

Talented vandals (Locos) show-off skills!

At their monthly noon luncheon meeting last Tuesday, Carrizozo Chamber of Commerce members discussed the new surge of vandalism. Although the reckless destruction has centered mainly on business places, some malicious vandalism has been experienced on personal property.

Thirty businesses and individuals have expressed interest in initiating a crime stoppers program. Local merchants believe that this action may curb the crimes. The Chamber has formed a committee which will be in charge of inquiring about establishing a program.

Meanwhile Chamber members were encouraged to attend as a group, the June 14 town hall meeting at 7 p.m. to voice their concerns regarding the vandalism and the response by the police department.

Various reasons were mentioned as to why the crimes occur. Peer pressure was cited as one reason why youngsters from "respected families" are willing participants.

It was pointed out that vandalism hit a high point when the town began enforcing curfew hours.

Chamber members agree that it is the parents' or guardians' responsibility to monitor the whereabouts of their underage children or charges. They also agree that if these children are caught in the act of vandalizing, that it is the parents or guardians who should make restitution.

The Chamber, as in past years, made a contribution to the 1982 Sun Duchess, Elaine Cantrell, Carrizozo's representation at the Sun Carnival. The donation helps to defray expenses involved in participating in this event.

Sun Carnival activities kicked off this month with a Southwestern Family Fun Day at Indian Cliffs Ranch located near Fabens, Texas. This event is a get-acquainted party for princesses, duchesses, escorts and area dignitaries.

Other scheduled events in El Paso in November and December include receptions, a parade, coronation and ball. The Sun Bowl football game concludes the Sun Carnival celebration.

Woman's Club member, Barbara Langley is chaperone and advisor for Miss Cantrell, daughter of Chamber members, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Cantrell.

In other business, the Chamber heard a presentation by Ms. Janet Lawrence of Las Cruces. Lawrence, district supervisor with Blue Cross-Blue Shield of New Mexico gave a summary of benefits & costs. The Chamber moved to endorse a group program. The company will advertise locally to announce that coverage is available to Chamber members.

Chamber president, W.A. "Woody" Schlegel informed members that Monday's town hall agenda will include the council's decision on 'Lodger's Tax'. The chamber has requested the funds for advertising.

Schlegel said that two industries have expressed interest in locating in Carrizozo. A South Dakota based company which manufactures fiberglass equipment for ranches and farms has inquired about this area.

A spokesman from Ohio for another company which produces equipment that is used in the making of soft ice cream is coming to Carrizozo this Sunday to check out the feasibility of establishing a plant here, which could put 40 to 45 people to work. A building 10,000 square feet is required. If the company locates here, 3 million dollars worth of business is anticipated the first year, a representative has stated.

Chamber member Mignon Sims, chairman of the People's Market Place, gave a report on the plans of the event to be held August 1. The event is held in conjunction with Santa Rita Catholic Church which holds their fiesta July 29, 30 and August 1.

Raylene Greer assists Sims. The two women have met with church fiesta chairmen to make plans for the first Sunday in August.

Letters have been drafted for mailing to artists and craftsmen

News releases have been sent to various publications. Booth fee will be held this year on the grounds of Spencer Park, site of the People's Market Place.

A first at the annual Sunday event will be a chile cookoff. The contest starts at 10 a.m. and judging takes place at 2 p.m. All chile must be cooked from "scratch" the day of the cookoff. (Scratch is defined as starting with raw meat.)

The chile must be prepared on site and out in the open. Cooks will provide their own material and equipment. A minimum of two gallons of chile must be prepared.

Entry fee is $20.00 and there is no entry deadline. First, second and third prize money will be awarded. Chile cookoff posters have been sent to New Mexico Chamber of Commerce offices.

To enter the Chile Cookoff or for more information on the contest and the People's Market Place write: Carrizozo Chamber of Commerce, Box 567, Carrizozo, NM 88301.

