Upper Hondo Soil Conservation District

Capitan N. M.
Up in the Upper Hondo Soil Conservation District Bill Holmes—with a twinkle in his eye—calmly states that the best time to sow grass seed for a good stand is just before a long wet spell. After working three years to obtain a stand of grass in the old potato and bean fields of his Loma Grande Ranch, Mr. Holmes has just about obtained his goal on 60 acres. His method has been this: Absolutely deny the area to stock until a solid, vigorous stand has been obtained. Keep all weeds mowed and let them lay for mulch. If no weeds are growing, plant oats, let them go to seed, then mow them and let lay for mulch. His system of mulching has obtained for him the stand of grass he was after. Mr. Holmes maintains that a crop of oats used for mulch purposes is time and money well invested. He particularly warns us that sunflowers and other tall weeds will not permit grass to obtain a start. Tumble weeds, however help rather than hinder.

The Lincoln County Extension Agent, Carl P. Radcliff, needed a farm tractor and some land leveled, so he went all of the way and bought a carry all scraper too. In his spare time he started leveling on 5.5 acres of his Tinnie farm, which the Upper Hondo District had plowed and staked for him. Considerable interest has been aroused now that the field is nearing completion. Since he has learned how to use the rig, Carl intends to level his entire farm, taking a field at a time—until the job is done.

Many farmers are going in for irrigated pastures, particularly on parts of their farms. Though having a water-right, parts of some farms are unsuited for intensive cultivation yet can be treated for proper irrigation allowing a rotary system of irrigated pasture farming. Henry Hale near Palo Verde, is well along with his irrigated pasture plan. Sheldon Taylor, below Piascho, is starting such a plan. Jim Hale, Hollywood, intends to carry out a similar practice.

THE college football campaign of 1946 is so packed or studded with important dates that millions of football followers are left in a somewhat bewildered state.

We hesitate to pick up this assignment since it means denunciation from a few colleges and many chambers of commerce, who insist their home-town games deserve high ranking.

Anyway here is Grantland Rice our ranking of the more important contests. There are so many vital games that one can only hit a few of the high spots.

Two Southern Headliners

The big game on October 19 will be Georgia vs. Oklahoma A. and M., (at Athens, Ga., not Greece). This will be one of the season's high spots.

The schedule now carries us to October 25 when Army meets Duke and Ohio State meets Minnesota.

The big game of November 2 is Georgia and Alabama. This game is fragrant with a Rose Bowl odor, a Sugar or an Orange Bowl taste.

Army-Notre Dame Clash

The outstanding melee of November 9 is Army and Notre Dame. This is the game that could easily draw 500,000 fans.

Later on we have Penn and Army, Harvard and Yale, Ohio State and Michigan. Also Southern California and UCLA, Army and Navy.

This fall campaign of 1946 will be the high spot of campus play since Princeton met Rutgers over 75 years ago.

Batting Crowns

The National league pennant fight between the Cardinals and the Dodgers has been baseball's leading feature this season.

The Red Sox runaway victory and the Yankee collapse have been the American league's contribution to the excitement of many busy leagues.

But the individual side has more than its share of public interest, which has overwhelmed all past records in the way of attendance.

One of the main entries in this field is Ted Williams, star of the Red Sox. Ted, a great natural hitter, started out to lead both leagues at bat.

For a while it looked as if the walkup Williams would run away with all three marks. He began hitting home runs at an early date at his batting average hovered around .300.

Two Investments Always Worth Par

One of the biggest comforts anyone can get from an investment is the assurance that it will always be worth 100 cents on the dollar. In good times and bad, you can be sure that the 'E' bonds you bought during the war, and those you are buying now, will never be worth less than you paid for them. In fact, after the first year bonds will grow steadily in value. Your savings account at this bank is another investment that doesn't shrink; it grows the longer you leave your money on deposit. These time-tested investments you can hold with confidence. Invest in both for your own future security and your family's welfare.

Party Lines Crumbled In 76th Congress

TO ANYONE who has spent considerable time here in Washington watching governmental operation, and more particularly the action of members of congress, the thought is bound to intrude itself... Is our two-party system of government working?

