STAFF SGT. JAKE MONTOYA OF HOLLYWOOD IS MENTIONED IN THIS RELEASE

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY, ITALY His buddies in Italy recalled recently how Second Lieutenant Charles W. "Shoot 'em" Shea, The Bronx, New York, re-established communications at the height of a rough battle on the Fifth Army Front.

They told of a barren knoll that was being beaten by intense German fire and of a radio that had been left on the knoll. The radio was the only means of communication for the outfit, a rifle company of the 350th "Battle Mountain" Regiment, 88th "Blue Devil" Division. Shea, then a platoon sergeant, got the radio.

Now back in the United States, Shea wears America's highest decoration, the Medal of Honor, which he earned when he knocked out three German machinegun nests, killed three Germans and took seven prisoners. He also wears the emblem of a second lieutenant, having been given a battlefield commission.

Shea's comrades, still on the Italian front, told the story of the incident involving the radio this way: Shea's platoon leader took one squad around the right side of a hill. Shea led two squads around the base of the left side.

Shea's radio operator, Private First Class Francis McComber, Watertown, Connecticut, became separated from the others en route. He circled the hill halfway up the slope. As he crossed a bald black knoll, six bullets from a machine pistol hit him. Four struck him in the arm, and two others passed into his shoulder.

Although the exposed knoll was being raked by small arms, fire and automatic weapons and offered no cover, Shea started to rescue the wounded man. He was stopped by Staff Sergeant Jake Montoya, Hollywood, New Mexico, Shea's close friend, who was killed in later action, and Staff Sergeant Anthony Massarone, Millbrook, New York.

"Don't go up there," one of them advised him. "You'll be killed." While they were debating, the Germans counterattacked. There was no time to do the rescue work.

Staff Sergeant Forrest Turner, Stonefort, Illinois, saw several Germans close by. "I hit the ground," Turner reported. "I tossed a hand grenade at them. When they ducked, I got cover behind a little rise in the ground. I threw my other grenade and called back for Sergeant Gallaher to hand up more. He passed two up to me, and I threw those.

"By this time, the Jerries were pretty well spread out. I raked over the knoll enough to fire my Tommy gun. Firing a burst at a time, then lowered my head, I emptied four clips." "Turner killed six Jerries in this skirmish. During the action, he was hit in the left knee by a grenade fragment. He returned to an aid station, had the wound bandaged and was back in the fighting on the following morning.

Shea and Private First Class Thomas P. Hawkins, Richmond Hill, New York, were at this time under direct fire of a nearby enemy emplacement. Fire from this position also covered the spot where the radio man lay motionless. Shea saw Massarone and Montoya proceeding down the forward slope to rescue the wounded radio man. It was necessary for them to travel 50 yards under fire to reach the spot.

Hawkins and Shea stood upright in the face of the dug-in enemy to cover the advance of Montoya and Massarone. Shea sprayed fire from his tommy gun over the Jerries' heads to keep them from firing. Hawkins tossed in hand grenades.

McComber's rescue was effected. Toward evening eight Germans came from one emplacement and surrendered to Staff Sergeant Euford Gallaher, Nashville, Tennessee, the man who had backed up Turner in the grenade skirmish. At dusk, Shea crawled up to the radio. Enemy rifles and machineguns were being fired at him as he made his way to the valuable instrument, but he arrived there and carried the radio back safely.

Eye witnesses to Shea's rescue of the radio estimated it took him about 10 minutes to crawl the 50 yards to the knoll and return.

Shea's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Shea, Sr., reside at 1121 Woodcrest Avenue, The Bronx. McComber's wife, Helen, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. McComber, reside at 61 French Street, Watertown.

Sixty-one Hundred Dollars Lincoln County's Quota For Red Cross War Fund Drive

Carrizozo Raised More Than Half of Her Two Thousand Dollars First Day of Drive.