Fire prevention promotion

Smokey, Bambi to tour

Two of America's most beloved forest dwellers are working together this summer in a special effort to remind people of the dangers of forest fires and what can be done to prevent them.

Smokey Bear, the official fire prevention spokesman of the US Department of Agriculture's Forest Service, and Bambi, the star of one of Walt Disney's best known productions, will tour cities across the country spreading the message "Only You Can Prevent Forest Fires. We Can't."

Don Hansen, the Forest Service's manager of the Smokey Bear Program, said the team of Smokey and Bambi should be a resounding success.

"Smokey and Bambi are undoubtedly the world's most experienced promoters of forest fire prevention," Hansen said. "Since 1945, Smokey has been reminding forest visitors to be careful with fire. His efforts have resulted in greatly reducing the number of forest fires which occur each year as well as saving billions of dollars worth of natural resources."

Hansen said periodic surveys done by a leading marketing firm show that Smokey is one of the most widely recognized symbols ever used in a publicity campaign.

"Bambi was helping prevent forest fires even before Smokey. Hansen said "Bambi appeared on a fire prevention poster issued in 1944 which depicted characters from the Disney movie 'Bambi' and which included the message 'Please Mister, Don't Be Careless.'"

Hansen said the Disney production of Bambi has played an important role in raising public awareness of the dangers of forest fires.

"I doubt that anyone who has seen the film can forget the sequence in which the fire races through Bambi's home and the effect it has on the forest and the creatures who live there," Hansen said.

Smokey's manager said a new public service television announcement featuring Smokey and the fire sequence from the Bambi film has been produced.

The spot announcement will be distributed to television stations throughout the nation this summer by the Advertising Council, Inc., which coordinates the donation of about $50 million worth of advertising space and broadcast time to the Smokey Bear Campaign each year.

In addition to the television announcements, Hansen said, special Smokey Bear activities are planned to coincide with the release of the movie 'Bambi' this summer. A special fire prevention poster, coloring sheet, and sticker depicting Smokey, Bambi and other characters from the movie, such as Thumper and Flower, will also be distributed widely.

Present Structure

Monjeau Lookout Tower 'Since 1932'

ALAMOGORDO, NM—For fifty years Forest Service lookouts have watched the mountains and valleys near Ruidoso, N.M. from a fortress-like structure on top of Monjeau Peak. The original Monjeau tower was constructed of wood in 1932, under a federal works program, as a much-needed fire observation post for the White Mountain District of Lincoln National Forest.

