Rainfall under half of 'normal'

Is it dry hereabouts?

Emphatically, yes, is the answer from State Climatologist Frank Houghton of Las Cruces.

He reported this week that the Carrizozo area should have had by now, by "normal" standards, 3.84 inches of rain.

Rainfall thus far this year totals but 1.20 inches, Houghton said.

Ranges are mostly "very dry" in all areas of the state, the New Mexico Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said this week, adding:

"While scattered showers were reported in several areas last week, moisture is needed to 'green up' grass. Livestock are holding up well, with condition mostly fair to good. Supplemental feeding continues in all areas."

Specifically for Lincoln County, the reporting service had these comments from its various local sources:

"Range short and no old grass, but still better than this time last year. Some deep moisture. Some green grass. Feeding everything. Old hay $40 in the barn. Stock in good shape and ewes have lots of milk. So far a good lambing. Lambing looks good, but many cows will calve late because of the dry summer last year. Grass mostly gone. Weeds have stopped growing. Expect to have a bumper lamb crop. Lots of twins."

Fort Stanton seeks federal bed-funding

Fort Stanton -- Jerry Myers, administrator of the Fort Stanton Hospital and Training School, reports that plans are being made to apply for federal funds to qualify 120 beds at the state facility.

Myers said an application for licensing the beds as an Intermediate Care Facility under the Medicaid (Title XVI) program has been submitted and is being processed. Residents of Fort Stanton are being transferred into the unit as soon as they can be certified as needing the level of care provided in th ICF unit.

In an Intermediate Care Facility the patients require some medical help, but not as extensive coverage as would require a registered nurse.

Myers estimated that 120 residents could qualify for this level of care, and he said there will be a continual process of qualifying being conducted. "This will involve some transfers of residents, but in all cases parental approval is obtained."

The present resident population of 182 will remain "reasonably stable," according to Myers.

Plans have been approved for additional staffing for the unit as required. It is anticipated than a Licensed Practical Nurse and five attendants will be needed in the near future, he said.

Myers added that remodeling, landscaping of the grounds and the purchase of new equipment, including motor vehicles, also is underway. "Part of the new equipment will be purchased from the proceeds of last month's auction at Fort Stanton," he said.

Myers also said that it was a pleasure to be with the people in Lincoln County, and that he plans to talk to every group possible in the community. He was appointed recently.

FORT STANTON -- The New Mexico Department of Hospitals and Institutions has approved a budget totaling $926,318 for operation of Fort Stanton in the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The budget estimates the state institution will spend $81,173 less than the budget total during the year it covers.

The budget increases jobs at Fort Stanton by eight -- for a total staff of 136.

Replacement of vehicles and related equipment is ticketed in the budget at $15,000, a department spokseman said.

A total of 52 Democrats are in the 18-to-20 bracket and there were 39 youthful GOPers registering.

Here is the precinct-by-precinct breakdown, by party preference:

A total of 166 voters declined to state a party choice.

Two Capitan area voters are registered in "minor party" categories.

A Meeting of Minds . . .

Carrizozo Mayor Johnson Stearns presided Tuesday at a City Hall meeting at which a group of Carrizozo residents planned formation of a "Minority Enterprise" corporation to build and operate an industry here. Representatives of three management firms met with the group, including Garr Nunn (center) and Gus Bowman. The proposed plant would seek manufacturing contracts with the federal government under a special program which funnels such contracts into areas with high rates of unemployment.

Carrizozo heaves on own bootstraps

Carrizozo Tuesday gave a mighty upward heave on its own bootstraps -- an effort aimed at the building and operation of a so-called "Minority Enterprise" manufacturing plant in the village's industrial park site.

A group of Carrizozo residents met at City Hall with representatives of three management specialist firms -- Amerind, Land Aire Enterprises and NPW and Associates Amerind Management and Data Systems, Inc., Land Air Enterprises and NPW and Associates -- and with Jim Boyer of Albuquerque, a representative of U. S. Senator Joe Montoya.

Myor Johnson Sterns presided at the all-afternoon meeting at which it was agreed, after presentations by the firms, to form a "minority enterprise" corporation which will seek, under a federal law which seeks to channel certain federal contracts into areas of high unemployment, to create a Carrizozo-based industrial plant.

Boyer told the meeting that federal law provides that towns like Carrizozo, once it has shown the capability of operating such a plant, can obtain federal manufacturing contracts without competitive bidding.

For example, the Sandia Indians are now manufacturing equipment for the U. S. Post Office, Boyer said. And the northeastern New Mexico town of Mora has recently accomplished what Carrizozo now seeks to do in the plan proposed Tuesday.

Under federal law, blacks, Spanish-Americans, Indians or other minority groups living in areas of continuing substantial unemployment may form corporations in which they have majority control and manufacture items which the federal government ordinarily would offer for bidding competitively in a sheltered, non-competitive manner for a period of five year.

After five year, Boyer told the Tuesday meeting, it is hoped that the plant would have reached the point at which it could operate in the free, private-sector market.

It was agreed at the Tuesday meeting that the existing Industrial Foundation will be dissolved, its funds channeled into the new proposed corporation with sufficient shares offered to persons of Spanish surnames to qualify for the minority enterprise provisions of federal law.

The meeting ended with that decision and with a concensus established to the effect that one of the management firms represented at the meeting will be retained to advise the new organization.

Approximately 35 persons attended the meeting and heard from, in addition to Boyer, Bob Smith of Amerind, Garr Nunn of NPW and Gus Bowman of Land Air, Albuquerque-based firms specializing in the minority enterprise management field.

Against Unemployment:

Domenici urges '30s-style try

A Republican candidate for the U. S. Senate nomination told Carrizozo Rotarians last week that federal programs aimed at soling New Mexico's massive unemployment problem have been "mostly failures."

Pete V. Domenici, former Albuquerque mayor and the 1970 GOP gubernatorial nominee, said a total of $6 million was spent in New Mexico by the federal government last year on a series of related approaches to the no-jobs situation -- JOBS, Job Corps, Operation Mainstream, Work Incentive and a Concentrated Employment Program.

"These are good programs," the candidate said, "but have little impact and effect where, as in New Mexico, there are no jobs."

Domenici said in the federal 1971 fiscal year, $1 million was spent in Operation Mainstream, $4 million on the Concentrated Employment Program and about $1 million in Job Corps activities.

Despite this spending, Domenici said unemployment in some areas of New Mexico "hovers around 30 per cent, certainly the equivalent of the Great Depression."

And he called for a revival of Depression-style public works programs: "Instead of paying people who are not working as the present system does, let's put them to work for our state, cities, counties and schools, doing things that must be done within our state -- things that will benefit all our citizens."

Domenici cited the record of the Roosevelt-era Public Works Administration, Works Progress Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps and similar agencies:

"They did the job. Some 8.5 million Americans were employed by these programs. And instead of spending their time in useless training sessions, they accomplished lots of good things . . .

"Eight thousand parks and 12,500 playgrounds were built or improved.

"One thousand libraries were built or improved.