Do we have the checks and balances in congress that we should have with the two-party system? And when we watch these elected representatives of the people in action on the floor of the senate and the house, another natural reaction is the question, "What is a Democrat?" or "What is a Republican?" "Are party lines vanishing?"

Of course, the only and obvious answer is that a Democrat is a man who espouses the principles of the Democratic party, while a Republican is one who espouses the principles and beliefs of the Republican party. Following through on this catechism, the next question is "What are the party principles?" The answer is that although they change somewhat from time to time, the only steadfast measure of party principles are those which the regularly elected delegates of the two parties declare in their platforms when they meet in solemn convention every four years.

Then when a candidate for public office declares that he is a Democrat and asks for votes of the people, it is presumed, unless he declares otherwise, that he is running for that office as a believer in or a supporter of the party's principles, namely the Democratic platform. And the same thing holds true on the Republican side.

The only measuring stick we have to determine whether a political party is carrying out its party platform, which is its pledge to the people of performance, is when it passes, or at least attempts to pass, legislation which would put its platform-pledges into action.

Many on Wrong Side

So, after either a Democrat or a Republican has been elected to congress and comes down here to Washington and votes against his party or against his party's attempts to carry out party programs, what would you call him?

For instance, the record in the 76th congress shows that on issues where a majority of the Democratic party voted one way and a majority of the Republican party voted the other, only 18 Democratic senators and 14 Republican senators voted consistently with their party. The record shows that Sen. Harry F. Byrd (Dem.) of Virginia, voted against the Democratic party 63 per cent of the time; that Sen. Peter Gerry (Dem.) of Rhode Island, voted against a majority of his party 54 per cent of the time; and that Sen. Leo P. O'Daniel (Dem.) of Texas, voted against the Democratic party 53 per cent of the time. On the Republican side, Sen. George Aiken of Vermont voted against the Republican party 50 per cent of the time; Sen. Wayne Morse, Oregon, voted against his party 70 per cent of the time; and Charles W. Tobey of New Hampshire voted against his GOP colleagues 51 per cent of the time. So on the basis of their votes, these three Democrats were better "Republicans" than most Republican senators, and the three GOP solons were better "Democrats" than most of the Democratic senators. There are those who declare that such senators as these are "Independents."

Southern Reactionaries

Fifteen Democratic senators voted against their party from 34 to 50 per cent of the time. They were Bailey, N. C.; Bibb, Miss.; Burch, Va.; Connally, Tex.; Eastland, Miss.; George, Ga.; Hoey, N. C.; McCarran, Nev.; Overton, La.; Stewart, Tenn.; Swift, Ala.; Thomas, Okla.; Tydings, Md.; and Wheeler, Mont. Four Republicans are in the 33 to 50 per cent class in voting against their party. They are Austin, Va.; Knowland, Calif.; Langer, N. D.; and Saltonstall, Mass. All except two of the Democrats in this class are from the southern states and their record of opposition to the Democratic majority was more pronounced in the closing months of the session from May 1 to Aug. 2, the date congress adjourned.

It is only fair to state that there were stalwarts in both parties who could be counted upon to support their party's program at least 90 per cent of the time. The consistent Democrats were:

