COUNTRY DOCTORS

EVERY classification of America's early pioneers has had considerable play-up in chronicles, stories of which have been hashed and rehashed, told and retold again. The Texas Rangers cut a mighty swath across the pages of early-day history. Trail drivers, prospectors and miners, and railroad construction crews have come in for much attention. Statesmen, county sheriffs, frontier soldiers, justice of the peace, and every other sort of character, outlaws and all—have been attributed a great amount of recognition.

Pioneer publishers and editors also have acquired much attention during the early American vintage, and indeed led a colorful life. Many times they were distracted from their objective, an occasionally, with dust a-flying, they outran a stream of hot lead from town because of an editorial in which they had advocated a certain policy for the betterment of the community.

And there were times, too, when those stubborn characters DIDN'T RUN.

THERE is also one other character who has captured much limelight, but not enough, regardless of the region whether it be in the timber country or the plains areas—from one end of the Nation to the other. And that character is the OLD COUNTRY DOCTOR. It is needless to say here that a Country Doctor was a pioneer doctor, for a Country Doctor today are as scarce as hen's teeth. That rugged professional individual must not be confused with the modern doctor, and cannot be forgotten, because of his early interesting activities, and even as late as a decade or two after the turn of the century. It seems from all accounts, and very definitely from all experience, that they were a handicapped profession in those early days and grappled with gigantic obstacles in their every move.

They fell out of bed early in the morning—if, indeed they had been was something for a major scientific exploration. And, of course, the Country Doctor on an emergency call and those fellows were very loyal to their profession—once caught unable to travel due to a failure of the new-fangled mechanism, swore off, and always thereafter relied upon the old faithful, the horse and buggy—slow but sure, in his way of thinking. The early-day profession always kept the best of horses to pull the buggies over the country, and believed in plying the road to build speed into the equipment.

I remember the awesome accident that occurred in our immediate family. We lived on an farm six miles from the small village, in the country. It was Thanksgiving Day, and a day typical of that was might, dream about as having transpired during the early days of the pilgrims, when the forefathers gathered and gave thanks for their first bountiful crop from the soil of this Nation. My oldest brother, first of the family, was out squirreling and hunting, and had stopped at a pear tree to eat some of the fruit from it.

While propped from the old rail fence underneath the tree, plucking from the low-hanging branches, he slipped from the zig-zag fence structure. The old shotgun, which he was using as a support, slipped and exploded into his chest. A neighbor called the Country Doctor, over the rural telephone system. It was a useless call. But, nevertheless, despite my sadness and tears, I shall never forget the picture of the Old Country Doctor, as it is branded in my memory, as he sped to the scene.

He was standing upright in the trap buggy, with the fleet animal in a dead run. His coat tail streamed behind, almost in straight lines. His black, bow tie strings fluttered around his neck. His hat was gone. He, at each jump of the poor buggy animal, applied the whip with resounding lashes upon the back and sides of the exhausted and faltering animal. He had made the six-mile-run in record time, a record that was talked about for years.

But it was just another of the many useless calls which the Old Country Doctors made. They spared nothing, contributed their utmost, but not enough. Those old fellows should have a medal of honor as big as the Nation's Capitol erected somewhere, for their heart was just as big as the plaque should be and their intentions even better, even though that heart was sometimes sort of raced up with the stimulants of the product of the community's best distillery—if for no other purpose than to be able to carry on and serve the community under exhausted conditions.

But, anyway, what I started to tell was a tale which one of those Country Doctors handed me a few years back. He was aged and of the witty-type. His tales were many. He had spent many years in his profession, having practiced almost as long as man's allotted time.

One night in a little Northeast Texas town, it was snowing and a very cold blizzard was sweeping down, with its most ferocious forces over the countryside. The doctor, at nightfall, seemed to account for all of his patients—including those whom the stork might have listed—and all seemed well for the occasion. He roasted his feet by the coals in the huge fireplace of the living room, which in most cases was also the office of the profession, and counted himself fortunate and was thankful that he did not have to venture into the frigid night. He rested in a comfortable chair before the fire, with peace of mind, that all was well. He soon retired.

However, it was too good to be true. Soon a heavy rapping sounded on the front door. The Country Doctor arose from bed, pattered through the fireplace room, in flannel gown-tail, and made for the door. He knew instantaneously it could mean nothing short of an emergency—somebody needed his profession, for a call at such a time of the night with a storm raging, could spell nothing but trouble.

He met at the door a countryman, from far back in the woods, six or eight miles, who had made the awful trip, through the snow storm, into the village to get the doctor. The man related his neighbor was sick, had swelling of the stomach, couldn't breathe, and his middle portions seemed to become larger by the moment, and the pains mounted to excruciating proportions.

The night traveler, who stood at the door clad in a garment of everything that would keep him warm, had hitched up a team of mules to the old Leudinus wagon, and braved the storm for the doctor.