"One hundred and twenty-seven million trees were planted on lands that had been stripped of timber."

Such an approach, said Domenici, would be particularly adaptable to states like New Mexico where unemployment is high, average income is low and "manpower training programs cannot succeed because jobs are not available," even after workers are trained.

In practice, Domenici's notion would give states considerably more control of federal funds spent in the attempt ot overcome unemployment difficulties.

He suggested that each state could prepare annually alternative uses of federal manpower-development and other such funds.

"Their uses would include creation of jobs in the public sector . . .

"This plan would do two things: it would enable states to find local solutions for local problems. And it would enable states to do vitally needed work on public buildings, in parks and in public institutions -- work the government must eventually do."

Domenici said the $6 million spent on training and related programs in New Mexico last year by the federal government "could have paid $500 a month to each of 1,000 persons for a full year -- and other funds could have been used in the same way."

He added that persons employed in this way "could perhaps learn a skill and most assuredly could be a reservior labor force available for private sector jobs as they develop.

"This plan, of course, can never replace private industry . . .It would, however, create jobs -- with good wages -- for New Mexicans, while the leadership of this state works diligently to bring private, clean industry to New Mexico."

Boiled down, said Domenici, what is needed is a solution to the unemployment problem that would use federal funds to implement local ideas and initiative.

Domenici opened his Rotary speech with a brief statement of support for President Nixon's actions in mining North Vietnam's harbors and air interdiction of North Vietnam's interior supply lines from inside Asia.

At the talk's close he replied to questions from Rotarians, most of them concerned with recent student unrest at the University of New Mexico.

Meantime, from Albuquerque, a Democrat who hopes to win that party's U. S. Senate nomination, has proposed an eight-part "plan for economic development in New Mexico."

Congressman Thomas C. Morris said "economic development is the answer to many of our problems . . ."

His plan includes:

"Appointment of a bi-partisan committee of New Mexicans and a national personal advisory committee of business executives from outside the state to work together in the search for new industry.

"Appointment of native New Mexican Tomlinson Fort, retired senior vice-president of the Westinghouse Corp., as head of the out-of-state committee.

"Personal contact as a Senator of the heads of the 500 largest corporations in the nation to outline the advantages of locating in New Mexico.

"Intensive effort to remedy the debilitating shortage of long-term capital in the state.

"A joint venture by the congressional delegation and the New Mexico Legislature to pass an enabling act allowing investment of part of the permanent school fund in New Mexico businesses. This would require an amendment to the State Investment Act, and an amendment would have far-reaching beneficial effect on the availability of capital.

"A law that would require the General Services Administration and Department of Defense to give preferential treatment on contracts to companies that agree to place part of their work in towns of less than 50,000 people.

U. S. SENATE CANDIDATE Pete Domenici spoke last week to Carrizozo Rotary Club members, urging a federally-funded, state-supervised system of public and conservation works to solve unemployment problems in states like New Mexico.

New Mexico economy: everybody's talking

by Lyman Jones

Concern for the state of New Mexico's economy came from all compass points this week -- like winds converging on a meterological "low" pressure area.

Most concern was expressed about a continuing depressed economic status of the state's small towns and villages -- places like Carrizozo, Mountainair, Estancia, Tularosa, Capitan, Lincoln, Hondo, Encino . . .

There was comment from the political arena as the candidates neared the primary elections moment of truth. There was comment from Santa Fe, from Albuquerque, from Las Cruces -- some of it official, some of it private -- but all of it, even that buried in the political rhetoric, apparently concerned.

Democratic U. S. Senator Joe Montoya, speaking last weekend as Socorro to an audience of partisan Democrats, slammed the Nixon administration with an economic bat. Said Montoya:

"The national administration has shown no concern for the plight of the unemployed of this nation. Over five million remain unemployed and steps must be taken immediately to take care of this problem.

"The theme of the national administration seems to run like this: Millions of dollars for Lockheed, the Pennsylvania and concessions to the ITT, but for the poor and the low-income wage earners not even compassion."

Meantime, speaking at Carrizozo, a statewide Republican political figure -- U. S. Senate candidate Pete V. Domenici -- said unemployment in many New Mexico small communities approaches the jobless rate of the Depression of the 1930s.

Domenici proposes a state-overseen use of federal funds in a public works and conservation program like those of the New Deal days (see related article, Page 1).

Governor David Cargo this week continued to press his attack against what he has called the export of New Mexico's colleges and universities to other states. He played that theme at University of New Mexico Commencement exercises last week as he did a week earlier from Santa Fe.

And Democratic primary candidate Thomas Morris has issued a campaign document calling for an eight-point "plan for economic development" which also picked up Cargo's export-of-youngsters theme.

Other politicoes, seeking offices large and small, were saying similar things on the hustings over the state.

A team of professional observers from New Mexico State University had the week's brightest observations. NMSU Agriculture economists last week published a report based on a deep plumbing of New Mexico's farm and ranch economic situation.

And they found it healthy and huge -- with a total impact of $1 billion annually (based on proved 1970 statistics).

The economists said the total agricultural picture in New Mexico ought to impress even Howard Hughes.

This is what they found:

The state's farmers and ranchers gross more than $500 million each year. They buy feeds, fertilizers, equipment, services, electric power, lumber and hardware, stimulating another $315 million in personal incomes. And on top of that, raw products from New Mexico's agriculture, moving to the consumer through trade and processing, create an additional $208 million in payrolls.

The NMSU economists said that as this huge impact is made, the quality of the environment is not sacrificed. Rather, it is improved through conservation practices and good soil and range management, they say.

Take a guess at the cash investment farmers and ranch operators have in their real estate. If you said $500 million, you'd be wrong, but, if you said $2 billion, you'd hit the nail right on the head. Altogether, New Mexico's agricultural capital investment totals of $2.75 billion.

The capital investment per farm worker in the United States averages $69,000. In New Mexico, however, the average is almost double that--$126,000.

Of the state's many agricultural products in 1970, beef cattle brought in the largest gross income--more than $325 million. The state's major cash crops--cotton, potatoes, onions, pecans, apples, peanuts, chile and lettuce--were valued at $41 million.

Agricultural development potential in the state is high. An example is Northwestern New Mexico. Water from the Navajo Indian Irrigation Project is making possible the development of 110,000 acres of tribal lands there. Almost every New Mexico county contains land that could well be irrigated, should a way be found for increasing the state's water supply.

These water observations were darkened somewhat by some remarks from another source: NMSU Professor Frank Osterhoudt, writing in the University of New Mexico's Bureau of Business Research publication "New Mexico Business," said that in some counties -- principally Curry and Roosevelt -- New Mexicans are "mining" underground water.

By this, he meant that water is being taken from underground reservoirs not being replenished naturally.

A similar water shortage threat looms to a lesser extent, Osterhoudt said, in the Tularosa Basin.

New phone book pictures grass

New Mountain Bell telephone books will be delivered beginning June 29 in Carrizozo, Cloudcroft, Tularosa, Mayhill and Alamogordo.

