Appreciation

On behalf of the Women's Republican club of Lincoln county, I wish to express our "Thanks" to the voters of the county for the good support given our Party ticket on election day.

I also wish to thank the kind Republican ladies who donated sandwiches and coffee to help raise funds for our rally on November 2.

Open House at Republican headquarters was a big success even though the weather was bad and prevented many from attending. Coffee, sandwiches and doughnuts were served to every one who called there. Up-to-the-minute election returns were received there by radio and by phone. We will be better organized next election and hope to make open house at Republican headquarters a big event on election day.

The Women's Republican club is now a permanent auxiliary club of Lincoln county. Any woman believing in the principles of the Republican party and intending generally to support its candidates is eligible for membership. Our club is formed to give political education to its members and to create an avenue of expression of loyalty to the Republican party as a means of furthering the cause of better government.

New members are welcome to our organization. Regular monthly meetings will be held on the third Thursday of each month.

TREASURE OF THE SEA

BY George E. Walsh WNU Release

THE STORY THIS FAR:
The crew of a small sailing vessel in the Caribbean pick up Dick Jordan, a pirate on a raft. He realizes that he is among men better than pirates. They come with a schooner with only two people aboard, the dejected captain and his daughter, Rose. Then they find the treasure chest on the ship and he and Rose and Dick. After a fruitless search for the "treasure" supposed to be on the schooner, they escape and return to the schooner just in time to receive Dick from two of the pirates. Rose tells Dick the treasure really exists. Next day they plan how to sail the schooner to land.

CHAPTER IX

A noise from the cabin interrupted, and Rose turned swiftly. "It's Father. He needs me."
Dick remained on the deck, watching the tantalizing object with new interest.

Rose suddenly came out of the cabin, and approached him in great agitation. Her eyes were gleaming, and her whole face seemed aflame with some powerful emotion that transformed her into a radiant creature.

"Dick," she called eagerly before reaching his side. "Dick, it's happened—the miracle! I can hardly believe it, but—"

She stopped, trembling all over, her hands clasped in the attitude of prayer. He was by her side instantly, more startled by her happiness than by any fear that he had seen written there before.

"What is it, Rose?" he asked anxiously, catching one of her fluttering hands in both of his.

"It's Father," she breathed softly. "Is he— is he— dead?"

The question came out before he had time to think—abruptly, and without premeditation.

"Dead!" she repeated, and then laughed softly. "Dead! No! He's just come to life. He's sane again, Dick. He knows me—remembers everything! He's—he's—"

The tears bubbled from her eyes and rolled down her cheeks; but they were the tears of joy and relief and not of fear or desperation. Dick held one hand and supported her trembling form with an arm.

"I'm silly!" she laughed hysterically, smiling through the tears. "But I can't help it! And I don't care! I can try for happiness, can't I?"

He barely resisted the temptation to sweep her into his arms and kiss the pouting lips.

"Come," she added a moment later, clutching his arms. "Come and see the miracle."

In the cabin Dick found a much changed man lying on the bed where he had helped put him the night before. The feverish red had died out of the face, and the eyes, inspecting him critically, were as sane as any man's. The blow of the Carib's bludgeon had restored to Captain Bedford his reason. Rose had partly prepared him for meeting Dick by explaining briefly the series of events that had taken place while his mind was under a cloud. He extended a hand suddenly, and said:

"You've saved my little girl's life, I understand. Then—then you can count on me as an everlasting friend."

"I don't know what Rose's been telling you, Captain, but I'll bet she never told you how she saved my life. Let me tell you."

The girl placed a hand before his lips, but he removed it, and went into details of their adventures that she had either omitted or slurred over. At the end, Captain Bedford sat up.

"I reckon now," he said, "I'm all cured. That little girl o' mine's just like—just like her mother."

"Then her mother must have been a wonder," smiled Dick.

"She was!" was the solemn rebuff.

Captain Bedford Takes Command

The captain struggled to his feet despite Rose's protestations. "No, I ain't goin' to lie here any more," he added. "I got to get on deck. You've had enough on yer hands, daughter. Now it's my turn. Reckon I'm well enough to take a watch." He clutched at the rail and stared across the sea.

"Where's that lugger?" he demanded truculently.

"Over there," replied Rose, pointing.

Until then none of them had glanced in the direction of the puzzling object that had caused them so much debate, but when their eyes focused on it now they gave a little start. Captain Bedford granted and recovered his voice first.