Every town, village, and hamlet in the United States is conscious of the tremendous task the Red Cross has undertaken during this war. Every newspaper, every radio station and every other medium of advertising has given freely to this cause at every call. Again the needs of this organization are being presented to the public.

The American Red Cross War Fund Drive is now in progress. It opened officially in Lincoln County this week. Mr. A. J. Rolland and Mayor F. A. English went out to contact the business houses of the town Tuesday afternoon and raised a thousand dollars in less than a day. The quota for Carrizozo is $2,000. Several committees of women are assisting with the drive in the residential section.

The quota for Lincoln County is sixty-one hundred dollars and an intensive effort is being made to raise the amount so that the county will not fall short of its part of the assignment. At the last drive Lincoln was one of few counties that failed to go "over the top." Of course no one wants this to happen again. So this time an all-out program has been planned which will terminate March 30th with a benefit dance and it is hoped that everybody will give the price of admission plus anything else they can

IWO JIMA

(Sulphur Island)

Iwo Jima (Sulphur Island) is about five miles long in a north-east-southwest direction; it is bare and marked by light-colored patches Suribachi Yama, a barren hill with flat top, 546 feet high, is an extinct volcanic crater. A low narrow neck of land connects this hill with the northern end of the island, which is of moderate height.

In the middle of the island, some bushes grow, but the northeastern part is rocky and barren, with cliffs and ledges offshore. Sulfur and sulphur fumes issue from this part of the island and there is an active submarine volcano off this shore. Dangerous reefs within the 100-fathom curve extend 2 miles and 1.5 miles from the eastern and western sides of the island, respectively, and there is high surf and breakers on the northeastern point.

The soil of the island is dry, and there is no water and few trees. Rain water is used for drinking. Three active volcanoes were observed on the island in 1910.

Best anchorage during easterly winds is off Hiraiwa Saki, about midway on the northwestern side of the island. When the wind is from other quarters, best anchorage is off the southeastern side of the island.

Take Care of Ration Books

The public was warned this week by the District OPA office to take better care of War Ration Books. Replacement of lost, stolen, or mutilated books will be more difficult in the future, it was announced.

Hereafter, persons reporting lost ration books will be asked to make a thorough explanation and search for them, before being issued new ones. Recently, OPA officials say, 19 of 23 persons who reported lost ration books found them.

Francis L. Horn, OPA Attorney, and H. L. Galles, Rationing Executive, say that duplication of books must be avoided. Usually, they say, the books are merely misplaced. Recently a woman customer at a bank left her OPA family ration books on the counter. The bank notified the OPA office. When the woman phoned the OPA seeking new books, she was informed that her old ones were at the bank.

New Mexico Cattle Growers Association
Special to Lincoln County News:
Albuquerque, N. M., March 14.—The legislative and resolutions committee meeting of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association, in joint session at Albuquerque, March 9, unalterably opposed the Vison Cattle Stabilization Order issued last month which establishes a ceiling price on live cattle and also recommended that the control of meat and meat prices be placed under one bureau of the government rather than two different agencies, E. G. Hayward, Cimarron, the president announced today.

New Mexico Cattle Growers Association

The association strenuously urged the Selective Service headquarters to defer all remaining ranch and farm labor within the state which is essential for the industry and which would qualify under provisions of the Tydings Amendment to the Selective Service Act. "Several draft boards in the State, at recommendation of Selective Service headquarters, have during the last month reclassified into 1-A all 2 c ranch labor, and such action is a breach of the Selective Service law as it now stands," Hayward said. Recommending that the Grazing Service annual appropriation be limited to its current expenses by Congress, the association also urged that no raise be made in the present Taylor Grazing fees for the duration as promised by the Grazing Service at the outset of the present national emergency.