Few words were spoken. And they, the two, the Country Doctor and the loyal neighbor of the sick man, wrapped themselves up as best they could in the wagon, and headed back into the cold, dark, stormy night, for the sick man's cabin.

Upon entry, the Country Doctor looked around the large, plain room. A dim coal oil lamp afforded some light. Nothing much was in it except a bed in one corner, in it were winter woodchoppers laid upon it, groaning and moaning, grunting for breath, rubbing his stomach between fits of pain, and suffering intolerable misery. The housewife stood about, wringing her hands nervously in the folds of her coat apron. A roaring fire was in the stove in the diagonal corner of the large room. A bucket of water with dipper was there. A shoe room was scabbled on the back of the cabin, which served as a kitchen and dining room. The cook stove within also had a roaring fire in it. The doctor entered and looked around. A huge bowl sat in the middle of the crude dining table, which had, not long before, contained a bountiful supply of boiled Whippoorwill peas—speckled peas! A few scraps of dry corn pone were near by.

The floor of the cabin was clean, and much of the area had nothing at all upon it. Plain, bare planks comprised the floor space of the room.

After a short conversation with the housewife, concerning such things as what the sick man had eaten for supper, the Country Doctor diagnosed, to himself. He made for his satchel of medical supplies, and pulled out a stomach pump. He was not exactly sure just why he had brought it along on the emergency trip—instant of those fellows. YES! With it, he went to work. Soon the dry peas began to roll from the ally patient's mouth, upon the floor, bouncing and rolling about, scattering and rattling, as they were pumped from the countryman's bloated stomach upon the plain plank floor. The reverberations of the peas as they rattled upon the floor told a tale. It seemed there must have been a half-bushel of them. Hard, dry peas!

With the floor covered with peas, the poor victim of misery, on the bed, soon began to take on a much more restless appearance, and seemed at ease, smiled a little, and was well.

That night in that isolated cabin in a clearing in the timber country, two storms abated—the snow storm and the storm within the countryman's stomach! The Country Doctor was well pleased, his mission was accomplished. He rendered advice, as the profession was wont to do, before departing.

"Next time, John," he patriarchally spoke in firm-sounding tones, "you come in from chopping wood and working hard all day, don't eat too many boiled, dry peas! Especially, then, don't go and sit by the hot fire, get hot, drink lots

Shrecongost to attend Leaders Conference

The Legislative Council at its meeting of May 24 authorized the attendance of Representative William G. Shrecongost of Lincoln County, minority whip of the House, to the National Legislative Leaders Conference, June 14 thru 18, in Seattle, Washington. This conference is composed of legislative leaders from the 50 states who meet annually to discuss common problems facing state legislatures. Among the topics to be discussed at this meeting will be public school finance, public welfare and health, traffic safety, and interstate compact. The mutual exchange of problems, possible solutions, and techniques, by state legislative leaders is intended to assist each individual state in finding solutions to its problems.

The Legislative Council, a bipartisan committee of legislators which operates between sessions, requires a written report from those persons it sends to such conferences in order that the knowledge received may be shared with other members of the legislature.

It's the principle of man—therefore the Nation—that counts. As great of times must be maintained.

Ancho 4-H Jr. Ranchers meet

By Eric R. Lynch

The Ancho Jr. Ranchers met April 23 at the Knight Ranch for a short business meeting. At this time plans were made for those who plan to attend summer camp. The business meeting was adjourned and leader, Nancy Knight, assisted by Roldo Straley drove the 4-Hers to Ancho. They stopped by Jackie's store and were refreshed with a cold pop. Then they drove over to Mr. Bryan Hightowers for judging trials, classes of registered cows. Roldo, assistant judge, helped in placing and took reasons. Gary Hightower also coached the young members with their judging. The 4-Hers and leader would like to convey a special note of thanks to Mr. Bryan and Mrs. John Allen Hightower for the trouble and extra work they went to in order to gather the stock and have them ready for the boys to judge.

PROFILE OF A STATE

Photography by Harvey Caplin • Text by George Fitzpatrick

The flat prairie of southeastern New Mexico held little interest for the first oil scouts who visited there in the early 1920's. But when a wildcat well heralded a new discovery in a nearby Texas county, the oil scouts took a second look. And in 1927, Midwest Refining Company decided to drill. The well went below 4,000 feet and hit oil that tested 700 barrels a day. The Humble Oil Company followed with a 9,000-barrel-a-day gusher, north of the village of Hobbs, and the boom was on!

It has been a succession of booms since. New fields were opened, old fields extended. New towns sprang up, old ones expanded and doubled, tripled and quadrupled in population.

In northwestern New Mexico, there was a small boom in oil, too, in the twenties. And some development of gas to supply nearby cities. Then in the fifties, extension of gas pipe lines to California encouraged widespread wildcatting, and the boom of southeastern New Mexico was duplicated in northwestern New Mexico.