"Ye call that a ship?" he snorted.

"Great Jesuaphat, ain't ye got eyes! That's land! An island!"

It was an island rising abruptly from the sea—not one of your coral-girted, palm-fringed islands of the tropics, but a rock-outcropped headland that caught the breaking surf and hurled it back shattered into foam. Perhaps a mile or two in width, and fifty feet high, it offered a safe asylum for shipwrecked sailors in the stormiest weather, could a safe landing be effected.

"We're drifting straight toward the island," Dick remarked. "Is a couple of hours we'll reach it. Any danger of being wrecked on those rocks?"

"If we could work around to the other side o' the island," muttered the skipper, "we'd be safer."

After much awkward and difficult maneuvering, they brought the ship to safety in a sheltered cove.

Captain Bedford was anxious to begin making repairs so the Betty could sail out of her prison at the earliest possible time. "We can't reckon on more'n a week of fine weather," he said. "An' we got about all we can do to get off afore that."

Dick's curiosity to land on the island and survey the scene from the top of the cliffs was greater than any fear of future disaster. "I'm going ashore," he announced.

"What fur?" growled the skipper. "Ye won't see anythin' but water an' an island, an' ye can see them here."

"The island may be inhabited on the other side."

Captain Bedford snorted. "Ye expect to find a hotel an' a ship waitin' to take ye home?"

Dick shook his head and laughed. "No, but I'm curious to climb up there and get a look. I won't be gone long."

"When he was near the summit, he increased his pace, eager to get a glimpse over the top."

"Great Jesuaphat, ain't you get eyes! That's land! An island!"

The island was long and narrow, with the opposite side disappearing in the sea gradually, a fine sandy beach fringing half of it in the shape of a crescent horseshoe. The descent from the rocks to the beach was sharp and abrupt. One could make it in a brisk run or walk.

Dick took this all in swiftly like the flash of a cinematograph. Then his eyes came to a sharp halt on an object in the cove formed by the crescent beach. With a quick intake of the breath, he exploded:

"The lugger! Tucu's crew's on the island!"

The lugger was anchored near the beach where she had probably ridden out the storm in perfect safety. Tucu had known of the island and its protecting cove. The sails were flapping idly in the breeze, stretched for drying in the warm sun. The deck was deserted. There was no sign of any one aboard.

Dick Makes Another Dismaying Discovery

But this was easily accounted for by the presence of two boats drawn up on the sands. The crew was all ashore. Dick could see them in scattered groups. A sudden fear that they had discovered the Betty on the opposite side of the island, and were preparing to attack her from the land side, made him wary and watchful. He ducked a little lower to avoid any possible detection.

Then his eyes took in other features of the beach. Some distance back from the water where the rocks broke through the sand, another group of seamen were huddled together. They were standing in an attitude of watchfulness and waiting. One of their number was advancing to confer with the Caribs.

Dick gazed in puzzled surprise and stupefied amazement. These others were white men—seamen, shipwrecked! He could make that out without difficulty. It flashed through his mind they had been wrecked on the island, and were bargaining with Tucu to take them off.

There were seven in all, counting their leader who was parleying with the Caribs. Dick frowned for no other reason than that something in their appearance, or in their leader's attitude, reminded him of the past and for a long time he was silent and thoughtful, striving to recall a fleeting memory that disturbed him.

Then with a little grunt he sat up, shaded his eyes with both hands, and crouched as motionless as a tiger stalking his prey. His breath came in short, labored gasps.

"Hen Pettigrew!" his lips murmured feebly.

The explanation of the group of white men on the beach was all comprehensible. One of the boats of the City of Bahia had landed on the island or been wrecked there.

The discovery was not pleasant to Dick. His recognition of the man who had pursued him half around a continent, shadowing him as persistently as a bulldog, and finally capturing him in a small, out-of-the-way corner of the earth, gave him a distinct shock. With a quiver, he recalled Hen's parting words:

"If we meet again—on shore—I'll pinch you. It's my duty."

He glanced back of him. The schooner was resting quietly in its protecting prison, rising and falling lazily. On the deck Captain Bedford was busy making repairs to the sails and rigging, preparing for escape before another storm came. Rose stood alone at the bow, and as Dick looked she waved to him.

He groaned and waved back to her. Then violent words sprang to his lips. "Damn Hen! He shan't take me! I'll kill him first! It ain't fair! I've paid—paid enough for another's crime! I'll die fighting for freedom! Damn it, I'll jump into the sea first!"