Declaring that a reduction in cattle numbers of 23 per cent on New Mexico ranges for the period ended 1945 would be uneconomical for the state and drastic to the industry, the legislative committee opposed the cattle reduction program which was recently recommended by federal agencies. The legislative committee of the association considered some forty bills now pending before the 17th New Mexico state legislature, and which pertain to the livestock industry of the state. Of the 24 members of the state senate, nine are members of the association's legislative committee.

AN AMERICAN PLAN

The movement for non-profit prepayment plans for hospital and doctor bills, to use an old stock phrase, is growing by leaps and bounds.

Spearheaded by a growth of $482,069 members during 1944, Americans prepaying their hospital bills through non-profit, community sponsored Blue Cross plans, numbered 16,541,676 employed persons and members of their families as of January 1, 1945. If 800,000 service men who have temporarily surrendered were added, the total becomes 17,341,670. The 1944 increase broke all previous records.

New members enrolled averaged 12,000 persons daily for every working day during 1944. They joined through their places of employment or otherwise, as individuals, or for themselves and families; 54.8 per cent of the total Blue Cross membership was comprised of family dependents and 45.2 per cent of employed persons.

Already non-profit doctor bill prepayment programs are well underway with 17 states and two Canadian provinces served by medical plans which are sponsored by state and county medical societies, and made available to the public through co-ordination with Blue Cross hospital service plans.

The day is rapidly approaching when medical and hospital attention will be available, under plans which cost less per month than millions of families spend for a rettee.

American medicine is developing for the family a non-profit plan for prepayment of hospitalization and medical service, which is economical and more to be desired than compulsory tax-supported health programs. — Industrial News Service.

WITH ALL 8 GUNS firing, this Republic P-47 Thunderbolt is one of many types of fighting planes which fly with Phillips high-octane fuel on all the world's fighting fronts.

The United States Produces 85% of the World's Aviation Gasoline and Phillips is one of the Six Largest U. S. Producers!

WONDERFUL GASOLINES after the war? . . . Of course, because of today's greatly intensified program of research and production: The headline above clearly and simply states the outstanding position achieved by Phillips in the wartime production of combat aviation fuels. It is more than a hint of what you can expect from Phillips in peacetime gasolines for postwar cars. Phillips is also a major producer of butadiene for synthetic rubber.

And high-octane fuel and butadiene are both synthetic chemicals . . . two of the limitless thousands of products which can be made by using petroleum and petroleum gases as a chemical raw material. That is why we say, every time you see the Orange and Black Phillips 66 Shield, let it remind you that Phillips refineries . . . in addition to producing gasolines, lubricants, and fuel oils . . . are also gigantic chemical plants pouring out weapons for victory.

Debate Whether Towns Have Home Rule

Santa Fe, March 14.—One of the real fights in the legislature just convened for its second term is whether municipalities shall have what they term Home Rule. This is involved in the bill S 200, by Senators Morrow and Eager, sponsored by New Mexico Municipal League recently reorganized in a rousing meeting at which every principal city of the state was represented, save Las Vegas.

This bill so seeks to amend the state liquor law as to permit the municipalities to fix their own status so far as regulation of liquor outlets is concerned. It is now vested definitely in the liquor division of the Bureau of Revenue at Santa Fe.

A clear-cut principle is involved in the sought legislation, its proponents insist. It is the right of a decent community with responsible governing agency to control its own affairs to the extent of having say as to who should conduct a liquor dispensing establishment; the kind of man and character; location as to refrain from nearness to church or school for immediate residence section and the number of such establishments in the community without having the number multiplied by state action when the municipality had no recourse.

At present the municipality has only the right of "expression" of opinion when the state agency sends down word that So-and-So has applied to the state for license. This "expression" does not carry decision, which is precisely what the municipality seeks in the bill S 200. There are other matters, other bills, and also other worthy subjects the municipalities seek in proposed legislation, and these are having attention; but S 200, the Home Rule bill, transcends others in immediate importance. —State Municipal League Release.