Today, gas pipe lines from southeastern and northwestern fields are supplying not only New Mexico cities, but Arizona, California and the Northwest — to the cash register tune of $28,000,000 a year. And the value of New Mexico's oil industry has grown to more than $300,000,000.

Pipelines are on the scene in copper production, too. They return water from Kennecott's Precipitation Plant to dumps for recovering copper from waste rock. Using water again and again is one of many conservation measures practiced at Kennecott.

In observance of New Mexico's Golden Anniversary of Statehood, China has asked George Fitzpatrick, editor of New Mexico Magazine, and Harvey Caplin, an outstanding photographer of the New Mexico scene, to collaborate in a series of advertisements highlighting the qualities which have made New Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert William Blatter announced the fourth coming marriage of their daughter Joyce Elizabeth to Mr. Thomas Lunear Utterback June 16 at the Presbyterian Church in Portland, Oregon. Tammie Utterback, one of four boys and we were always a group of him. He is a medical student. His parents the Tom Utterbacks, were residents here for several years. Tom was in the Soil Conservation and Pauline taught school. They moved to Albuquerque for a few years then to Portland Oregon in their present home. Dixie Sparks started her duties June 1 at Grace Williams Beauty School in Carlsbad.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gehring of Grants arrived Saturday to visit his mother, Daisy Gehring. They took her to Roswell with them in mid-afternoon. Returned home Sunday. Rev. and Mrs. Walker arrived last Thursday to make their home here and he will take over his duties at the Nazarene Church starting June 30. The Baptist Church of Capitan will hold their Vacation Bible School, June 18 through 23, 8:30 A.M. to 11:00 A.M. All ages from 3 to 16 years are invited. There will be two State workers to help with the school. There was a Youth Meeting at the Baptist Church last Tuesday night. They planned a good program which we will reveal later. Mrs. Ben Sullivan joined her sister Mrs. Carril White of Roswell May 31, and motored on to Lebanon, Mo., to visit their father who is 95 years old and active. And other relatives for two weeks. Mrs. Mattie Thorp of O'Donnell, Texas, accompanied by her brother-in-law Bill Hooper of Memphis, Texas, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Shorty McCreary last Thursday. She spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. Spirez at Ruldozo. She had her cattle here and had business to take care of. She was delighted to be here. She says hello to her many friends whom she did not get to visit. She lives in O'Donnell, Texas, with her aged mother who needs her. We miss you Mattie and hope you will return someday to live. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leflo Sr. attended the funeral of their new-nephew's daughter, 12 year old, Clarotta Hicks in Silver City, May 22. Her mother is a teacher at Roswell where she was drowned May 23. She and a girl friend were swimming and had got out and were going to go home and she said one more dip and turned and ran to the water and she went down. Her friend tried to save her but she fought so she was unable to do any thing and ran for help. She was laid to rest at the Silver City Cemetery, May 23. Those attending besides the Leffles were her grandmother Mrs. Edna Littleton of Carrizozo, her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hicks of Tucuman, Mr. and Mrs. Rollo Ward and Floyd Littleton of Alamogordo, and Buddie Ward of Roswell. Mr. and Mrs. Jack Shaw and Diane left Saturday to attend the graduation, the Ball, and all of the ceremonies at the Military Institute in Roswell where Jeff went this year. He had only been home once. He returned Sunday with them for the summer. Mrs. Maude Clark left by bus last Thursday to meet her sister in Abilene, Texas, and they both went on by bus to spend two weeks with their two sisters in Alabama. Mr. and Mrs. Lester Greer of El Paso brought her father Tom Brown, 67 yrs. old to his home in Tan Bar Canyon in the White Mts. for a while. He loves it there and will stay as long as he can. His daughter will let him. Lester has been ill so they had to return to visit his Dr. the 23. Robert Runnels has Mrs. Alice Wrights pickup running now and she can get to town once in a while. She was snowed in all winter but liked it. Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Rector and 4-year-old son Alan of Roswell parked their trailer house in Alice Wrights yard and rode horses for one week. They do that each summer. Mr. and Mrs. Pat Fulgo of Roswell were guests of Alice Wright May 27. Sunday guests of the Champ Ferguson were Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hartley and son Jay of Las Cruces, and Mack Brazel and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Branley. Guests of the Champ Ferguson at their ranch home last Thursday night were Mr. and Mrs. Wallie Ferguson and Lisa Ann and his mother Louisa Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Titworth of Tinnie, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Stalon and Cherry of Dallas and Freddie Titworth and a boy friend. ### Mining is a very complex business

By Walter Hubbard

Diverging a bit, but to emphasize this word, right-thing, as first to show how important the right approach is to a success...

Over 50 years ago, a certain mining company found it certain to have geologists make studies before mining engineers took over...

In another case, a small mining company, who was mining cinnabar (mercury sulfide), found their vein pinched out...

IN ANOTHER CASE, this same geologist was called all the way from Calif. to Utah to examine a property...

ALTHOUGH THERE are many facets to the complex business of mining, ore-dressing and treatment...