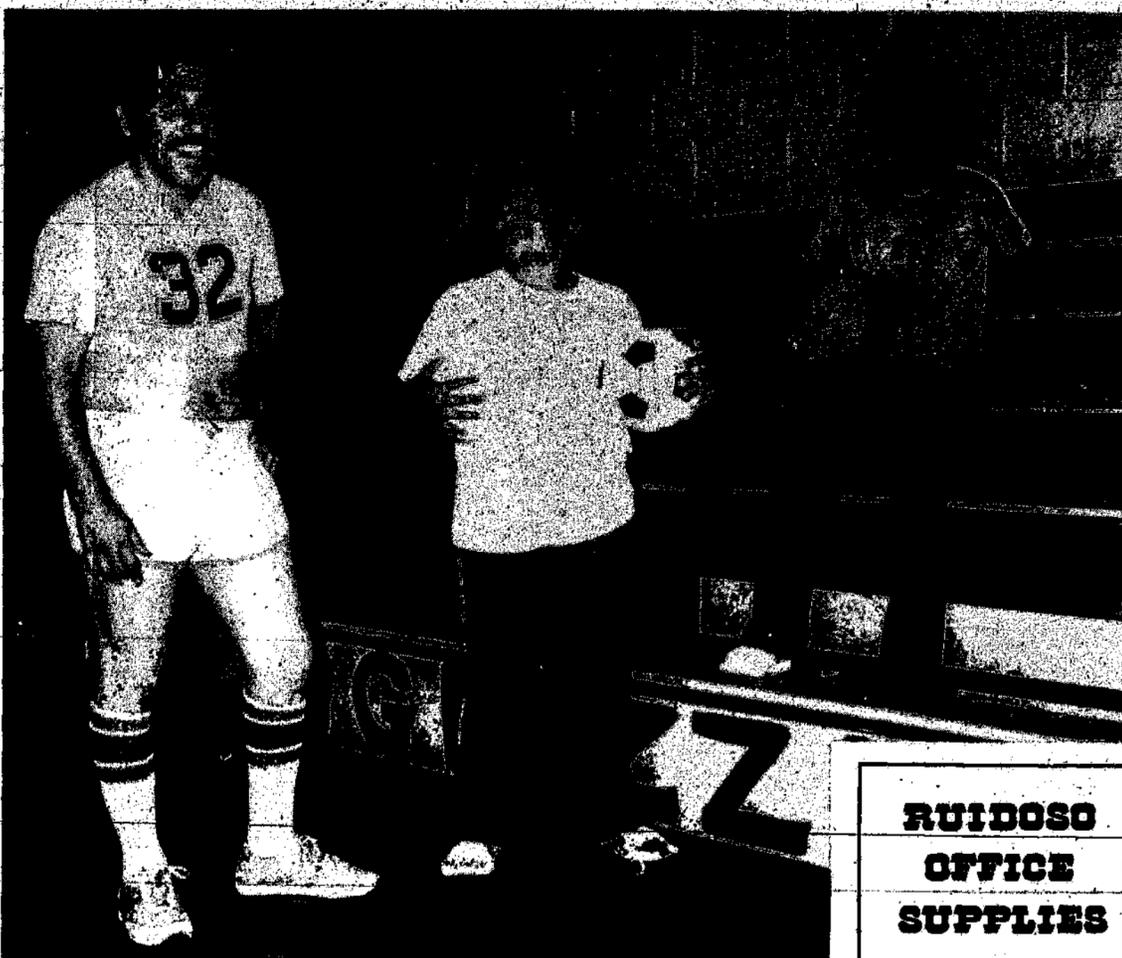

Herbert Traylor, a long-time area resident, recalls that his father was the first lookout to serve on Monjeau tower. Before the tower was erected, Mr. Traylor often rode horseback to the top of Monjeau mountain, where, seated on the rock outcrop on the crest of the peak, he would scan the area for smoke. Monjeau, at an elevation of 9,641 feet, offers a panoramic view of the mountains and valleys around Ruidoso, Capitan, and Fort Stanton.

In 1936, the Civilian Conservation Corps replaced the wooden structure with the massive rock tower still used today. Monjeau tower is important historically because it is an excellent example of the rustic construction typical of the C.C.C. The main purpose of Monjeau tower is as a fire observation post, but the lookout also records weather data. When lightning and thunderstorms enter the area, the lookouts may report several fires in one day from lightning strikes. Lookouts occupy the tower through the storms to spot and report any fires from lightning strikes, to pinpoint the fire, and to report on the fire's progress. Mr. Traylor mentioned one lightning strike that hit near the tower and "there was fire all around." Richard Cowles, the lookout presently stationed on Monjeau, commented that the lightning storms "can get pretty scary."

Monjeau lookouts report an average of ten fires per season. Causes vary, but most of the fires result from people's carelessness. The Dam Fire in 1959, the Salazar Fire in 1960, and smaller fires too numerous to mention, were caused by smoking. The Arroyo Fire, reported by the Monjeau lookout during hunting season in November 1970, began with a magneto spark from a hunter's vehicle. A more wretched event is an incendiary fire, such as the Gavilan Fire, discovered from Monjeau tower in May of 1967, which burned over 1700 acres. That fire was of primary concern

MAKE A BIG SPLASH WITH A POOL OR PATIO PARTY

Make a big splash this summer with a spur-of-the-moment party by pool or patio. Dive into the season with some ideas that are easy and memorable. Yoghurt gives a new twist to the ever-popular Pina Colada, a favorite rum drink. The roast is delicious and easy to prepare. If your budget will not allow for a rib roast, use an eye roast, cut it flat and roll it yourself. Be a gold medalist with a dessert that can be made days ahead and decorated just before serving. It's a refreshing combination of Bacardi rum, peach and lime - cooling to the hostess and her guests. Serve it with crisp thin cookies for a change of texture.