GAME OF POWER POLITICS KEEPS UP ITS PACE

DESPITE ANYTHING WE CAN do now the game of power politics will be played in Europe as it was for long years before, and for the years since, World War I.

At any time between the German invasion of France and after the attack on Russia we were in a position to dictate to England and Russia. Both countries needed both credit and war production facilities, both of which America could provide. What were but penciled memos, made on battleships in the Atlantic, could have been a formal document, with the signature of the British prime minister, in exchange for American lend-lease credit and an unlimited call on our war production facilities. Had we had dignified agreements covering those ideals in which we believed then, and still believe, those documents would have been good. Neither England nor Russia would have repudiated them.

The Jap attack on Pearl Harbor, followed immediately by Germany's declaration of war against us, made a big difference. It suddenly became our war and we had to win it. To do so we must have the support of both England and Russia. They no longer needed to make concessions to get America's help. Those scribbled notes, that expressed American ideals, became only scribbled notes. England would play the game her way. She would make no pretense of liquidating the King's empire to comply with American ideals. England is committed to imperialism. Under such conditions Russia would not consider the maintenance of national boundaries as they existed before the war started. She would take what she wanted regardless of America's wishes.

So it was that America's entry into the war again started the game of power politics in Europe. Despite anything we may now do that game will continue. Europe and much of Asia will be spheres of influence, divided between England and Russia, with France attempting to take a hand.

The world will be safe for a time. Russia will have what she immediately wants. The British empire will remain intact—for a time at least. Russia will be boss in the Slav Balkans. England will occupy the same position in western Europe, and all will seemingly be well. The day may come when Russia will seek to expand in the near east or in China, and if she does she will step on England's toes. Then there will again be trouble brewed from the European power politics of today.

Dumbarton Oaks will be largely an idle gesture. Nothing we can now do will write for the world an insurance policy against a war in the future. The small nations of the eastern hemisphere will receive and accept orders from the bosses, and some future generation will pay the bill. The Arthur Balfour prophecy of 1918, of what would happen should America get into an European war he saw coming, will be proven true. America cannot now be the world's peacemaker.

TEMPERAMENT IN BUSINESS CONDUCT

TWO OF MY FRIENDS have lived the same number of 76 years. One was English born. Came to this country when a young man. Worked to achieve a competence on which he could retire at the age of 60, that he might spend his remaining years at play. Being English the "how" of play was in his blood, and for the last 16 years play has been his only interest.

The other has a dozen generations of American forbears back of him. He started with nothing. At 25 he had started and owned a small manufacturing business. At 60 that business employed many hundreds of people. It was successful. The owner had capable sons to take it over. He, too, retired to play. But he could not stay away from the office and plants. He did not know how to play. In less than two months he was back in harness again, despite the proven ability of the boys. For the past 16 years he has retired about twice each year, for about 30 days each time. Temperament forced him back each time.

The difference is the temperament of the English and American people. The English know how to play. The American continues to hustle to the end of the chapter if he is to be happy.

TWO TO THREE YEARS AFTER the war American farmers will again be in competition with cheap labor farming, and with a decreased world demand for food. Present prices on farm products will not continue. The middle west soil improvement committee urges better cultivation and soil improvement of present farm acreage, and not the purchase by farmers of more acres.

FANCIED GRIEVANCES cause us more agony than real ones.

HOW HALSEY BOMBED FILIPINOS

Adm. William F. "Bull" Halsey tells this dramatic story about the invasion of Luzon.

"Just before we went into Luzon, I called all the Filipino lieutenants and messboys on my flag together. I showed them a map of Luzon and pointed out the Japanese positions that MacArthur had told me not to shell for fear of hurting some Filipino civilians.

"I told them that the only way to get the Japs out would be to shell these key points.

"One of the messboys stepped forward and said that the marked-out positions included his home. I asked him if he thought we should shell it.

"Is that the only way to get the Japs out?" he asked me. I replied that it was.