But persons wishing to be listed in the white pages section of the book have only until May 23 to get that chore done.

Mountain Bell's manager at Carrizozo, Wesley Lindsay, said that is the cutoff date past which listings will be too late to make the book.

The front cover of the new book will be a "grassy" one. It features a closeup by Denver photographer Jim Kazel of Indian Rice grass in a sandy terrain with an expanse of blue sky in the background.

The back cover, said Lindsay, "is designed to enourage telephone users to make full use of the directory."

The new book includes a newly-revised civic section with information about the cities, a call-guide, an index to yellow pages listings and a ZIP code map.

Lo mato luego. Vamanos!

Little Gabino Hernandez claimed Dona Ana routed Pancho Villa's Dorados with a broom handle. That was his favorite way to tell it, but there were some other circumstances involved.

The scene of the adventure was an isolated rancho in the State of San Luis, Mexico, about the year 1914. His Dona Ana was a very comely blue eyed American lady with a husky husband called Ben, and a string bean son of 13 or so.

Anna Marie Acker owed much of her popularity to the fact that she gathered all the "old clothes" the other colonists were leaving behind and had Gabino's mother, Teodora, rip out the seams, and wash and iron the pieces. This lady was an accomplished seamstress, and could look at a child, boy or girl, and send him or her home from the commissary she ran, wearing a new dress or a new shirt, at no cost.

It was 80 miles by horse to a doctor so Ben Acker did the best he could for injury or illness, and it was really considerable. He had a good education, as did his wife.

Young Leroy had an unlimited supply of cartridges from deserters from the Mexican fighting factions. The going rate for 7mm cartridges was three centavos and a fresh egg sold for 3 cents. Mrs. Acker had around 300 white leghorns. A peddler came by driving two pack burros once a week and bought all the eggs. He sold or traded them to the Federal garrison and usually had from 10 to 40 "cartuchos" when he came.

A Mexican deserter dared not be seen with a rifle, so the going price for Mauser rifles was from 12 to 25 pesos. The Acker's usually had from two to four guns oiled, loaded and scattered about.

Give a lad all the cartrides he wants and him a boy that loved to shoot, and you can figure the answer to that. There were about two deer a month to divide among the ranch and farm hands, free of course.

On this bright morning Teodora screamed "Bandidos, los caballos." Everyone rushed to look at an armed party with crossed bandoleers of shiny brass cartridges driving the Acker horse herd toward the log corral. They were still some distance away when mother Acker grabbed an old hoe handle and shouted to her husband that she was going to close the corral gate and turn out the horses, because they would not shoot her.

According to plan, her son was already racing out of the house on the opposite side from the horsemen throught the orange grove to his chosen spot where he had his seven millimeter Mauser parked in a giant of a tree that look like a great unbrella on a short stem. No one could possible see him where he sat behind two earth filled sacks with a dozen strip clips of cartridges on the brim of his sombrero. The distance to the corral was under 100 yards, clear and open.

Dona Ana and the little brown boy arrived at the corral about the same time her son got into position, and with the help of Gabino managed to get two of the four-inch thick bamboo 'trankas' in place across the gate, then she said to her assistant, 'Vete pronto, escondete aprisa." He only went about 10 feet to where he was out of sight behind a splice in the palm log fence where he hastily gathered three small stones. He never thought he was brave.

Our heroine moved out to meet the running horses with two half airedale dogs about 10 feet on either side of her, and there she started twirling her hoe handle like a lasso.

In the mean time her husband arrived behind his son's position and told him to see that no rope was thrown on his mother, or that a shot was fired at her. Dad Acker said, "Don't shoot, son, unless you feel you must to protect her. I'll leave her protection to you. If shooting starts, in my slow deliberate way I will just concentrate on emptying saddles from over to your left."

Ben was armed with a good long barrel 30-Winchester, and though slow, seldom missed. The kid was a "snap shooter" who handled a rifle like a dove hunter would his scattergun.

The old pot bellied lead mare took one look at the twirling stick, and closed gate, then whirled to the left at full speed while yet a good 100 feet away. The assorted herd of 50 odd horses, colts and mules struck right behind her in a cloud of dust. Two cowboy types cast their loops but missed by 20 feet. The herd would be hard to handle now because they knew they were not wanted in the corral, and the Villistas were on jaded horses.

The mounted men came to a stop about 40 feet in front of Anna Marie and she walked backwards toward one of the tall gate posts and suddenly realised she might be roped, so she kept her hoe handle crosswise above her head. The faithful dogs never barked once, but they held their positions to one side and little in front. Their ruff's stood up like they smelled jaguar, but they did not bark. They awaited the command, but a half dozen curs really barked furiously, charging about.

The band of 12 armed men formed a cluster where they argued for some time and shouted for Mrs. Acker to get out of the way while she was still able to move on her own power. She just shook her head from side to side, "no." The pow-wow seemed to go on for ages but likely only last 15 or 20 minutes and it was with wild gestures and hand motions.

Of course the man and boy under the orange trees could not hear any of it except the shouts for her to move from the gate. Finally the whole group departed in the direction from which they had appeared. Ben soon left his place of concealment and returned to the adobe house.

Anna took time now to put on her big blue sunbonnet that had been handing far down her back by the knotted ends of the strings, and Gabino hastened by a circuituous route to tell his hunting buddy all about it.

He was greeted with the question, "What were the rocks for, Muchacho?" From here on Gabino took up the narrative, "Las piedras, I thought I might spoil a rope throw, long enough for you to start shooting. The first thing the two ladrones with riatas wanted to do was rope Dona Ana and lead her away from the gate out into the pasture.

Their Teniente--that is what they called their boss-said "Pendejo, do you just want to start a battle. Some of these colonist's are conejos, but we were warned at Santa Clara that it is different here. These are still here and they have their horses yet. Also, that the woman's son only shoots running deer. You do not see a man any place and we were also told the laborers would fight against us. We can be sure there are at least two armed men watching us now with rifles ready."

Gabino said a couple of guarachudos suggested they just walk over gently and lead the senora away, then the Teniente wanted to know what they planned for the dogs. Sencillo, they would just shoot the dogs first. Their head man said that was "Un gran idea. Those Americans looking at you down those cocked rifles will know it is dogs you are meaning to harm."

He further told them that when they tried it he wanted to be a kilometer away from there. The one who had the idea quickly moved his hand far from his pretty pearly, "pistola" handle. Still another suggested they move away a short way, dismount, and assault the rancho, they were muchos and only dos gringoes.

The lieutenant said it was another fool idea. "We need three or four fresh horses. We do not know where the defenders are located, and there may be four or five because their laborers will fight for them if they are here, so we lose several men just to find out. Our 'compromise' is to fight and win the Revolution and not fight colonists."

"Sure, we a dozen and we might win a battle here, and at the same time make it a little easier for the Federales. If any one of you wants to hint I am a coward, Lo mato luego! Vamanos."

Foot note: Dona Ana passed away at Carrizozo Hospital age 92 in June 1971. The 1918 "flu" epidemic caught loyal Gabino.