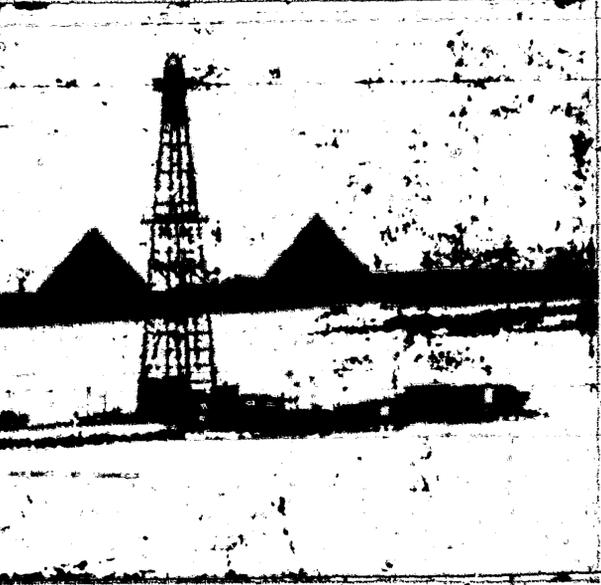

- Bartley, Ky.; Briggs, Mo.; Chavez, N. M.; Green, E. I.; Guffey, Pa.; Hayden, Ark.; Holt, Ala.; Matthews, Conn.; Margrove, Wash.; Mitchell, Wash.; Murdock, Utah; Myers, Pa.; O'Mahoney, Wyo.; Taylor, Ill.; Thomas, Utah; Tamm, Del.; Tamm, W. Va.; and Wagner, N. Y.

MECHANICAL COW PUNCHERS... It took man-made machinery to conquer this 1,400 pounds of steer at Los Angeles after the animal broke out of slaughter pens and rambled into the yards of a southwest engineering company. Tall-twisting, in effort to coax steer into truck, was to no avail. Desperate engineering officials finally loaded him up with a giant crane after the stockyard cowboys gave up in defeat.

WALKS AGAIN AFTER AID FROM SISTER KENNY... A month ago Ruth Kraus, 3 1/2, of Chicago, was stricken with the dread polio. Placed aboard a special plane, shown at left, she was rushed to the Sister Kenny Institute in Minneapolis for treatment. Today she is shown on the steps of her own home.

OIL IN SHADOW OF PYRAMIDS... Abu Reash well, drilled by Standard Oil company, is shown with the famed pyramids of Giza forming a background. This well, begun in January, is a wildcat one, drilled to determine if the desert can contribute a share of oil to the mechanized world. Other wildcat wells are planned by the company. When photo had been taken the drill bit had chewed down 5,100 feet into the base of the pyramids.

OUT ON THE PARK BENCH... While on bench after President Truman demanded and received the resignation of Henry A. Wallace as secretary of commerce, photographer found the former secretary of commerce sitting on a park bench reading the comic. He apparently did not find enough humor in conditions within the state department to satisfy him. Wallace has announced that he would continue his fight for abolition of the postoffice of Roosevelt.

SOAP SHORTAGE CONTINUES

WASHINGTON.—Most important question facing every housewife on Monday morning—soap—probably won't be solved for some time. This is bad news, but it's hard to get around.

There are two main reasons for the soap shortage, one of them unavoidable, the other avoidable—provided the government had been tough enough with industry.

First reason is the loss of coconut trees in the Philippines and the war-torn South Pacific. Whereas coconut oil and copra used to be a glut on the market, many trees were destroyed in the Philippines, in the Solomons and wherever fighting occurred. There are still plenty of trees left, but it takes time to get neglected plantations going again and General MacArthur at first refused to let Philippine civilians return to some of these areas.

The other reason—which could have been avoided—is that the soap manufacturers diverted a larger percentage of their materials to higher-priced toilet soaps. That is why some housewives actually are using perfumed soap to do their washing.

The situation in soap is similar to that in the men's clothing industry, where civilian production administration permitted clothing manufacturers to divert material to higher-priced women's wear instead of men's clothing. Profits in the women's trade were larger.

Likewise, profits are larger in the expensive perfumed soap trade. Government authorities have done little to divert soap materials to the cheaper brands used for kitchen and laundry. Of course, the minute the government tries to interfere, it gets accused of interfering with private enterprise, so some of Mr. Truman's aides are getting a little chary.

Another factor in the soap shortage is that housewives have grown careless about saving kitchen fats. During the war housewives were conserving fats at the rate of 200 million pounds a year, a great part of which went into soaps. However, with no patriotic impulses to continue the practice, much fat is now going down the drain or into the garbage can.

Another difficulty has been lack of inter-island boats for moving coconut cargoes to Manila. The U. S. navy recently stepped in and allocated several hundred small landing boats for this purpose, but even so the commerce department estimates the laundry-soap shortage will continue until the end of the year.

ED FAULEY'S LATEST REPORT

When Ed Pauley gets away from oil and politics he assumes much greater stature. As a result of his travels in Europe, he has just written a private report to President Truman on the question of Jewish refugees which makes those who have read it understand not only the plight of the refugees but the sensitiveness of the Jewish people.