Rose was still waving to him, cupping her hands occasionally as if shouting words of encouragement. He listened, but the distance was too far to catch her voice.

Suddenly the fit of angry passion deserted him, leaving him limp and weak. He groaned aloud: "She will know! Hen will tell her! I can't escape!"

Suddenly the fit of angry passion deserted him, leaving him limp and weak. He groaned aloud: "She will know! Hen will tell her! I can't escape!"

Her name sprang to his lips, and with a cry of anguish he dropped his head on the hard rocks. The inevitable fate that had pursued him was closing about him, and he was glad now that he hadn't spoken to her. He shivered at the thought: At least he had saved her that humiliation.

When he glanced up again his mind was calmer and his white face, drawn and strained, had lost of the rebellious lines in it. The men on the beach were still parleying. Dick wondered what sort of bargain they could make with Tucu. The old pirate would demand all he could get and take it. Tucu was like Hen—inexorable and greedy.

While he looked the parley suddenly terminated, and Captain Tucu, who had been conversing with Hen, turned on his heels to walk back to his waiting Caribs; but half way there he wheeled so swiftly that Hen was taken off his guard. There was a puff of smoke, and a sharp report. Hen Pettigrew staggered back and nearly fell, reeling as if suddenly bereft of all powers of locomotion.

At the same instant a group of Caribs, led by Black Buryley, started forward on the run, firing as they came. Dick saw Pettigrew reel again, and this time pitch head first into the sand. The Caribs rushed past him, filling the air with their shots.

Dick waited to hear the returning volley from the white seamen, as the Caribs advanced, dodging from side to side, but no response came from them. Tucu had armed every one of his crew but they were poor shots.

Stones Poor Weapons Against Guns

"They're waiting until the Caribs are nearer," Dick mused joyfully. "I wish—a little regretfully—"Hen was there: Hen's a dead shot."

Nearer and nearer came the Caribs to the entrenched fortress of the seamen. Dick noticed for the first time they were protected by a rampart of rocks they had gathered for a breastwork.

"Hen's work," he chuckled. "Hen's shrewd in a fight. Didn't trust old Tucu."

The attacking party was within a stone's throw of the breastwork, and still the white men held their fire. Ten feet nearer, and the sailors rose as one man. Dick held his breath, expecting a withering volley from them; but instead a shower of rocks and stones filled the air.

Two of the Caribs went down, and a third stumbled and halted. The others dropped to the beach to escape the flying missiles, and the attack was temporarily checked.

"Why don't they shoot now?" growled Dick. "They could get them if—"

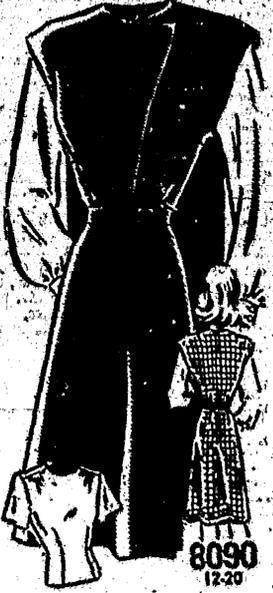

He stopped and drew a deep breath as the unpleasant explanation forced itself sharply upon his mind. The seamen from the wrecked steamer carried no firearms, or if they had taken them away with them, as Hen must have taken his, the salt water had rendered them useless. They were unarmed, except for the stones, while the Caribs were plentifully supplied with guns.

Dick's hand reached for his own pistol, and then dropped limply to his side. Captain Tucu had disarmed him when he was made a prisoner, and Dick hadn't found any substitute weapons. Were there more firearms aboard the Betty? Probably not; Captain Tucu had robbed the schooner of every weapon he could lay his hands on.

With a groan at his impotence, he turned back to the beach. The Caribs were attacking again.

Woman's World Comfort, Simplicity, Keynotes Of New Baby's Clothing Needs

By Etta Haley

IF YOU'VE been visiting a brand new mother recently, you know that her baby's clothing is one of great simplicity and comfort. Elaborateness of baby's wardrobe is a thing of the past.

The main considerations in choosing a young baby's clothing now is comfort and ease of getting him in and out of his garments. The baby's wardrobe, at least for his first few months, does not consist of a great many frilly bonnets and long dresses. Shirts, diapers, one-piece kimonos and nightgowns are the important things.

Since many of these pieces of clothing are hard to find, the mother with the sewing machine is indeed lucky, for most of these things can be made easily. The sewing is easy and goes quickly, so it really need not take a long time to make the baby's layette.