"Then if you don't mind, sir," the messboy told me, "shoot the so-and-so's out to hell."

"We shelled those defenses, we killed a few Filipinos, but we got all the Japs."

ARMY SPEED UP

Senators studying the military picture have learned that the army ground forces command has been quietly cutting down on the training given to infantrymen before going into front-line action.

Infantrymen are now sometimes being shipped overseas without any advanced training. Some now find themselves in the front line only six months after having donned uniform. It is still longer than the average in the last war, however. Meanwhile, men are being yanked out of the air corps and services of supply and transferred to the infantry. Already supposed to be well-seasoned, they get an additional seven weeks' training and are then moved outside the country as replacements.

One new departure from practice in the last war is that few divisions have been withdrawn from action in their entirety for a thorough rest. Instead, once a division is in the line, it receives replacements, but no real vacation, for months. Congressmen returning from the war front have criticized this policy to army higher-ups.

General Bradley has tried to move green divisions into relatively quiet sectors for seasoning, but his intelligence hasn't always been able to gauge what the enemy considers a quiet sector.

LABOR MANAGEMENT

The scene is the lobby of Washington's fashionable Mayflower hotel. A modest, businesslike, gray-haired man walks over to the house phone, picks it up.

"Room 633," he says, and then after a brief pause, "Eric, this is Bill, shall I come up?"

The conversation is between the representatives of two one-time bitter foes, AFL Bill Green and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Eric Johnston, preparing to spend an evening together discussing the mutual problems of labor and management. When Johnston first became president of the U. S. chamber, he immediately called on Green and Phil Murray, suggesting closer cooperation in the public interest. They have been good friends ever since.

FRANCE AND THE BIG THREE

Those who sat at Roosevelt's elbow during the Yalta conference give a new slant to the reasons why sensitive General De Gaulle was not invited to join the big three. They say that neither the President nor Prime Minister Churchill had any objection to De Gaulle's presence, but felt rather neutral about it. Stalin, according to those returning from Yalta, pointed out that this was to be primarily a military conference and France was only playing a minor role in the war. Since the Big Three were bearing the main brunt of the war, Stalin said he saw no point in having De Gaulle sit in on a conference concerned largely with military strategy.

The Russian war chief was quite definite and repeated this point that if the Yalta conference were concerned primarily with political and economic postwar problems, it would be different. But when military matters were being discussed, he just didn't want De Gaulle around.

Then to clinch his views, Stalin recalled that France surrendered to Germany early in the war, and refused to turn over the French fleet to the British as per treaty.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Inflation hit the elections last year. Contributions to senatorial campaigns in 1946 were only $787,000, compared with $1,495,000 in 1944. Expenditures were $1,139,000 in 1946 compared with $1,702,000 in 1944.

COUNTRY CURED HOMER BY CROY

THE STORY THUS FAR: Amos Croy, who had served in the Civil War as a sergeant, was one of the covered wagon pioneers from Ohio, who settled on homestead land near Marysville, Missouri.

CHAPTER II

With a baby coming, a one-room home would not do, so Uncle Jim and Uncle Dexter, and probably another uncle, came in and a bedroom was attached. And there I was born and there the room still stands.

I find myself hesitating to mention the year, because it all seems so fearfully long ago. It wasn't. You'd be surprised to see how opy I am. It was really the year Brooklyn Bridge was built. There!

And here are some other things that came in that year: the old Waldorf-Astoria was opened, the last spike was driven in the Northern Pacific and Joseph Pulitzer bought the New York World. And this was the year Mark Twain's "Life on the Mississippi" appeared.

The new room was a good hospital. Aunt Mandy Sewell drove up and stayed a week and the event went off all right. It was not long until my mother was up and doing the washing and baking and cooking and things were back to normal.

I am sometimes asked where I got my first name, and if it was because my parents loved the blind poet. It wasn't quite that romantic. I was named for the township in Ohio where my father came from. I was not given a middle name.

