when she worked for us."

He hesitated, added then, "The police seem to think she let this fellow in, opened the door for him, and opened the safe, and then for some reason they quarreled and he shot her."

Mary said: "It sounds like the sort of ruthless, reasonless things a cocaine addict might do. Don't you think so, Neil?"

Ray did not answer. Mrs. Sentry said, "Don't be so medical, Mary!" She thought: Mary is playing a part! Pretending! I wonder why. And she added: "The office telephoned, Arthur, just after you left this morning. I suppose it was about this?"

"Yes," he assented. "Miss Randall found her, when she got there at eight o'clock."

Mrs. Sentry wondered, shivering in spite of herself, whether any of the women at the Furness luncheon had known; wondered whether they had been watching her to see how she took it.

"It must have been just a few minutes past when they phoned," she said. "Didn't anyone hear the shot?"

Mr. Sentry shook his head. "No. Or at least they haven't found anyone yet—who did," he amended. "You see, she was in the hall on the third floor. The hall has no windows, and there's a brick wall between it and the next building, and if the office doors happened to be closed—" He added, "And of course there aren't many people around on the streets down there till early morning."

Mary said: "The poor girl! I hope they get the man. Father, did she have any family?"

"Not in Boston. She came from Dennis; but she'd been living in a room out in Somerville, in a private home, where the husband was out of a job so they had to take in boarders. She'd had work at odd times, a day here, a week there, filling in; but no steady job. The police say she'd been running around with this young Italian; and he was missing today. His father claims he's up in Maine buying cider apples, but they haven't located him. And—apparently there were other men with whom she was intimate, too."

He shook his head, poured another cocktail, said, as though thinking aloud: "I suppose she was hard up, and desperate. If we'd had any idea, we might have made a place for her, given her something to do. That's the tragic thing about living in a city. Terrible things happen all around you, perhaps even to people you know; and till they happen, you never even suspect. People are all actors, aren't they? They wear a mask, put up a good front, pretend that everything is all right—till suddenly everything is all wrong!"

"No need to make speeches, Arthur!" Mrs. Sentry commented drily.

"It has disturbed me a lot," he confessed.

Mrs. Sentry said: "Nonsense! It doesn't concern us! It happened in your office, of course; but it might as well have happened anywhere. It doesn't concern us at all!" She was speaking more to herself than to him. "We know no more about it than anyone else," she declared, shaping for herself the attitude she would present like an armor to their friends.

He nodded, said no more. Doctor Ray moved toward Mrs. Sentry to say good-by. But before he could speak there were voices in the hall, and Mrs. Sentry recognized Barbara's.

Then Barbara and Linda Dane appeared in the wide doorway. Barbara had an afternoon paper in her hand.

When the sempstress was done with her that morning, Barbara went home with Linda Dane for luncheon. These two and Phil Sentry—Mary, the older sister, had always held herself aloof from their cheerful exuberances—had since childhood been much together; and now that Phil was at Yale, Barbara and Linda were devoted. They went after lunch, in Linda's car, to a moving picture theater; and later they met Bill Cates and Rod Hepburn at the Ritz for tea. When they came out on Newbury Street afterward, screaming newspapers pushed extras in their faces. Barbara saw a headline:

"I Hope They Get the Man. Father, Did She Have a Family?"

PRETTY TYPIST SLAIN

One of the boys bawled: "Produce House Murder! Read all about it!" And Bill Cates looked at the paper which the boy held, and said softly, in a startled tone, "Hullo!" He bought a paper, folded it in his hand, said: "Barbara, Linda, come along. Let's get out of this."

They followed him toward Linda's car, and Barbara asked gaily, "What is it, Rod? Why the big mystery?"

But he did not laugh. He opened the paper again and looked at it, and they all looked over his shoulder; and Barbara as she read felt something inside her body contract into a crawling, shuddering knot. She thought she was choking, and her eyes ached; and Linda's hand was tight in sympathy and reassurance on her arm, and Bill said, "Gosh, that's rotten!"

Barbara when she spoke did not recognize her own voice. She said, "Give it to me, Bill." She took the paper, read the unbelievable lines again.

"Steady, Barb!" Linda whispered. "It's all right."

Barbara was husky. "I've got to go home, Linda. Mother will need me. She'll be wild. Can we, please?"

"Of course. Here's the car."

Bill and Rod helped them in. Bill said lamely: "Don't let it get you, Barb. Just the damned tabloids, making a sensation out of nothing!" Rod said, "Keep smiling, Barb."

"Of course," she told them. "Thanks for a lovely tea. See you soon." The car was moving. "Good-by!"

On the way home, Linda drove and watched the traffic, and Barbara read the story in the paper, reciting to Linda the essentials.