Here are some of the most striking portions of the Pauley report: "The more one hears about the wanton murder of the Jews by the Germans, the more one wonders why this great crime has not shocked the conscience of mankind more than it has.

"Newspapers are accustomed to speak of mass murder when a half-dozen victims are shot down by a gunman. What shall we call it when whole towns die and the slaughtered are numbered by millions?

"When I first heard that the Germans had used the flesh of these victims to make soap, I did not believe it. There are a number of exhibits at the trial from the 'soap factory.'

"The clearer a picture one gets of what happened to over five million Jewish men, women and children in Europe during the last several years, the clearer an understanding one develops of the tragic situation of the surviving Jews in Europe.

"We cannot bring five million dead bodies to life—we cannot breathe the breath of life into the pits of human ash and human bones—we cannot even find the little bodies that once wore the thousands of baby shoes found amongst piles of shoes of every size. But we can take action—and take it now! We make certain that the over one million European Jews who survived the Nazi terror are given a chance to live. The time for talk has long passed—the time for action is long overdue."

MERRY-GO-ROUND

It hasn't been publicized but the American Legion's "Americanism" program proved a complete flop. Alvin Owsley, Americanism chairman, called off the deal when Texas legionnaires could raise only $32,000 of a $400,000 quota. The program will be revamped at the San Francisco convention... Trans-Atlantic air travel these days is all right—provided you can get home. But the backlog of returning travelers is terrific. Recently in St. Louis more than 400 awaited passage.

TREASURE OF THE SEA

BY George L. Thrall WNUU Release

THE STORY THUS FAR:
After being saved from a shipwreck, Dick Jordan was taken to a small fishing vessel by the Captain. Dick teaches the captain and his crew the trade secrets of the sea. Then, the captain starts toward the area where the sunken steamer on which Dick had been a passenger is now lying. On the way they come upon a derelict schooner. On board is Captain Bedford, apparently insane, and his daughter, Rose. Then, Captain Bedford, attempts to board the vessel, but is turned back by Rose's automatic. Dick swims to the schooner and helps Rose to drive off the pirates. Dick fears Tucu will return during the night.

CHAPTER IV

She made no pressing inquiry for an explanation, but her eyes were watching him inquisitively. "It sounds like a stage farce," he laughed finally, "but it was the best I could do at the time. That Captain Tucu swallowed the story was a surprise to me."

"Will you please tell me what the story is?"

Briefly as he could, Dick sketched all that had happened to him since the foundering of the City of Bahal.

"Now," he concluded, "you can understand why Tucu will persist in taking the schooner. So long's I'm aboard he'll keep at it. I'm not sure but I can do you the greatest favor by leaving. Perhaps I will."

"Where will you go?" she asked, smiling with her eyes and lips.

"Back to the lugger."

"Wouldn't they kill you if they laid hands on you again?"

"No, not right away," he replied. "It's my supposed knowledge of the existence of those jewels that would protect me. After, they were convinced I had been deceiving them—why, then, I don't imagine Tucu would be restrained by any scruples from wreaking vengeance."

"But you didn't intend to wait until then?" she added.

"No, I was planning to leave at the first opportunity. I was on the lookout for ships."

"And this schooner being the first, you took it to get away from them?"

"No, that isn't quite true," he returned, his eyes twinkling. "I really didn't think of myself when I decided to change ships. I saw what they intended to do, and heard your defiance of them. It was—was—well, a habit of mine, we'll call it, of jumping in whenever there's a chance of an adventure. I wanted to see the fun, and Tucu had refused to let me come aboard."

She appeared a little amused by his evident attempt to avoid the real reason. She suddenly grew more friendly. Turning to him, she said frankly: "I'm glad you came, and I hope you'll stay. Since father lost his reason, I've had everything to do. It was the storm, and the crew—they abandoned us right in the midst of it. Father was down with a high fever, and I—the men didn't trust me to manage things. I think they were superstitious about father; he talked and acted in a way that frightened them. His mind—here he comes now," she broke off in a whisper. "Never mind what he says. He's not responsible for what he tells."