Former Carrizozo school teacher and coach, Don Eskins and family were in town several days visiting acquaintances. While in Carrizozo, Don, his wife, Pat and their children, Angie and Shaun were houseguests of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Baroz, Jr. The Eskins family live in Carlsbad.

Memorial Day, members of this household went on a picnic to Nogal Canyon. A meal of fried chicken, potato salad and yeast bread was enjoyed. Following the meal most of the family went hiking and exploring.

FAREWELL
Exchange student, Kjersti Boye is back in Larvik, Norway after attending Carrizozo High School as a junior student. While attending school here, she was the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Cantrell and family who reside at Alto.

Not me, I sat under the shade of a pine tree, exploring the pages of cookbooks, leaflets and magazines. Hour after hour, I searched for recipes and made notations on the recipes which I found interesting.

POLLY'S HINTS
A little bit of this, a little bit of that.

RECIPE CORNER
Say "Good morning" with a unique breakfast - invisible banana French toast. This toast makes a tasty meal anytime of the day. In fact this is what we had for supper last Sunday evening.

Last Thursday, Carolyn Cantrell, daughters Lisa and Elaine accompanied Kjersti to El Paso, where she boarded a plane headed for New York. Kjersti's friends, Lisa Crenshaw and Stacy Stephenson also went with the Cantrell family to see her off.

Because I am a busy, semi-working mother, I am especially interested in quick and easy casserole and dessert recipes. I am intrigued with unusual recipes such as beer yeast bread, oatmeal pancakes and banana French toast.

RECIPES
Laundry Day - Fold all lines of a particular set and stuff them in one of the matching pillow cases before storing in the linen closet. This will make linen changing day less confusing, as the complete set is together.

Peel and slice half a banana. Put 1 egg, the banana slices and one-fourth teaspoon cinnamon in blender. (No milk at all.) Blend until smooth. Pour batter in soup bowl.

The week before leaving Carrizozo, Kjersti was the guest of honor at a farewell barbecue party at the ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. Billy Stephenson. Classmates and other acquaintances attended the event.

I like to try out the bread recipes from other countries. I am anxious to try my hand at Pita bread (Arab bread). Mary Funk of Carrizozo was nice enough to share her Pita bread recipe and recipe with me. Pita bread makes good "pockets" for sandwich making.

Hayes to be inducted as (NMBA) president

Heat 2 teaspoons margarine or oil in skillet, making sure the whole pan bottom is greased. Dip 3 slices of bread in batter. Bread should be day-old or slightly toasted. After browning on both sides, serve dotted with butter and syrup.

ATTEND WESTERN PARTY
Carrizozo's 1982 Sun Duchess, Elaine Cantrell attended a western-style party last week in Fabens, Texas. The event is one of several activities planned for the young women participating in the Sun Carnival festivities. Phillip Payne of Carrizozo was Elaine's escort at the party.

The magazine and newspaper recipes which I plan to test, I clip and tape out of sight to the inside of my kitchen cabinet doors. Recipes from hardcover or spiral bound cookbooks are listed on a sheet of paper, along with page numbers where the recipes can be found.

ALBUQUERQUE - Over 1,000 bankers, spouses and guests from New Mexico and surrounding states are expected for the 71st Annual Convention of the New Mexico Bankers Association (NMBA), June 9-12 in Albuquerque.