But she was cold with terror at her own thoughts. When she and Professor Brace emerged from the Tunnel last night, her father had passed them in his car, coming from the direction of the office. The dead girl had been found in the office this morning. Killed when? She could find in the paper no answer to that question, and her eyes blurred so that she could not read.

Linda said: "Don't worry, Barb. It just happened to happen there! It might have happened anywhere."

"Mother will be just sick!" Barbara whispered. "She's so proud, Linda! And she hates newspapers!"

"They'll forget all about it in a day or two."

"And father, too!" Barbara shivered uncontrollably. "Golly, Linda, I'm scared."

"Bless you, there's nothing to be afraid of!"

Barbara nodded. "Of course not! I'm not afraid. It's just—upsetting. I'll have to cheer them up at home. They'll be pretty low! Linda, come in with me when we get there. We'll have to put on an act, make them laugh somehow, make them see the funny side—"

"Steady, Barb! You're trembling!"

"I can't help it. And my teeth keep chattering!"

"You poor kid!"

"For Heaven's sake don't sympathize with me or I'll bawl! I've got to laugh or I'll scream, Linda. I am scared, I guess! Golly, I wish Phil was home."

"He'll come when he sees the papers. But Barb, it's nothing. A week from now everyone will have forgotten it. Of course it's pretty tough right now, though." And Linda urged: "Throw that paper away, Barb. Don't look at it any more."

Barbara began to cry without a sound, sitting bolt upright, her eyes exciting thing? We came out of the Ritz with Bill Cates and Rod Hepburn and there were two newsboys just screaming and pushing papers into our faces, and Rod saw your name in one of the headlines, father. So we bought the paper. I think it's perfectly exciting. Did you know her? Is she as pretty as her pictures? I love murders, they're so gruesome! Think of having one right in the family! Look!"

She opened the paper, read the headlines aloud: "Pretty typist slain. Police seek missing lover of dead girl. Robbery and murder—" Her mother said sharply: "Barbara! After all, it's not 'right in the family!'"

"You know what I mean, mother!" Barbara protested. "I mean we're—well, probably we'll all be witnesses at the trial. I know I'll be scared to death. I wonder if he's good-looking. Father, did you ever see him? This Italian?" She came to sit on the arm of his chair. "You don't need to pretend you're all so calm. I'll bet you're as excited as I am, really."

No one spoke for a moment. Then Neil Ray said uncomfortably, "I really must go."

He rose; and Linda cried as though relieved: "Heavens, it's after six o'clock! So must I!"

Mary went with Doctor Ray into the hall. Barbara looked beseechingly at Linda; but Linda shook her head, so Barbara and Linda followed the others. Mrs. Sentry and her husband were left alone.

He twisted the cocktail glass in his hand, looking at it fixedly, not meeting Mrs. Sentry's eyes. She heard the good-bys at the door; heard Mary and Barbara hesitate, and a whisper, and start upstairs. Then she heard Mary say in a low, indignant tone: "You're outrageous, Barbara! This isn't a joke!"

"I know," Barbara agreed, softly. "But you all looked so glum! I tried to put on an act, cheer you up—"

Their voices trailed away. Mrs. Sentry thought that was like Barbara, to seek to make a jest out of this. And in very poor taste, she decided. She said to her husband, "Arthur, we must just ignore this!" "I don't know why it should hit me so hard," he confessed. "But—she looked so little and pitiful, lying there. And of course there were police, and photographers, and reporters around all day. Gus is in New York, so it all fell on me. It wore me down."

"In New York? Mary's going there to dinner tonight."

"He went over yesterday. Didn't expect to be back till Sunday."

Oscar came to say that dinner was served, and Mrs. Sentry remembered that an afternoon paper was delivered to the kitchen, so the servants already knew; and everyone would know, either tonight or in the morning. All their friends...

She said quietly: "Will you call the girls, Oscar? They're upstairs!" He disappeared, and she asked her husband, "Are you ready, Arthur?"

"I'll wash my hands," he decided. She had not, since returning from hearing Sarah Glen, had time to do so, and she thought she and Arthur might go down to their summer home in York Harbor in the morning, and stay till this sensation died. But it would be better not to seem to run away...

Mary sat with them while they dined, waiting for Jimmy Endle to call for her. She proposed making excuses, staying at home; but Mrs. Sentry said: "Of course not, Mary! After all, this doesn't touch us! Certainly not any more than it does Mr. and Mrs. Loran, and they're giving the dinner."