A child's first memory is, I believe, usually about people. My first memory is about my mother and a wholly unimportant one. We were walking in the orchard and I picked up an apple and put it in the pocket of my dress. The apple became caught—was tight in the pocket—a tragedy to me—and my mother worked the apple out. I expect psychiatrists could explain something or other by that. But I can't.

My next memory is of a hole in the living-room floor. The floor tilted a little and my father had bored an auger hole so that when my mother scrubbed, the water would drain off. I would try to look through the hole and would wonder what was on the other side. And I always have wondered what was on the other side.

And now a confused memory, one quite a bit more involved. It was that something dreadful was happening. And indeed it was. My father came riding one of the plow horses in from the field at a gallop and leaped off, opened the gate, and let them go in the barn lot with the harness on. Then he came running to the house and we all got into the cyclone cave and sat crapped in quilts. Now and then Pa would lift up the doors and look out. When we finally came out, the barn had been blown away and one of the horses killed. So destructive are the cyclones of this section, and so sharply defined are they, that this one had swept through the orchard my father and mother had set out, and had moved half of it down and left the other standing. And there it was, all my early days, the half-down half-up orchard, the scared and twisted trees. My mother used to talk about "her" orchard. When she wanted to rest she would take her chair with the leather bottom Pa had woven and go but and sit under one of the trees.

The Sewells made another run and the barn was rebuilt. I remember (another trifling flash) sitting on a joist and watching Uncle Sewell mortise a hole.

I developed a deep affection for that barn, for barns do things to you.

I do not remember my first day at Knabb School, except the disgrace I got into. But I can still see the schoolhouse. That, however, is easy for it is still much as it was then. I've often read of "the little red schoolhouse," but I never saw one. In our section, all country schoolhouses were white, and for that matter, they still are. There it was—a coal house in the yard, an iron pump, a cyclone cave, and, at the back of the lot, two small structures with half-moons in the sides. Two or three horses would be tied to hitching-posts for the scholars who lived too far away, or were too small to walk. When it was time for school to take up, the teacher came to the door and rang a hand-bell and that was the end of it. The only difference in the schoolhouse between my day and now is that someone, with advanced ideas on education and eyestrain, decided that all light should come from the south, so the north windows were closed up. The children seem a bit blinky-eyed.

Mother will chomp at the hitch rack—the family car mustn't be tied up. The coal house still stands, but a new kind of stove has come in. It is full of coils and has all sorts of fancy devices, but I suspect the big boys don't get to go out so often for a scuttle of coal. And instead of having every seat taken up, there are now only half a dozen tots, tots too small to be toted off to town by the school board bus.

But back to the disgrace. The boys-seem-like-giants, and I was afraid of them. When recess time came, the big girls must have seen my uneasiness, for they took me to their backhouse to relieve myself. When I returned, the boys were waiting, and taunted me until I felt I was disgraced for life. I think it was the first time I realized the world is made up of two sexes and never shall they meet . . . at least in certain places.

When school dismissed of an afternoon, the scholars would come out and some would start one direction and some another. Then I would start north and pretty soon I would come to the top of a hill and there would be the Croy farm.

That was the way all farms were spoken of. The Newt Kennedy farm, the Scott farm, the Willhoite farm; they had personalities just as people have. Sometimes a family would move away, but their place was still called the Duncan farm, or the Trullinger farm. It took a long time to call a place by the name of the new people. If the man was a tenant, the situation was about hopeless.

Life was hard during the week. But what a wonderful day Sunday was! We got up the same time as usual. But there was a different tempo. Pa got up more leisurely, and started the fire in the kitchen stove.