Dick Gets Acquainted With Captain Bedford
Captain Bedford, with a vacant stare in his eyes, came tumbling up the companion, mumbling and grinning to himself. He was a man past fifty, stout and thick-set, grizzled of beard and hard of muscles; but the mind had been thrown out of gear by a knock on the head, caused by a falling spar in the midst of the storm. Catching sight of Dick, he stopped and blinked hard at him. Then with an idiotic grin on his face, he approached with both hands extended.

"Is it ye, Mr. Crew?" he called cheerily.

"He takes you for the mate," whispered the girl. "Humor him."

"Well, it's most time we pulled up anchor, ain't it? There ain't goin' to be any storm after all. I told ye so—I told ye so, Mr. Crew! If it wasn't for that pig-headed superstition of yours that an easterly wind means a big blow ye'd believed me afore."

He stopped suddenly and gazed at the lugger. "What ship's that, daughter? I don't seem to remember her. Hall her, an' ask the captain aboard. We'll have a dram of rum together. Cap'n's name to be friendly when in harbor. No," starting for the side, "I'll hail her."

"No, father," interrupted Rose, "not now. You must go below and rest. Mr. Crew and I will follow."

Dick nodded and smiled, which seemed to please the captain, for he descended the stairs, rubbing his hands and mumbling gleefully. When he was gone, Dick glanced at his companion. Her face was more drawn and set than when Captain Tucu had her cornered, with the Caribs in front and back of her. In that brief instant she had aged several years, a tired, weary expression in the eyes and face.

Rose Bedford was a child of the sea, born in a small seaport village, but bred and brought up on the sea under the tutelage of her father, her mother having died at an age when daughters have only the faintest conception of their need of maternal care. Captain Bedford was lonely; jealous of relatives who gave his child a home when he was away, and absolutely hungry for her companionship; and when he reached a point where he could no longer endure the separation he literally kidnapped her and carried her away to sea with him.

After that Rose had lived on the schooner, visiting more coast towns and cities than few girls of her age expect to see in a life time. She grew into a strong, robust, independent girl, skillful in handling anything that floated or had sails; learned at first hand all the mysteries of the sea and the lore of sailors, and during her brief sojourn on shore in various ports of the world picked up miscellaneous information that was more practical than theoretical. But the sea was her life and the old schooner her home.

When Dick Jordan met her she was as competent a navigator of a sailing craft as any man afloat, and her knowledge of seamanship had enabled her in the crisis to save the schooner after the crew had abandoned her. Captain Bedford had been injured by a falling spar, and for twenty-four hours had hovered between life and death. When he recovered the use of his muscles, but not of his mind, he was worse than useless. His wild babbling frightened the superstitious crew, and reduced them to a surly, disorganized, mutinous mob. The crew disregarded Rose's orders, and took matters in their own hands. They abandoned the schooner in the middle of the storm.

They Make Plans for A Desperate Defense

For three days and nights the schooner had been buffeted about by waves and wind, a plaything of the sea, drifting without guidance or direction. The chance of bringing order out of chaos seemed an insurmountable task for a woman, and almost in despair Rose was about ready to yield to the inevitable when the lugger appeared.

But her fighting spirit, in spite of its low ebb, had not entirely deserted her. The lugger's crew and suspicious character had awakened a worse fear in her mind. A fate more to be dreaded than drifting helplessly around on a derelict aroused her. In desperation she determined to board the schooner against the Caribs, selling her own life as dearly as possible.

Dick Jordan's appearance as an ally immediately stiffened her courage. They discussed the situation calmly and practically on deck after a refreshing cup of coffee in the cabin with Captain Bedford. "We have plenty of firearms aboard," she told Dick. "Father always carried a regular arsenal."

"Three of us, then, well armed," he replied, "can put up a pretty stiff fight."

"Two," she said, shaking her head. "We must leave father out of it. I don't dare trust him with a weapon. He might turn it upon us in one of his wild moods."