Presiding over the convention will be 1981-82 NMBA President J. Larry Carter, President of the First National Bank in Albuquerque. Mr. Carter will hand the president's gavel over on Saturday, June 12 to incoming Association President Robert L. Hays, President, Ruidoso State Bank.

TUCSON VISITOR
Katerly McDaniel of Tucson, Arizona spent 2 weeks in the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J.N. "Snooks" McDaniel. Fourteen year-old Katerly, who was here while her grandmother, Madelle recuperated from shoulder surgery, is back home in Tucson. She is the daughter of Rodger and Donna, who have two younger children.

My next loan application at Citizens State Bank may be turned down if I attach my grocery list.

The convention will feature a number of state and local dignitaries speaking at the convention meeting sessions. Scheduled to make remarks are: New Mexico Governor Bruce King; Albuquerque Mayor Harry Kinney; U.S. Senator Harrison "Jack" Schmitt; Gubernatorial hopefuls Toney Anaya and John Erick; U.S. Senator from Alabama and Vietnam prisoner of war, Jeremiah A. Denton, Jr.; Dr. Jerry Jordan from the President's Council of Economic Advisors; American Bankers Association President-Elect and Board Chairman of the National Bank of Commerce in Pine Bluff, AK, William H. Kennedy, Jr.; training consultant Michele Scott from San Francisco, CA; and, humorist and motivational speaker Newt Hilscher from Shreveport, LA.

The NMBA Annual Convention is traditionally one of the largest state conventions held in New Mexico. The membership of the New Mexico Bankers Association is composed of all 88 Full Service commercial banks in the state.

RECENT VISITORS
Memorial weekend visitors in the home of Mr. Ben Sanchez were his son, George, wife Martha and their son, Gerald of Albuquerque. Other visitors from Albuquerque were Mr. and Mrs. Bennie Miller and family. Bennie is a grandson of Mr. Sanchez.

BY THE WAY
Snooks McDaniel was surprised to see the unknown tombstone pictured in last week's NEWS. And I was surprised this week to know that it is the McDaniel family who has recognized the burial site all these years, although the identity of the deceased is unknown.

The parents, also unidentified were passing through the area when their child died. The

Strange newspaper regime of Rev. Sun Myung Moon

By REV. LESTER KINSOLVING WASHINGTON—Less than two days after a small army of editors completed their strenuous efforts to produce the first edition of The Washington Times, this new daily newspaper's owner — and its employer — the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, was found guilty of conspiring to evade $163,000 in taxes.

This Korean evangelist, whose followers regard him as a second Christ, plans to appeal his conviction on the same grounds as his objection to being tried by a jury. For Moon's attorney claimed that he is so controversial that nobody could be found who is sufficiently objective to serve on a Moon jury.

In addition to this line of reasoning ruling out the possibility of trying far more controversial people like Charles Manson, this contention by Moon presents something of a paradox. For in Washington, Moon is paying for a major media blitz to emphasize the "seasoned professionals" who work for his newspaper as thoroughly objective. Yet at the same time in New York, Moon is claiming that nobody can be sufficiently objective about him in order to serve on a jury.

It is possible that somewhere along the long road to the United States Supreme Court, Moon might have his conviction reversed. But if not, every time a lower court turns him down there will be national news. And his claim that there are no objective jurors available to try him in New York (but lots of objective journalists to work for him in Washington) will drive further nails into the coffin of his newspaper's credibility.

In an apparent effort to demonstrate some credibility, The Times published a news story (written by AP) of his conviction ("MOON CONVICTED") along with his photograph, above the centerfold of page one.

This was a welcome contrast to Moon's other daily, the New York News World, which the previous year had first refused to report, then distorted, the news of his losing a major libel suit in London, where he was charged with brainwashing and enriching himself at the expense of his disciples' street sales of various products.

The Times' treatment of the news of Moon's conviction was also a welcome contrast to the Moonies' most recent splash in Washington. For one year earlier they had enlivened a world premier of a Moon-produced film by distributing photos which they identified as (a gigantic) Jesus in the sky above Korea, along with B-29s.