Pa would pump a bucket of water for Ma, start the kitchen stove going, then start for the barn lot. As I lay in bed, or dressed, I could follow his progress by the creaking of the barn door and a whiny of welcome from the horses, then a stalling, cooing as they were to be fed. The sound of Pa scooping up the corn, then the shutting of the barn door; this meant he was on the way to feed the hogs. There would be a dreadful uproar as the hogs saw him coming. The holler he got, the worse the noise; the sound of the hogs fighting among themselves. Abruptly the uproar would die away and peace and contentment would descend upon the hog lot: the hogs were feeding.

He would go to the steer yard and there would be the count of corncobs snapping as the steers followed him. Then the sound of corn being poured into the troughs and the soft thud of the cattle as they bumped sides crowding up to the trough. Now and then a steer would give a grunt; that meant one steer had chugged another with his head.

With the horses and steers fed, Pa would unhook the windmill. There would be a sharp clang as the gears meshed, then a whirring as the wind laid hold of the blades. Then I could hear him coming to the house; no time for lazing now, and I would spring into my pants. Pa didn't think much of anybody who couldn't get dressed by the time the stock was fed. My mother would be up, putting corncobs and coal into the kitchen range. By that time Pa would be at the kitchen door. No one in our house ever said good morning. But Pa would say: "Susan, we've got a dead pig."

Mother would say, "One of the strong ones?"

"No. Old Blackie's hitman."

Then a feeling of relief. We'd take our buckets and start for the cow lot, Pa and Ma walking ahead, and me bringing up the rear.

for I hated to work. We'd get our stools down from the cracks in the fence and it wouldn't be long before there would be the sound of milk pinging. Pa's would be coming very fast, Ma's next, and coming pretty slow would be mine. After a time the milking would be over and Pa would take the two heavy buckets, and I'd take the next heaviest, and Ma the lightest, and we'd start for the house and breakfast, me a bit ahead now.

Sunday morning was bathing time, and, after breakfast, Pa would bring in the washtub and put it on the kitchen floor and fill it from the reservoir. Then Pa would retire to grease the "hack," and I would read and Ma would take her bath. Pa would come in and wash his hands in the pan on the back porch, empty the tub and fill it again, and Ma would go into the other room to write to relatives, while I'd still be reading and dreading the bath call. We'd hear Pa splashing around, and afterwards he'd come with his suspenders hanging down and walking on his toes so as not to spot the floor, and call, "Homer!" I'd give a groan and carry out his water and fill the tub again, and be in and out in no time at all.

Pa would get down the big harvester calendar and study the dates with circles around them. Then he'd say, "Well, by next Sunday we ought to have a new calf."

It wouldn't be long till time to start to church, and pretty soon Pa and I would be standing beside the hack, and Ma would come out with her Bible and her response leaflets. Ma would sit in front with Pa and I'd sit in the back. They'd talk more now than any other time; once in a while Pa would turn and give me good advice.

We'd look to see if the neighbors had started to church. If they were hitching up, Pa'd wave at them, or shake his buggy whip. Some of the neighbors didn't go to church at all. Ma always dropped her voice when she spoke to them, and Pa would say, "They'll pay for it sometime."

The men sat on one side and the women on the other; the little boys sat with their mothers and the big boys sat in the back, whispering and making faces out of the knots in the coats. Now and then some of the big boys would carve their initials, but it was pretty well understood they were going to hell. Sometimes I'd feel sorry for them; then I'd think the fools deceived it. The preacher would drone along, now and then giving the Bible a whack. Now and then a mud-dauber or would follow him; but the eyes of the men or the women wouldn't; nor of the girls. Sometimes two mud-daubers would get into a fight; then the preacher would have to give two whacks. Suddenly a mule at the hitch rack would get up an excruciating, ear-breaking hoo-haw, ending with the grunts and chokes and greans with which a mule always closes his song. It'd make the boys snort. No amount of whacks would do any good. A little girl would lean over and whisper into her mother's ear, and the mother would get up, leading the little girl by the hand, and the two would tiptoe out. An the mother panned the windows outside, she would stoop. Then we'd hear the little girl pipe, "Mamma, hurry!" In a few minutes the mother and the little girl would come back from behind the church and scurry tiptoe to their seats.