Dick nodded, recalling the friendly overtures the captain had made to the boarding party against his daughter's wishes. "Wouldn't it be safer to confine him to the cabin?" he asked after a pause. "He would be safe there, and out of the way."

"Yes, I thought of that," she nodded. "We could lock him in there. If things got desperate we would retreat to the cabin. That would be our final stand. I'd like father with me then."

"That's the only thing to do. Where is he now?"

"Dozing below. He always sleeps after taking a glass. I'll go down now, and lock him in while he's asleep."

Dick paced the deck restlessly while she was gone. The lugger had dropped anchor at a safe distance from the schooner. Everything was quiet aboard her, with no evidence that another plan of attack was brewing.

"You will wait until it's dark," he mused. "Then under cover of night he'll attack from several quarters. That's his plan."

When Rose appeared again, he told her of his plan, and she agreed with him.

"You haven't such a thing as a searchlight aboard, I suppose?" he queried.

"No," she smiled, "schooners are not usually equipped with such modern improvements."

"Well," glancing up at the sky, "it's going to be moonlight until one or two o'clock. After that it will be black as ink. Until then I think we're safe."

"Then we'd better take turns resting," she replied practically. "I'll take the first watch."

But Dick was in no mood to sleep. He urged her to rest, pleading that he could stay awake all night without discomfort; but she was obstinate, refusing to rest unless he promised to do the same.

Their long vigil began the moment the sunset and the shadows of night began creeping across the ocean. Twilight was succeeded by intense darkness, which brought them to alert watchfulness. This lasted for half an hour until the moon came up and dispelled the gloom. It cast a broad path of white light that revealed every object almost as clearly as in the day time. The lugger lay directly in this broad streak of light, enabling them to see all that took place aboard. It was better than a searchlight.

"It would only last until morning," Dick remarked, "we wouldn't have much to fear in the way of a surprise."

At first they talked intermittently of practical matters, exchanging views of what they should do in certain contingencies, and then having exhausted all possible methods of attack and counterattack they lapsed into silence. For nearly an hour they watched and waited without talking, but the moonlight and the balmy witching air tingled through their nerves. Dick became conscious of a pleasant sensation in watching and waiting, with her close by his side. Once or twice he glanced in her direction, and their eyes met an instant. They smiled and returned to their silent vigilance.

"You're a plucky girl," he remarked once, breaking a long pause. "Not many could meet this situation without getting hysterical."

In the few hours before the moon disappeared, Dick learned much of her lonely life with her father on the schooner. His own life had not been of the pleasantest; he was a fugitive from justice—justly so, but a fugitive just the same. He had been embittered by circumstances that had torn him from his little niche in life and cast him relentlessly upon a sea of adventure and restless wandering. Even in his moments of rest the shadow of the law had always poisoned what little enjoyment he had managed to pick up in his exile.

The night wore on without anything happening. Their talk was running into personal matters when a cloud, drifted across the face of the moon, and temporarily darkened the sea. They started up with a jump, as if it were a sign of trouble. Dick laughed after the first shock.

"I thought the moon had gone," he said. "It's only midnight, and we have it with us a couple of hours yet."

"I'm afraid not," she replied. "Look at those clouds. A cloudy night is almost as dark as a moonless one."

"Storm clouds, aren't they?"

She nodded and looked worried. "Another storm now," she murmured, "would about finish us."

A Night of Anxiety Wears Slowly On

The fear of another storm, however, was secondary to the danger threatening them from the lugger. With the sky completely overcast, the moment favorable for an attack was hastened by a couple of hours. They got up and began pacing the deck restlessly, watching and listening, peering through the gloom and halting every time a fish broke or a splash in the water attracted their attention. They talked in low, guarded voices.

"We musn't keep together," Rose whispered finally. "We must divide the watch. I'll take the stern, and you the bow. We can meet on our rounds and report."

It was the only sensible thing to do, but Dick hated to be separated from her in the darkness. Besides missing her companionship, he was afraid something might happen to her when he wasn't present to lend his assistance. Suppose the Caribs chose the stern for the attack and overwhelmed her before he knew of her danger!

He made his circuit of the forward deck a little hastily and recklessly, and found himself at the meeting place long before she had completed her round. When he saw her finally emerge from the gloom, he drew a sigh of relief.