Candidate will stump hereabout

Ed Presson, who seeks the Republican nomination for the Second District Congressional seat, campaigned last week in the Hondo Valley area and has scheduled a visit to Carrizozo for next week.

Presson will spend the morning of May 23 in Carrizozo, he said, because of what he called "Lincoln County's fine record of participation" in GOP primary balloting. He said Lincoln County has "top priority" with him.

"Lincoln County cannot any longer be ignored," Presson said. And he pledged "efforts to attract job-producing businesses, such as those of the Lincoln County development Association, will be my first priority as Representative."

Foods speciality class busy one

Eleven members of the Foods Specialty class at Carrizozo High School have been training second semester to make dessert items as ordered by community people.

They have made banana-nut bread, chocolate covered caramels (turtles), chocolate covered cream candy and finally decorated cakes. The decorated cakes took the form of cakes cut and shaped into butterflies, bunnies, bears, (like the Carrizozo Grizzly) and similar shapes.

As the semester was drawing to a close, there were so many orders for shaped, decorated cakes that the group which had specialized in this order was not able to fill all the orders at school.

Lorena Chavez and Carla Stuteville took six orders and prepared them during this past week as Mother's Day cakes, thus earning some money for themselves. These cakes, too, were formed according to the orders received.

The class filled so many orders that the income received was enough to offset most of the expense of learning their specialty work. Class members were Gloria Ortiz, Liz Ortiz, Mary Ann Padilla, Barbara Knight, LuEllen Harkey, Shawn Lock, Carol Sidwell, Kathy McBride and Geneva Narvaez. One of these class members, Shawn Lock, has now enrolled in TVI in Albuquerque, majoring in Culinary Arts.

The course was originated by Mrs. Emma Catherine Lawson, home economics teacher. It is planned to be expanded next year into a full year, two-period course that will also train enrollees to keep accurate records of their expenses and income to meet IRS standards. They will have work that will enable them to take specialty orders to fill from their homes or to do actual catering on a limited basis.

Lo mato luego. Vamanos!

Little Gabino Hernandez claimed Dona Ana routed Pancho Villa's Dorados with a broom handle. That was his favorite way to tell it, but there were some other circumstances involved.

The scene of the adventure was an isolated rancho in the State of San Luis, Mexico, about the year 1914. His Dona Ana was a very comely blue eyed American lady with a husky husband called Ben, and a string bean son of 13 or so.

Anna Marie Acker owed much of her popularity to the fact that she gathered all the old clothes the other colonists were leaving behind and had Gabino's mother, Teodora, rip out the seams, and wash and iron the pieces. This lady was an accomplished seamstress, and could look at a child, boy or girl, and send him or her home from the commissary she ran, wearing a new dress or a new shirt, at no cost.

It was 80 miles by horse to a doctor so Ben Acker did the best he could for injury or illness, and it was really considerable. He had a good education, as did his wife.

Young Leroy had an unlimited supply of cartridges from deserters from the Mexican fighting factions. The going rate for 7mm cartridges was three centavos and a fresh egg sold for 3 cents. Mrs. Acker had around 300 white leghorns. A peddler came by driving two pack burros once a week and bought all the eggs. He sold or traded them to the Federal garrison and usually had from 10 to 40 "cartuchos" when he came.

A Mexican deserter dared not be seen with a rifle, so the going price for Mauser rifles was from 12 to 25 pesos. The Acker's usually had from two to four guns oiled, loaded and scattered about.

Give a lad all the cartrides he wants and him a boy that loved to shoot, and you can figure the answer to that. There were about two deer a month to divide among the ranch and farm hands, free of course.

On this bright morning Teodora screamed "Bandidos, los caballos." Everyone rushed to look at an armed party with crossed bandoleers of shiny brass cartridges driving the Acker horse herd toward the log corral. They were still some distance away when mother Acker grabbed an old hoe handle and shouted to her husband that she was going to close the corral gate and turn out the horses, because they would not shoot her.

According to plan, her son was already racing out of the house on the opposite side from the horsemen throught the orange grove to his chosen spot where he had his seven millimeter Mauser parked in a giant of a tree that look like a great unbrella on a short stem. No one could possible see him where he sat behind two earth filled sacks with a dozen strip clips of cartridges on the brim of his sombrero. The distance to the corral was under 100 yards, clear and open.

Dona Ana and the little brown boy arrived at the corral about the same time her son got into position, and with the help of Gabino managed to get two of the four-inch thick bamboo 'trankas' in place across the gate, then she said to her assistant, 'Vete pronto, escondete aprisa." He only went about 10 feet to where he was out of sight behind a splice in the palm log fence where he hastily gathered three small stones. He never thought he was brave.

Our heroine moved out to meet the running horses with two half airedale dogs about 10 feet on either side of her, and there she started twirling her hoe handle like a lasso.

In the mean time her husband arrived behind his son's position and told him to see that no rope was thrown on his mother, or that a shot was fired at her. Dad Acker said, "Don't shoot, son, unless you feel you must to protect her. I'll leave her protection to you. If shooting starts, in my slow deliberate way I will just concentrate on emptying saddles from over to your left."

Ben was armed with a good long barrel 30-Winchester, and though slow, seldom missed. The kid was a "snap shooter" who handled a rifle like a dove hunter would his scattergun.

The old pot bellied lead mare took one look at the twirling stick, and closed gate, then whirled to the left at full speed while yet a good 100 feet away. The assorted herd of 50 odd horses, colts and mules struck right behind her in a cloud of dust. Two cowboy types cast their loops but missed by 20 feet. The herd would be hard to handle now because they knew they were not wanted in the corral, and the Villistas were on jaded horses.

The mounted men came to a stop about 40 feet in front of Anna Marie and she walked backwards toward one of the tall gate posts and suddenly realised she might be roped, so she kept her hoe handle crosswise above her head. The faithful dogs never barked once, but they held their positions to one side and little in front. Their ruff's stood up like they smelled jaguar, but they did not bark. They awaited the command, but a half dozen curs really barked furiously, charging about.

The band of 12 armed men formed a cluster where they argued for some time and shouted for Mrs. Acker to get out of the way while she was still able to move on her own power. She just shook her head from side to side, "no." The pow-wow seemed to go on for ages but likely only last 15 or 20 minutes and it was with wild gestures and hand motions.

Inside the capital . . .

Santa Fe--Atty. Gen. David Norvell of Clovis and Santa Fe says he and Jack Daniels of Hobbs are "neck and neck" in the Democratic U. S. Senate race.

Moderate-liberal Norvell rates Lt. Gov. Robert Mondragon a close third. Norvell says Tom Morris' campaign has faded to fourth place. Albuquerquean, Morris formerly lived at Tucumcari and still owns a Quay County ranch. Norvell ranks State Treasurer Jesse D. Kornegay of Santa Fe fifth among major candidates.

Twenty-five U. S. Senate candidates are in the crowded Democratic primary field. Senate hopefuls are not required to pay the $2,550 filing fee.