Paul Bunyan's Ry. Station Discovered by Small Boy on His Visit to London

The sort of railway station that only Paul Bunyan could have built was described recently by a Bridgnorth small boy who visited London and wrote about it to his envious smaller brother at home, according to a Bridgnorth, England, correspondent in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Written in all seriousness, the letter, which came into the possession of C. N. Turner, of the Associated British and Irish railways, follows:

"The sight of Paddington station is really beyond description. The roof is practically invisible, being 2,500 feet above the platforms, airplanes circling beneath it all day. The roof is made of glass and requires 5,000 men to clean it once weekly in an airship.

"There are so many platforms that it is totally impossible to count them—the length of them is quite five miles. There are motor buses to take passengers from one end of a platform to the other; each bus holds 3,000 people.

"The trains are colossal; each train consists of 4,000 coaches and requires 20 engines to pull it. The trains are of the corridor type and are equipped with motorcycles to convey passengers to lavatories and dining saloons.

"Each engine is 50,000-horsepower and requires 50 men to stoke it. It is necessary to have motor lorries in each cabin to convey the coal from tender to firebox.

"There is a refreshment room at Paddington station which is seven times the length of Bridgnorth High street and four times as wide.

"The station master is as big as St. Leonard's church, Bridgnorth, the biggest man in the world. One cannot fail to hear him coming, as his boots are as big as the North Gate. He walks over the trains without any difficulty whatsoever."

Wild and Domestic Turkeys

It's not such a far cry from wild to domestic turkeys. Spanish conquerors found the first turkeys, closely related to the wild birds, in Mexico. They took turkeys back to Europe around 1530. In 90 years, by the time the Pilgrims came to America, turkeys were common in England. The birds were probably named for their cry of "turk, turk."

SEEDS...

California's eucalyptus trees grow from a handful of Australian seeds. Seeds of kindness will similarly enrich our personal lives.

By WINIFRED WILLARD

SIMPLE thing for him to send from Australia by slow-mailing ship to his wife at home in California. Just a handful of seeds! Small thing to bother with. Big thing to reckon with in the long run. For this handful of seeds gave America all the glory of our eucalyptus, lovely in its silvery-blue-green foliage. Its spicy fragrance always announces its presence. Nothing else smells like it!

By the standard of the dollar, eucalyptus leaves, sap, bark and fiber turn themselves into good American money in the course of every year, for medicines, tonics, preparations that many thousands of us use without knowing how we got them.

Any inventory of California's claims to pre-eminence—roses the year round, sun-kissed oranges, sun-made raisins—must reckon with the worth of the eucalyptus and with the two people, unpretentious and unassuming, who laid that wealth in California's lap—William Taylor, pioneer, preacher, practical man of affairs and his little home-making wife. She, too, looked into the future, seeing what these seeds could become of beauty and blessing. Then she did the practical things needed to make them grow. The seeds her husband sent her were worthless until she planted them!

Growth of a Friendship

Two travelers on happy holiday in Florida stopping to call on a friend. It was a carefree, glad day under the palm trees beside the lovely lake in Winter Park. They wrote about it to one whose name was often on their lips that day. Return mail brought a handful of seeds and introduction to other friends away from home and restless for companionship. These seeds started to sprout. Passing days cultivated them until a rare and lovely treasure of friendship grew that becomes more beautiful with the years.

The auditor of an important educational group was a regular traveler. Traveling grows monotonous but offers a chance generally to catch up on rest and to read a bit. This particular trip was long. The auditor was weary of figures and of balances that did not easily balance. She wanted to sleep away some of the hours on the train. Across the aisle was a little old lady, a stranger. She did not seem to have any promising seeds in her hands. She was nervous and restless, a bit fearful. She seemed eager for companionship. It developed that she carried a heavy personal load and greatly needed a human safety valve. Most of us do. So the seasoned traveler put away her desire to doze and gave herself up to listening while the little lady talked. It was not much to do but it cost its price.

Seeds must have time to grow. And there is never any way to know ahead which seeds will pay to plant, which will grow and make our gardens of life its loveliest. We have to take chances on them same as on everything else. These special seeds which the traveler sowed in a section of the sleeping car grew to friendship that abided until that wistful little body who wasn't quite accustomed to trains and traveling, slipped away across the Final River. Now tangibles are not the only values. Sometimes they are not valuable at all! But from the little lady to the traveler who wanted to doze and pass the time but who was willing instead to be friendly and helpful, there came a gorgeous diamond "because you were so good to me that day." Little thing, big thing, either view you take.

Adventure in Companionship

Queer things—seedst! Sometimes we don't recognize them. Take that luncheon at Washington's Mayflower hotel one spring Saturday. There were 300 guests. The First Lady was to tell us her ideal of women in politics. At my right was a friend. The seat at the left was vacant. No sign of a seed. Then a pleasant voice asked permission to sit beside me. There was the seed unseen before, already sprouting. The days and weeks that followed saw it grow through comfortable companionship and congenial fellowship, becoming a real adventure along the alluring lanes of friendship.