"All well?" he asked.

She nodded, and after a few moments of pause she turned to renew her beat.

When Rose appeared again, he told her of his plan, and she agreed with him.

"You haven't such a thing as a searchlight aboard, I suppose?" he queried.

She nodded and looked worried. "Another storm now," she murmured, "would about finish us."

A Night of Anxiety Wears Slowly On

The fear of another storm, however, was secondary to the danger threatening them from the lugger. With the sky completely overcast, the moment favorable for an attack was hastened by a couple of hours. They got up and began pacing the deck restlessly, watching and listening, peering through the gloom and halting every time a fish broke or a splash in the water attracted their attention. They talked in low, guarded voices.

"We musn't keep together," Rose whispered finally. "We must divide the watch. I'll take the stern, and you the bow. We can meet on our rounds and report."

It was the only sensible thing to do, but Dick hated to be separated from her in the darkness. Besides missing her companionship, he was afraid something might happen to her when he wasn't present to lend his assistance. Suppose the Caribs chose the stern for the attack and overwhelmed her before he knew of her danger!

When Rose appeared again, he told her of his plan, and she agreed with him.

"You haven't such a thing as a searchlight aboard, I suppose?" he queried.

"No," she smiled, "schooners are not usually equipped with such modern improvements."

"Well," glancing up at the sky, "it's going to be moonlight until one or two o'clock. After that it will be black as ink. Until then I think we're safe."

"Then we'd better take turns resting," she replied practically. "I'll take the first watch."

But Dick was in no mood to sleep. He urged her to rest, pleading that he could stay awake all night without discomfort; but she was obstinate, refusing to rest unless he promised to do the same.

Their long vigil began the moment the sunset and the shadows of night began creeping across the ocean. Twilight was succeeded by intense darkness, which brought them to alert watchfulness. This lasted for half an hour until the moon came up and dispelled the gloom. It cast a broad path of white light that revealed every object almost as clearly as in the day time. The lugger lay directly in this broad streak of light, enabling them to see all that took place aboard. It was better than a searchlight.

"It would only last until morning," Dick remarked, "we wouldn't have much to fear in the way of a surprise."

At first they talked intermittently of practical matters, exchanging views of what they should do in certain contingencies, and then having exhausted all possible methods of attack and counterattack they lapsed into silence. For nearly an hour they watched and waited without talking, but the moonlight and the balmy witching air tingled through their nerves. Dick became conscious of a pleasant sensation in watching and waiting, with her close by his side. Once or twice he glanced in her direction, and their eyes met an instant. They smiled and returned to their silent vigilance.

"You're a plucky girl," he remarked once, breaking a long pause. "Not many could meet this situation without getting hysterical."

In the few hours before the moon disappeared, Dick learned much of her lonely life with her father on the schooner. His own life had not been of the pleasantest; he was a fugitive from justice—justly so, but a fugitive just the same. He had been embittered by circumstances that had torn him from his little niche in life and cast him relentlessly upon a sea of adventure and restless wandering. Even in his moments of rest the shadow of the law had always poisoned what little enjoyment he had managed to pick up in his exile.

The night wore on without anything happening. Their talk was running into personal matters when a cloud, drifted across the face of the moon, and temporarily darkened the sea. They started up with a jump, as if it were a sign of trouble. Dick laughed after the first shock.

"I thought the moon had gone," he said. "It's only midnight, and we have it with us a couple of hours yet."

"I'm afraid not," she replied. "Look at those clouds. A cloudy night is almost as dark as a moonless one."

"Storm clouds, aren't they?"

She nodded and looked worried. "Another storm now," she murmured, "would about finish us."

Suppose the Caribs chose the stern for the attack and overwhelmed her before he knew of her danger!

He made his circuit of the forward deck a little hastily and recklessly, and found himself at the meeting place long before she had completed her round. When he saw her finally emerge from the gloom, he drew a sigh of relief.

"All well?" he asked.

She nodded, and after a few moments of pause she turned to renew her beat.

When Rose appeared again, he told her of his plan, and she agreed with him.