New Mexico Hubert Humphrey supporters, mounting a crash presidential primary campaign, named these county coordinators: Mrs. Emily P. Sedillo of Belen, wife of District Judge Filo Sedillo, Valencia County; Lincoln County Democratic Chairman Fern Sawyer of Nogal, Lincoln County; Manuel Tarazon of Deming, Luna County, and Raymond Gutierrez, Quay County labor coordinator.

The Carpenters Union won an election as bargaining agent for part of employes at State Miners Hospital, Raton. The vote was 35-5 among eligible employes.

Reese Cagle of Clovis was named to a 3-year term on the Taxpayers Association of New Mexico board at the annual meeting in Santa Fe. State Rep. Eugene Cinelli, D-Albuquerque, told the annual session he will recommend the the Tax Study Committee review possiblity of gambling taxes as a revenue source for New Mexico. Cinelli is TSC chairman.

Valencia County Assessor Clovis Herrera of Los Lunas battled with the Valencia County Commission over a property appraisal maintenance contract in a district court suit. Herrera is a Democratic U. S. Senate candidate.

Herrera wants the county assessor's office to perform the contract. Commission Chairman Gillie Jaramillo of Belen and Commissioner Wilfred M. Chavez of Sebolleta signed a contract with American Appraisal Co. of Fort Worth. Commissioner Efren Apodaca of Valencia did not sign the agreement.

Herrera did not sign the pact. His signature is required. Herrera says the county assessor's office could perform the contract for $35,900. He says American Appraisal Co.'s bid is $43,750 for the first 2,500 parcels plus $1.10 each for additional lots. Herrera claims Horizon Corp. development alone in Valencia County this year would push the contract total to $129,000 if an award is finally approved for American Appraisal Co.

The county commission sued Herrera in Valencia County District Court. A hearing date was pending. State Senate Majority leader Tibo Chavez of Belen is American Appraisal Co.'s lawyer. Jaramillo's nephew, Robert Chavez of Belen, and Herrera's son, Jerry D. Herrera of Los Lunas, are in a 5-candidate field for the Democratic nomination for a county commission seat. Jerry Herrera is a University of New Mexico junior.

Mrs. Marjory Kirk of Deming opposes the incumbent, Mrs. Dorothy B. Holmes of Socorro, for the Republican nomination for the State Board of Education in newly reapportioned District 5--Luna, Hidalgo, Sierra, Grant, Socorro, Valencia and Catron Counties. She is the wife of ex-State Rep. Carter Kirk, a House member in 1967-70.

Mrs. Kirk calls for adoption of the career education concept in New Mexico public schools. She would equalize educational opportunity in the state's 89 school districts. Mrs. Kirk also favors improved programs for special education for physically and mentally handicapped children.

Candidates in the Democratic primary in District 5 are Mrs. Marian J. Barber, publisher of the Grants Beacon; Ernest L. Parra and Lois M. Sparman Tafoya.

A hot scrap is under way in Lea County Senate District 42 among four Lovington Democrats in the primary--ex-County Commission Chairman Don Lanford, Bill Lee, James McCrory and Ed Roberts. Finis Leroy Heidel, Lovington lawyer, is vacating the seat to run again for the Democratic nomination for a State Supreme Court post.

Jal and Eunice are in the district. The unopposed Republican primary candidate is A. C. Holder of Lovington.

Incumbent C. B. Trujillo, 40, Taos insurance agent, faces two Democratic primary opponents in newly realigned State Senate District 6--Philip G. Vargas of Taos and Carlos D. Lopez of Mora County.

The Democratic primary winner will face Penasco businessman S. Pete Sahd, unopposed for the GOP nomination, in the general election Nov. 7. Sen. Trujillo says: "My record speaks for itself." Trujillos notes he is tied with other senators for fifth in Senate seniority.

Only Sens. Tibo Chavez, I. M. (Ike) Smalley, D-Luna-Hidalgo-Sierra; Aubrey Dunn, D-Lincoln-Otero, and Alfonso T. Montoya, D-Rio Arriba-Sandoval, outrank Trujillo. Trujillo says his prospects are bright to become chairman of the powerful Legislative Finance Committee if he is reelected.

Trujillo is vice chairman of th LFC and the Senate Finance Committee now. He says: "For the first time in six years were are going in the right direction to fund public schools. We're slowly equalizing money for operation of public schools. The most important thing that has occurred in the last two legislative sessions in emergency construction money granted to districts according to need and equalizing educational opportunity." He says the money aided schools in the Taos-Mora Counties area. Legislators voted $2 million each for school construction in 1971 and 1972.

State Tourist Director Fabian Chavez says the Four Corners Regional Commission asked Congress for $1 million in fiscal 1974 for the Town of Lincoln restoration project. Plans include restoration of the McSween House, the Torreon (a Spanish rock fort), an old convent, construction of an open-air theater for historic pageants, renovation of an abandoned existing adobe school for museum and auditorium facilities and purchase of some land and buildings of historical value. Use of US-380, Lincoln's main street, would be restricted.

home garden transplant time

Las Cruces -- It's time to transplant most vegetable plants in the garden, reminds Douglas Bryant, extension horticulturist at New Mexico State University. Tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, and onions are some of the most common plants that are started in a greenhouse or hotbed and transferred to the garden by transplanting, he says.

Here are his hints for proper transplanting:

Choose transplants that are healthy and dark green in color. If you choose larger transplants, make sure they are growing in a larger container.

Note the variety and keep the varieties separated, if you choose several. Many gardeners loose the variety names before they get the plants home and cannot remember which plants are which.

All transplants will suffer transplanting "shock" as they are transferred to the cold garden soil and fluctuating spring weather. To lessen this "shock," transplant in the late afternoon, on a cloudy day, or soon after a rain.

Protect the plants for a few days with a board, shingle, or cardboard shield from the sun and strong winds. You can also use a jar, tin can, flower pot, or paper "hotcap" if frost is expected--an unlikely happening this time of year.

All plants should be thoroughly watered before transplanting and immediately after transplanting in the garden soil. Your plants will become established more rapidly if you use a "starter" fetilizer in the transplanting water.

You can prepare this starter by mixing two or three tablespoons of ordinary garden fertilizer or high phosphate fertilizer (such as 18-46-0) in a gallon of water.

Capitan Club holds install

The Capitan Woman's Club held its regular monthly meeting Thursday, May 11 at 7:30 p.m. in the club house with 9 members and guests present.

The meeting was opened with the reading of the minutes and the treasurers report, after which the outgoing president, Mrs. Kathy Dean, presented her yearly report listing the club's accomplishments during the past year.

Mrs. Carol Reamy then conducted the installation ceremonies for the incoming officers and honored those who have served the club during the past club year. The new officers are: president, Mrs. Tommy Allen; vice-president, Mrs. Kathy Dean; secretary, Mrs. Garleen Daniel; treasurer, Mrs. Daleen Huey; parlimentarian, Mrs. Pauline Britton, and historian, Mrs. Hildie Polasky.