The biggest need the infant has is for diapers, and these, like many other things, have become a scarce commodity. It has been estimated by experts that at least three dozen diapers are necessary, and four dozen are preferable, but most new mothers have had to do with a lot less.

If you can, however, get the required number, dressing and keeping the infant clean will be largely simplified. Commercial double gauze diapers are excellent for the purpose because they have no seams to rub or irritate; they are also light and easy to wash.

It's easy to dress baby...

If you are fortunate in getting cotton flannel, then diapers may be made at home. Diapers always used to be made 27 inches by 27 inches but research shows that the rectangular diaper, 20 inches by 40 inches is a much better size as it may be used more easily as the baby grows because of its folding possibilities.

Helpful Tips Given On Sewing

In order to make easy work of the diapers sewed at home, use these well-considered tips: Pull a thread to cut them so that they will be straight. The material can be torn, but the edges must be trimmed before hemming. The diapers may be hemmed by machine and several can be done at once if a foot hemmer is used. The corners should be reinforced by stitching back and forth for a distance of several inches. Frequent washings make diapers easy prey for tearing and they should be made to withstand wear. Use a No. 50 thread for hemming.

Kimonos should be made of soft flannel or jersey, and should be as sturdy as possible as they, too, will have to bear up under frequent laundering. Make the kimono long enough to protect the youngster from drafts, but not too long to hamper his kicking—a necessary exercise.

If you make easy-to-get-into garments.

Several kimonos may be cut at one time just by folding the material several times. Stitching by machine is best because it is even and durable. Broad, plain seams are preferred, and they must lie flat to give the infant the maximum in comfort.

There are several ways of finishing the neck and front of the material and you may choose which-

Mittens with Ermine

It's the fashionable thing to do! Use walled mittens with your fur-trimmed coats to go smart places together this winter. Hand crocheted costume knits, made of soft quality pure wool, are made with walled sides outlined in colors keyed to smart apparel shades.

ever one seems best suited to your taste. First of all, the neck and front may be finished in a different color material, but this does take more material.

Another way of finishing is to use narrow bias binding for the neck and front, and a narrow, firm cotton tape for the ties. Avoid silk ribbons as these come untied easily and they do not wash well.

Select Infant's Clothing Suitable to Climate

If the youngster is born during winter, most of his garments should be made of warmer materials such as flannel, or even knitted of all-woolen yarns.

Slips made of flannel are particularly desirable during cooler weather but they should be made in the same way as slips for summer, i. e., open at the shoulder so it slips off quickly and easily. Another type of slip for the youngster is one that is closed at the shoulder, but open all the way down the back. This, too, is easy to use in dressing the child.

Make broad seams on the slips, and embroider simple decorative motifs on them if you want to add lingerie touches to them.

Bibs are another necessity for the youngster, and these may be of two types. The small dress bibs are made just to protect the top part of the dress, and are usually very dainty. The feeding bib, however, should cover the front part of the dress, and should be made of a water-repellent fabric like dull-finished oilcloth or terry cloth, bound with cotton tape. Use ties which can be fastened at the back.

Make Small Repairs

The old adage about a stitch in time certainly holds true of small repairs on blouses and lingerie. Repairing these garments in time will often save the garment, whereas they may be rendered completely unusable if they are left unrepaired even for a day.

Don't discard blouses simply because they become stained or worn under the arm. Shield-shaped inserts of matching material frequently takes care of the damage. They are also inconspicuous.

To make this type of patch, cut away the damaged portion and cut a patch in the shape of a shield. Leave twice as much seam allowance as ordinarily. Open the armhole seam halfway around, then baste in the shield. Stitch by machine and then close armhole.

Sew seams on slips as soon as they show signs of coming apart. Reinforce them with the same fabric, if necessary.

Straps should be sewed in place as soon as they show signs of coming apart from the garment. If allowed to come apart, they may strain and tear the fabric or lace.

Lace trimmings on lingerie must be carefully and neatly patched in matching thread as soon as they tend to give way.

Fashion Forecast

If you want to get a lot of wear out of jackets, select them to go with both slacks and skirts. In this way, they will serve a double purpose.

The cloth coat, furred with lavish taste, is very popular this season. Black Persian lamb trimming is one of fashion's first choices. Tuxedo fronts are popular as are lavish fur trimmings on coats and collars.

If the edging on napkins or tablecloths wears, replace it with new edging and get more wear from the material.