The week before, we would have invited somebody to Sunday dinner and now the people would stand on the front porch and ask if we were sure it was convenient. Ma had been getting ready all week; but the question always had to be asked. Then I would get to ride home with the company. It was a lot more fun than riding with Pa and Ma and having to sit in the back seat. No lecture now.

It was always understood that the company was to drive slowly, so Ma could get the dinner started and Pa could have his team out of the way so he could help the company unhitch. I'd help, too; so hanging back now, and we'd lead the horses to the tank by the windmill while Pa and the company talked crops. Pa would say, "What do you figure your oats'll run?"

When the women heard us, they'd all come to the door and say they'd about decided we weren't hungry, then we'd say we thought we'd eat a bite to keep on the good side of the cook. We'd go into the dining room and there'd be the table! No red checkered cloth today but a wonderful fine white cloth with faint flowers woven in it. Lying on a chair, which was partly behind and partly beside Ma, was our peacock fan. The fan was about as long as the table was wide, and had a leather loop to hang it up by when it wasn't in use. As Ma waved the fan over the table during dinner, the feathers would catch the light and shimmer and shine entrancingly. During weekdays we had a fan made out of paper, not one-millionth part as grand as our peacock fan. Company and a white tablecloth and our peacock leather fan—that was Sunday dinner!

The Approach

Planned Economy was advocated in Germany by a small group of theorists as long ago as 1880. The large mass of politically minded Germans considered their harmless cranks and toyed with their ideas abstractedly for all of ten years before they saw danger in them. People who were loyal to the old Germany and its ways learned suddenly that Planned Economy was gaining popularity.

Serious consideration of Planned Economy started among conservative thinkers in Germany about half a century ago. Deliberate, Teutonic minds almost universally opposed the thought of manhandling economic laws which they recognized as natural laws, worthy of respect in any orderly society. Just the same, they saw in Planned Economy a powerful tool for rough work.

Something Different.
Fifteen or 20 years passed without much outward change. Planned Economy was still in the background. Everybody seemed conscious of it. More and more people admitted believing that parliaments had a right to enact written laws against the workings of competition as they understood it. In fact, every time a German became dissatisfied with conditions he thought about Planned Economy.

Finally 1914 came, bringing World War I. Germany quickly went all out for Planned Economy. It was a shrewd political move. People reasoned feebly that open competition must cost something, and accepted the new order in the name of efficiency; to win the war. All industry went hurriedly under government control, and the dreams of yesterday's unpopular minority became the rule.

Monopolies Thrived.
Government managers eliminated now and growing industrial plants. Hugo monopolies grew larger still. It was the easy way for government because a few big concerns are less trouble to manage than a large number of small ones. Competitors entered into cartels to hike prices and hide incompetence. They divided markets like pies and traded customers as if they were cheap.

Defeated in World War I, burdened with reparations, lame of manpower, Germany took a still bigger dose of government control. By 1933 Hitler was dictating to a race of conservatives who could still remember laughing at the economic planners and saying, "It can't happen here." Planned Economy had given way to National Socialism; in other words, plain dictatorship.

Like a Drug Habit.
We have Planned Economy in America now, a powerful weapon for rough work such as we are doing. But Planned Economy is still a habit-forming medicine. If America is to be prosperous again, this drug must be used sparingly. Rationing is effective if it's necessary, poisonous if it's not. Rationing, in its only safe form, is held to an irreducible minimum—not taken for effect. America's defenders and her allies must be fed. Also must the people of home understand that their government is still a power that's friendly to them. Returning now to the easy rationing rules of last September and October would yield more support voluntarily than Hitler himself could get with his three-speed machine: (1) Planned Economy, (2) Regimentation, (3) Dictatorship.