The installation ceremonies were followed by a brief business meeting conducted by the new president, Mrs. Tommy Allen. The club voted to donate $5 to the Red Cross and to select a committee to design and build a float for the Fourth of July parade. The club also received a citation from the American Legion for its help with Girls State.

Following the business meeting, Mr. Phill Benfer and Mr. Howard Abercrombie of the Capitan S.C.S. office showed the plans for improvements and expansion of the Capitan Woman's Club Park. They explained what has been accomplished to date and what problems are now being encountered.

Refreshments were then served by Mrs. Tommy Allen and the door prize was won by Mrs. Daleen Huey. Even though there, will be no more regular club meetings until September 14, the club members will remain active with various club projects throughout the summer months.

Capitan Vaulter Places Fourth . . .

TED SISNEROS of Capitan placed fourth in the State pole vault event, after having his record erased by Jal's Dale Cates, who vaulted 13-6½ to set a new record.

Ants at home? control tips

Las Cruces -- When a colony of ants chooses for a nest, it's too often near your home. Ants frequently build their nests close to the foundation of a house, under sidewalks or in the lawn or garden, according to John J. Durkin, extension entomologist at New Mexico State University.

Ants are social insects like bees and wasps and live in colonies in the ground or wood, Durkin explains. Most ant colonies become active with the first warm weather of springs and continue their activity until the start of cold fall weather.

In general, ants are relatively harmless to the homeowner, the specialist says. But they can be annoying, especially in the kitchen and food storage areas. Extra sanitation is important in preventing worker ants from being attracted into the home in search of food.

"Most species of ants are not prticularly difficult to control," Durkin points out. "Indoors, trace the ant's line of march from the food source to the approximate next location and treat this area with a recommended insecticide. The nests may be outdoors, or in the house--within a wall, partition, under flooring or behind appliances.

WALTER JONES talks about the issues

REAPPRAISAL:

Lincoln County will need strong leadership in the next few years to see that the reappraisal program is carried out to meet state requirements. If these requirements are not met, the county could lose $140,000 or more each year. I'll see that these requirements are met and that each property owner is treated fairly.

Grizzly thinclads earn relay medal

Carrizozo High School's Grizzly tracksters ran well out of the money at last Saturday's statewide Class AA meet at Albuquerque.

But the Carrizozo medley relay team picked up a fourth place medal -- with a substitute in the race.

Rusty Leslie ran in David Roper's place. Other relay runners were Willie Gallegos, Gaby Chavez and David Lee.

The meet was won handily by Jal High School. JHS cindermen racked up five gold medals and 26 individual points, for a total of 64.

It was a repeat performance for Jal; that southeastern New Mexico team won last year in statewide competition. Buddy Briscoe of Cloudcroft won the state discus championship with a toss of 153 feet, seven inches, more than 25 feet farther than his closest competitor.

Laguna-Acoma was second in the meet. Kirtland Central was third.

In the pole vault, Ted Sisneros of Capitan saw his record 1971 leap bested by Dale Cates of Jal, the meets outsdanding performer. Cates vaulted 13 feet, six and one-half inches. Sisneros' 1971 jump was 13-3¼. Sisneros placed fourth in this year's meet with a jump of 12 feet even.

The meet summary:

Outdoor magazine focuses on fishing

Santa Fe - The emphasis is on fishing in the May-June issue of New Mexico Wildlife magazine as four articles cover different aspects of this popular sport.

With the New Mexico fishing season in full swing, anglers should note the advice in "Switch Species to Save a Fishing Trip" by Rodger McKown. He tells of a simple way to change a disappointing fishing trip into a successful "full-stringer!" trip.

For those wanting to challenge selective brown trout with artificial flies, "Brown Trout and the Fly Fisherman" provides specific suggestions on the varieties of flies to try. The author, Ralph F. Pride, details techniques learned from many years of experience in flyfishing for that species.

Anglers receive many benefits from their tax dollars, according to Department Fisheries Biologist Warren McNall. These benefits, ranging from immediate to long-term, are explained in "Tax Dollars Equal Fishing Benefit." It will help the sportsman understand how federal aid funding programs relate to his recreational opportunities.

The plastic worm is suggested to those looking for "The Deadliest Bass Lure." Step-by-step instructions on how to rig the plastic worm are featured in this article as well as a series of photos illustrating the process.

The story of New Mexico's historic international wildlife trade with Mexico is told in two separate accounts in this issue. Jack McDowell, Department Information Officer, describes the actual trade operation; 50 antelope from New Mexico were exchanged for five of Mexico's desert bighorn sheep. The capture of the sheep from a technical point of view is the subject of Biologist Gerald Gates' report.

The department's Mountain Lion Project is now underway and an insight into the project's background and goals is offered in another article by Gates. "Lions in Our Future" also takes the reader to the rugged southwestern part of the state for a look at how the habits of the mountain lion are being studied.

A report of the exotic animal populations and a profile of Southeast Area Supervisor Marion Embrey round out this issue.

As Stock Judges:

Area students star at NMSU

LAS CRUCES, -- Practice, good coaching by agriculture professor Niel Burcham and inner competition between team members are among reasons for a hgih scoring record set by New Mexico State University's livestock judging teams, according to participants.

The teams in past years have set a school record for wins in regional and national contests. More recent honors include first place at the San Francisco Cow Palace and contests in Denver, Houston and Twin Falls, Idaho.

Members of both the junior and senior livestock judging teams travel largely at their own expense on holidays and weekends to area ranches where in practice judging they learn to spot good and bad qualities in animals like swine, horses, cattle and sheep.

The boys are awarded points in the practice judging with high point holders representing NMSU during contests.

"There's alot of competition because we also want to beat the record set by the senior team when they were juniors the year before," said junior team member Danny Knight of Carrizozo. "But when NMSU is competing against other schools in the actual contest, we naturally want our school to win."

"We did have a lot of help from the senior team and we'll help train the next year's junior team by giving advice on contests we've been in," added Nick Cortese of Fort Sumner.

Although the boys form a team, the actual judging test comes when as individuals each member must evaluate the stock. Evaluations made by each team member determine points gained by each school. Verbal reasons for making selections are presented in a limited time span to the judges and determine much of the score.

"Anyone can place a class right but the real test is when they have to tell why, and name the good and bad points in the stock," Fred Montoya of Moriarity explained.

"Even though another team might outscore us on actually placing a class the reasons can make or break you during judging. I'd say Mr. Burcham is one of the best coaches around for teaching a team how to give reasons," added Cortese.

Team members agreed that the judging experience will help them in finding jobs with establishments like ranches or packing companies.

"We're trained to look for the good and bad things in an animal. Even if we're looking at a large herd, we know what to look for and how to evaluate the animals," said senior team member Jim McCauley of Silver City.

Other senior team members include Justin Lesky of Farmington, Pete Gnatknowski of Ancho, Steve Neville of Stanley, Charlie Burlbaw of Albuquerque, Eddie Stanfield of Grady and Dustry Ray of Roy.

Now keep up the good work- and good luck.