Neckties are a very important item in this season's wardrobe. Most of the time they're high and crisp on daytime dresses, but on afternoon and evening frocks, they slip low and become rounded, in a sort of pocket-like line.

INCENTIVE PAY WOULD SPEED UP PRODUCTION

SOME YEARS AGO I was employed by a newspaper concern where the composition was done on a piecework basis. Each compositor was paid for what he produced. The machine operators were fast, and each made what was at that time considered exceptional wages.

On the theory that a piece scale, with its resulting high man-hour production, resulted in fewer jobs, the typographical union refused to continue such an arrangement. The men had to be employed on a straight hourly wage basis.

The production per man-hour dropped at once. To get the same amount of composition out, the company had to employ more operators. This was a result that was to be expected. It was but the working of human nature; with no reward to the individual for extra effort, the effort stopped.

That, largely, is the condition in all industry in the United States today when full production is so badly needed. It is human to lay down on the job when extra exertion does not bring the individual any extra reward for his effort.

Russia secures maximum man-hour production by assigning to each worker a task he must achieve, or else. As the limit is achieved the amount of production demanded is increased. The worker is kept striving, at all times, to avoid the penalty for failure. We cannot use such methods in free America, but it might be possible to work out a system under which each worker would be paid, in addition to a minimum fixed wage, a percentage of the profits based on the quantity of each worker's production.

Such a system would provide an incentive for each worker to do his utmost. Those who excelled would be paid for their excess production. It would recognize the human element that, under present conditions, is a bar to full production in American industry. It would reward the fast without penalizing the slow.

Without some method of reward for speed we will not secure full production. So long as the incapable receive as much as the capable it is just not in the cards for the capable individual to do his utmost. His production will remain at the level of his slowest co-workers.

The unions have frowned on the incentive pay idea, except as it applies to extra hours at time and one-half, as a means of encouraging production. It might be possible to sell them on a division of profits, the greater amount going to those who produce the most.

Today we have more to buy with than we have commodities to buy. Today we have more jobs than we have men to fill them. Today our greatest need is increased production. We can get that increase when we find the method of rewarding those who make possible that greater production, and display the ability to sell that method to organized labor.

RAILROADS PERMIT GRAFT IN 'LUXURY TRAIN TICKETS'

IN THE metropolitan cities they call scalping entertainment tickets a racket. What should the same system when applied to railroad accommodations be termed? The railroads operate some fine trains on fast schedules, but only that class of the public who patronize the better class of hotels, and who can afford to cross the palm of the hotel transportation clerk with a bit of folding money, can enjoy the travel luxury these trains provide. It is a "public be damned" policy in which the railroads participate and make possible. They permit the hotel transportation clerks to reserve all desirable space on these trains, to be cancelled at the last minute, if, perchance, the clerks do not find customers. It means an easy graft for the transportation clerks, but some day the railroads will pay in the form of public condemnation.

GIVE RUSSIA DOMINANCE IN EUROPE, with control of the resources and manpower of that continent, along with what she has of her own, and she becomes a nation that no other nation could defeat. Within a quarter of a century she could, and probably would, communize the world, including these United States and all the western hemispheres. Is it for that our American reds, pinks and fellow travelers are planning?

AS EVIDENCE of the importance of the professional ball player, if evidence is needed, I wanted railroad accommodations from California to Chicago the latter part of September. There were none to be had. The reason given by a railroad executive was that trains were sold out to those going east to attend the world series ball games.

MORE HAPPINESS and opportunity is found in the rural home than in the hothouses and hearth-breakers of the cities.

Football Rules No other American game approaches football in the number of rules that govern play. There are about 70 football rules, each of which, when broken, is subject to one of eight kinds of penalties.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Who Gets Off Easiest—Men or Women?

Maybe you saw that poll on who has the easiest life—men or women? Of course, the men voted that the women did, and the women vice versa.

It would be the same in our town (take any family). That Ethel envies her Missus spending the day at home, with no hot office to attend to. And Sue envies that his luncheon with the boys; and his evening glass of beer with friends (while she cleans up the dishes in the kitchen).

Of course, none of it goes very deep. That knows way deep down that the Missus has plenty of work running a house; and Sue knows that's friendly glass of beer is well-deserved relaxation after a long hard day's work.

From where I sit, most husbands and wives may grumble now and then—but they know in their hearts it's a case of live and let live, give and take, that comes out pretty even in the end.