However sophisticated we are, however far we shy away from show of sentiment, it yet remains that every forest oak was once within the tiny compass of the acorn. That sounds old-fashioned but is as modern as today. Life continues to grow great results from seeds so small that often we fail to see or to believe how they can be important to our purposes. When our spirits are negative, we sometimes cast these seeds away, losing what might become very precious to us. Not every handful of seeds produces a glory of eucalyptus. Not every trath acquaintance pays the score with a gleaming diamond. That would put the whole business on too low a level. But every seed holds unpredictable possibilities.

Enjoy Making These Practical Designs

IF YOU like to look slimmer than you are, these designs are made especially for you! They are practical, pretty, easy to make,—the kind you'll use time and again, for they adapt themselves to every season of the year. Each is accompanied by a detailed sew chart, to guide beginners. If you've never done much sewing, start out with the apron, then make the dress, and you'll get a real thrill out of the way it looks.

Trim, Fitted Apron.

Just five steps in your detailed new chart,—and presto, your apron is finished! It fits so snugly and smoothly over the hips that it doesn't add a fraction of bulk. It protects your frock thoroughly, front, back, and up top. And it simply cannot slip off at the shoulders, when you have your hands in the dough! Percale, gingham, calico and batiste, plain colored or in pretty prints, are nice for this design. Trim it with braid or bias binding.

Slenderizing Afternoon Dress.

You'll find this one of the most becoming and comfortable dresses you ever had, and it's just as smart as it can be! It has the new kind of skirt, smooth-hipped and almost straight. Inside tucks on the shoulders give you the fullness you need over the bust. The v-neck, cut deep and rather narrow, is always flattering to large women. Make it up, for right now, with the short sleeves, in chiffon, georgette or soft silk crepe. Later, make it with the smart, long bishop sleeves, in thin wool or sheer velvet.

The Patterns.

1479 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 1½ yards of 35-inch material; 5 yards of braid or bias binding to trim.

1577 is designed for sizes 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 30 requires 4½ yards of 33-inch material, for short sleeves; 5½ yards for long sleeves; 1½ yards edging for neck and bow.

The Spirit Blooms

The world is not respectable; it is mortal, tormented, confused; deluded forever; but is shot through with beauty, with love, with glints of courage and laughter; and in these the spirit blooms timidly, and struggles to the light among the thorns.—George Santayana.

psychological effect on business and markets that is hard to measure. In my my opinion the bumper crop condition of the country, and not the other agencies that are flooding the country with billions of dollars is responsible for the changed mental attitude that has come over the country since June first.

"This same James J. McMahon, of the Corn Belt Dailies, in a letter to me back in May, predicted the present upturn in business and markets," said Pontiac's Sales Manager Simpson. "His advice was to put on overalls and follow the harvest hands, cotton pickers and fruit pickers for a real close-up of the farm of 1938.

"A pioneer and leading banker of the State of Wyoming for over 40 years, following a recent trip through Iowa and Nebraska, wrote the following: 'I never saw the West in finer condition. Abundant rains and sunshine are bringing back to Iowa, Nebraska, and Wyoming every appearance of their former prosperity.'

"Withort crops, livestock and animal products there would be no business to worry about," says Mr. Simpson. "There would be chaos. It isn't the value of the crop themselves that counts but what they pyramid up to by the time they reach the ultimate consumer.

"For instance, cotton and wool crops amounting to $712,000,000 amount to a staggering total of $6,000,000,000 when they are processed into clothing, tires, gun cotton, etc. The tobacco crop of $238,000,000 becomes over $1,000,000,000 as cigars, cigarettes and manufactured tobacco. Raw hides that are worth $112,000,000 are valued at $1,224,000,000 as boots, shoes and leather products. The food industry output alone is worth over $9,500,000,000 annually.

"So, as it looks today," concluded Mr. Simpson, "the products that are coming off the farms of the United States in record breaking quantities during the next four months are beginning their flow into the channels of trade, creating as they go new wealth, new hopes and new happiness for farmer, manufacturer, merchant, employer and employe alike through increasing volume of sales that is bound to follow.

"Again let me emphasize that big crops are always followed by good business."

BANKING LOOKS AHEAD

The Peak We Never Reach

There are always those who believe that human progress has reached its final peak. For example, in 1844 and again in 1886, "improvement must soon end"

Today those predictions seem naive. Great new industries have since been born--- air craft, automobiles, gasoline and radio to name a few. Billions in wealth and millions of jobs have been created.

The officers and directors of this bank believe that our country will go on to new and higher peaks. We stand ready to aid in the forward march of our community and nation.