'Richest' Racing Opening Saturday

Ruidoso Downs,--Twenty-five years ago, a leaky-roof racetrack opened 140 miles northeast of El Paso on a "reasonably flat stretch of ground" between the tiny resort towns of Hollywood and Green Tree in the mountains of southern New Mexico.

Management was lucky to yield a daily parimutuel wagering average of about $32,000 from the meeting which ran 10 straight days.

Saturday, May 20, Ruidoso Downs starts another race meeting. During the 63-day season, turf afficiondados will be drawn to Ruidoso from throughout the Southwest and all corners of Texas and Oklahoma and surrounding states, and plunk about $245,000 through the betting equipment each day. Horsemen will split some $3 million in purses--nearly one third of it in one staggering hunk.

Instead of a rickety pavilion--a leftover from the days of weekend rodeos and match-race duels to calm heated passions of Sunday horsemen--the new season will be stagged in a modern two-level grandstand. Earlier this year, some $670,000 was invested to face-lift the plant and quadruple the size of the second level. Plush facilities are now offered in the All-American Turf Club and the Jockey Club.

The dizzy stakes includes the track's main talking point--the All American Quarter Horse Futurity. This year the All-American will offer a staggering purse of about $925,000--double the combined purses of the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes.

The All-American isn't simply the world's richest horserace. It's also the richest race in the history of racing. Next year, the All-American is a cinch to hit $1 million in purse money.

If the All-American weren't enough, Ruidoso Downs also boasts the second richest race in the world. This is the Kansas Quarter Horse Futurity, which carries a purse of about $300,000. There's also a Texas-size gateful of other races ranging in value from $225,000 down to $50,000.

All of which leads to the obvious question: How is all this possible? How could a track, founded in the middle of nowhere, mushroom into the Quarter Horse Capital of the racing world? Indeed, how could any track spawn such a colossus as the All-American Futurity?

The answer apparently lies in the nature of the Texan--his high-rolling spirit, his eagerness to plunk down a bet. This was part of Ruidoso's early lore. For years Ruidoso (which means noisy in Spanish) had been wide open, a place where "they'd spit on the ground and run a foot race for $10,000."

In town, there were dice and roulette, while out to the east, in the area folks called "the old Miller cornfield," ranchers matched their fastest horses. It wasn't rare for $50,000 or more to hinge of the outcome of a two-horse race over a bumpy up-and-down course cut through a meadow.

"There are two main factors which shed light on the birth of Ruidoso Downs and its remarkable growth," said Richard Thompson, general manager.

"In the first place, the Ruidoso area had long been a summer resort where Texans gathered. These Texans tended to be the free-wheeling high-rolling type. They weren't afraid to make a bet. In fact, the risking of money was part of their nature. The character of these Texans gave racing it's first spark of life in this area."

When organized racing came to Ruidoso Downs in 1947--it was called Hollywood Park then--no one ever dreamed there was enough sporting spirit in these early horsemen to foster such racing landmarks as the All-American and Kansas futurities.

But the spirit was always there--it was simply waiting to be tapped, waiting to be diverted from match-race duels on the Miller cornfield and the other home-made strips in the bush-track circuit of Texas and Oklahoma.

As one old-time horseman put it:

"There was hardly a week during those summers at Ruidoso when somebody wouldn't pull into town from Carlsbad or Midland, get boasting over corn mash about the speed of his horse and end up broke in Mr. Miller's meadow."

One Oklahoma stockman recalled: "I remember once matching horses for just two sacks of oats and another time drawing so much money out of the bank they told us to go down the road to the next town and get the rest. There was $75,000 on that race."

A. B. Green, an Oklahoma oilman, told of racing his filly in the Texas bush circuit in a $10,000 match race. Then when he heard about the possibility of getting some action across the state line in the rocky race strip on the Miller site, he hitched his trailer to his Cadillac and drove to Ruidoso. When he arrived, "there was a horse under every blackjack tree."

This simmering urge for action hasn't diminished since racing came of age in the Sacramento mountains of New Mexico. At a cocktail party in Ruidoso, a Texas oilman once announced he was willing to match his horse against any two-year-old in the world for $100,000. No one took him up on it, and the horse was beaten in an ordinary race the following day.

The sporting blood of the Texas oilman and the Oklahoma rancher and those old-timers who "took on all comers and didn't care about the odds"--this was the dynamo which generated the plasma and life fluid of the All-American Futurity and revolutionized the racing industry in less than 25 years.

But who could have guessed where it all was leading back during those early days? Richard Thompson, who was witness to some of those landmark events, admits it's been pretty much of a surprise. "I guess you'd have to say the astounding success of the All-American and the quarter horse program at Ruidoso Downs has been a seismic shock to the industry."

The All-American and the world's first $1 million horserace probably got it's birth, accidental as it was, in a bar in the Hilton Hotel in Albuquerque. That was back in the fall of 1953, when Thompson was employed by the New Mexico Racing Commision.

Thompson happened to be in the company of some horsemen who had stopped by the Hilton Bar for a drink or two. Naturally, the topic was horses. "I can't remember everyone in the group--but there was J. B. Ferguson, Elmer Helper, Jim Derrick--and two or three others," Thompson recalled.

"It just happened these horsemen had some top mares in foal, and they started comparing breeding notes, and comparing qualities of this breeding line with that one," Thompson said. "Then it was decided to prove which breeding was best. And the only proof would be a race two years hence, matching the unborn foals.

"Finally, they came up with a winner-take-all race. If my memory serves me right, the purse was about $15,000. Ruidoso Downs went along with the idea, and added a token purse. About 15 horses were originally nominated, and about five were around to run in the race. The race was won by Segura Miguel, who was out of the great mare Stella Moore.

"To my knowledge, this was the first race of this type in the quarter horse world. The public pretty much ignored it, but it stirred up the imagination of the breeders. Later, it was to form the central concept of the All-American Futurity."

At this time, quarter horse racing was beginning to take hold, and Ruidoso Downs had already bridged the gap from a stop on the Leaky-roof circuit to a going operation. Each year, the wagering handle grew by leaps and bounds--and each year profits were turned back into the operation for massive improvements.

The birthplace of the All-American Futurity was an event called the Ruidoso Quarter Horse Futurity. This had reached a purse of about $20,000--a healthy amount in those foundling years--under the format of initial nomination payments coming due a few months or so before the running of the race.

When the Ruidoso Quarter Horse Futurity was re-modeled into the All-American Futurity, the format included the long-range nominating payments dreamed up for the winner-take-all futurity won by Segura Miguel. (A futurity, incidentally, is a race exclusively for two-year-olds, the rookies of horse-racing.)

Now, instead of making the nominating payment a few months before the race, horsemen started shelling out about 20 months in advance. In order to stay eligible, payments had to be made regularly.

The first running of the All-American was staged in 1959, and the first purse reached a giddy $129,686. The success of the race "surpassed the wildest dreams."

That first All-American was won by Galobar, owned by Hugh Huntley of Madera, Calif. The winner's share amounted to a cool $62,843. In 1960, the gross purse inched forward to $130,244, then sunk into the marrow of the quarter horse industry. The race has been spreading since like grassfire. The third edition in 1961 lunged up to $202,423. Like clockwork, the purse money climbed. Last year, the All-American put a fat purse of $753,910 on the line. Over $200,000 went to Will Whitehead of Del Rio, Texas, whose colt, Mr. Kid Charge, got home first by a neck in record-setting time of 19.65 seconds.

This year, the All-American will escalate to about $925,000, and next year, when it tops the $1 million mark, the winning owner will take home a paycheck of about $333,000.

That's only part of the bonanza. In cash value, in fact, it's a relatively "small" part. A colt who wins the All-American, according to Thompson, can accrue a stud value of about $1 million.

"This figure of a $1 million isn't just guesswork," Thompson pointed out. "A winner of the All-American can bring at least a stud fee of $1,000--much more if he proves himself as a sire. A stallion can usually serve about 100 mares a year."

With so much money hanging in the balance, with such heated instincts of Texas and Oklahoma horsemen channeled into the electric currents of the All-American--how does it feel to be general manager of Ruidoso Downs on Labor Day when some 15,000 fans jam the mountain track of the "old Miller cornfield?"

"It's an exciting day a special day in one's life--I imagine it's the same feeling of jitters and anxiety one gets in connection with the Kentucky Derby. The All-American is quarter horse racing's Kentucky Derby. On All-American day, you've got plenty of worries. You hope everything goes right--you hope the weather is right, and you hope every horse in the race gets a clean shot."

What's good for Ruidoso Downs is apparently good for the quarter horse industry, judging by the healthful effects the All-American has left in its wake. "The beneficial values have been deep and widespread. Mainly, it's caused a tremendous amount of national publicity--all of which has brought attention to the quarter horse breed. There's no doubt the All-American has spurred tremendous growth in the industry."

When it comes to publicity, the All-American goes first class. The wire services carry the All-American throughout the nation, and the race is viewed on national TV. Currently, plans are underfoot to beam the All-American live throughout this part of the country. Full-length articles in Playboy Magazine and Sports Illustrated last year described in depth the background and character of the All-American and the people enmeshed in its magic.

Although the quarter horse had to climb out of the bush-track curcuit of Texas to get top-billing at Ruidoso, that's not to suggest the thoroughbreds have been ignored. Thoroughbred racing has also boomed at the mountain course. In fact, one thoroughbred event--the Ruidoso Futurity--will offer a healthy prize of about $50,000. This is a far cry from the All-American, but it's a purse worthy of any racetrack in the nation.

As Thompson noted, though: "There'll never be another race like the All-American."

Perhaps it's the sheer size of the All-American purse that gets a Texan's heart to pounding.

Nogal Nuggets

In Old Lincoln Town

While Mr. and Mrs. McGinnes and Mr. and Mrs. Cumpstens were in Capitan having dinner Saturday evening friends gathered at the Cumpsten home to surprise with a party.

Much to everyones regret the Cumpstens are moving to Carlsbad as they feel their health will be better in a lower altitude.

They were given a sheep skin pelt for their new home and everyone enjoyed home-made ice cream and cake made by a number of the Lincoln ladies, including Mrs. Vera Beall, Mrs. Racher, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Bell Ward, Mrs. McGinnis and Mrs. Maureldia Perry.

Recently Wayne Zumwalt entertained with a lovely dinner for his wife's (Edna) birthday at High Country Lodge. Enjoying the dinner with Edna and Wayne were Mr. and Mrs. Clark Pfingsten and Mrs. Edgar Phillips.

Mass was held at San Patricio's St. Jude's church Monday morning for another long time resident of the Lincoln community, Manuel Benavidez, with interment in the Lincoln Cemetery following.

Our heart felt sympathy is extended to his daughter Mrs. Juanita Calderon and her family as well as other relative's including two sisters, Mrs. Fulgenia Zamora and Mrs. Rita Zamora of Lincoln.

Mr. Benavidez will be missed by his friends.

Lincoln should be quite a busy place this weekend with Open House at the Sheep to Shawl Shop, and an Art Show at The Red Geranium Show. It will be most interesting and enjoyable.

Mrs. Myra Richards with her daughter-in-law of Roswell Mrs. Dan Richards and children visited Myers brother Clark Pfingsten and Mrs. Pfingsten Sunday.

'Cage' tomatoes for better yield

Las Cruces -- A relatively new method of growing tomatoes in cages is being suggested to home gardeners by a horticulturist at New Mexico State University.

Cage-growing tomatoes promises less work and high yields, according to M. Douglas Bryant. In one experiment, a grower harvested 66 pounds of fruit from one tomato plant grown with this practice.

For the home gardener, cages require very little extra expense over the traditional method of staking each plant or using trellises in the garden. And the fact that growers can produce better quality tomatoes in cages makes this method of production even more attractive, says Bryant.

As a result of extensive experiments conducted in Michigan and Virginia, agricultural researchers recommend a four-step program for growing tomatoes in cages:

1. Set out regular trellis type tomato plants in five foot rows with two feet between the plants. Bryant recommends the following varieties for New Mexico gardeners: Earlypak No. 7, T-2; Improved, Alpha 166; Alpha 168 VF; and Homestead 24.

2. Construct cages 18 to 24 inches in diameter and three and one-half to five feet tall. Use concrete reinforcing mesh--10 guage wire frame--or other sturdy wire mesh that has openings of at least six inches. Cut and bend the mesh into cylinders fastening the ends together and snipping off the bottom rung. Butting off the bottom rung, the cage can be pushed into the ground about six inches deep around each plant.

3. Once the tomato plants have been set out, put the cage in place and make sure it is well anchored. No suckering, pruning or training is necessary. The plant will come up through the cage and the wire mesh will support it. Cost of the cages will vary between 25 and 50 cents each, but they can be stored and used year after year.

4. When the fruit ripens, it can be picked through the six-inch opening in the cage. Since the fruit remains off the ground is is protected by plant leaves, sunscald and fruit cracking are often reduced with cage-grown tomatoes.

More than age makes maturity

Las Cruces -- State legislatures from coast to coast have been involved in heated debate over the age when adult rights should be granted.

The truth is there is no magic age of maturity. A person's maturity doesn't depend on the number of candles on his birthday cake.

A few people could handle adult responsibilities at age 12; others are still having problems at age 60, says Leo Yates, extension family life specialist at New Mexico State University.

Recently the Children's Bureau asked young people how they felt about the age restrictions on activities and behavior.

The bureau found that young people do accept some line of demarcation between youth and adult status. In fact, the youths indicated that they expected to acquire adult privileges and responsibilities over a period of several years. But they would like to begin these acquisitions sooner than is now possible.

Possibly the most important item that came from the survey was that young people believe more emphasis should be placed on competence and less on precise age.

Too often, adults seem to speak and act as though they believe that a child will automatically become mature when he reaches a certain birthday.

This is not the case. Each child is striving for maturity but maturity is determined by individual strengths and weaknesses.

Maturity is more than age. It means being responsible, emotionally able to endure tension and do productive work, and to love and be loved.