Yet much of the Times' straight treatment of the conviction of its owner was ruined by what appeared elsewhere on this same page one. For executive editor Smith Hempstone devoted the bulk of the page bottom to an undesignated editorial disguised as a news feature. Here he tried his best — or worst — to compare the Rev. Sun Myung Moon to Mrs. Katherine Graham of the Washington Post.

Since this is like comparing Russia's Empress Catherine The Great with Rasputin (the "Mad Monk" who mesmerized the last of the Czarinas nearly three centuries later), this was a joke that bombed all over page one of the credibility-seeking Times. (Whatever else her capabilities, Mrs. Graham can hardly be regarded as a religious leader. For while she is listed on the books of St. Alban's Episcopal Church near the Washington Cathedral, the rector of this parish, who has just been elected to the bishopric of Maryland, recalls that in more than eight years he has never seen her in church.)

Undaunted, Hempstone became so carried away with his lead-heavy satire that he even compared the Episcopalians to the Moonies — who infest his newspaper like the ever-watchful commissars in a Red Army regiment.

"It cannot be denied that there are Episcopalians on the staff of the Washington Post," wrote Hempstone, in a comparison as far-fetched as likening the Mennonites to the Scientologists.

Later in this same week, a Times editorial took issue with New Jersey's liberal Republican Congresswoman and currently candidate for the US Senate, the exceptionally winsome Millicent Fenwick.

There are surely ways of opposing Mrs. Fenwick on her record — without the astonishing tastelessness of a reference to her "political menopause."

Longtime acquaintances of Times editor-publisher James Whelan are still wondering why, with his extensive journalistic credentials, he would ever have given up the editorship of the prestigious Sacramento Union in order to work for anybody like Moon.

Whelan is an unusually bright person. It could well be that in addition to the editorial control which he tells one and all he has been guaranteed in writing, he has been given an even more substantial incentive.

Whelan may have been guaranteed inheritance rights to the entire paper and all its equipment, in the event that Moon goes to prison as his Unification Church withers as rapidly as have other cults whose demigods have died, or been found guilty of certain crimes. (When alleged holy men are, by due process, found guilty of either carnal or commercial crimes, it is inordinately difficult to manufacture a martyr image.)

If the Unification Church leader exhausts his appeals and goes to prison, his executive editor, Mr. Hempstone, will not enhance the newspaper's credibility if he tries to compare Sun Myung Moon to either Mahatma Gandhi or St. Paul,

New Mexico in Washington

Voting rights extension faces filibuster

By TOM and LESTER KINSOLVING WASHINGTON—Both of New Mexico's US Senators are co-sponsoring S-1992 to amend the Voting Rights Act of 1965 — which is facing a filibuster threat when the Senate reconvened on June 7. Sen. Jack Schmitt has noted that the proposed bill will extend the bilingual ballot requirement through 1992. He contends that "this is not a burden because bilingual ballots have been cast for state officials since 1912. New Mexico has the highest degree of Hispanic registration in the nation."

Sen. Pete Domenici also supports this measure, especially the provision regarding bilingual ballots. "He feels very strongly about this," noted Domenici legislative aide George Ramonas. "New Mexico is a state with the largest minority population in this country, and this is no time for the Republican Party to send the wrong signal to minorities."

Ramonas went on to note: "There is a possibility of any state or county to work its way out from under the targeted category in this act. We had two counties, Arriba and Mora, that did. And with a reasonable administration of this law, we should have no problems."

When asked about the US Department of Justice intervention into New Mexico legislative redistricting, Ramonas conceded that Domenici was "angered, because this will require a special election, cost a lot of money and probably result in a lower turnout of voters... although sometimes the Navajo voter turnout has been as high as 95 percent."

Both New Mexico members of the House of Representatives, Joe Skeen and Manuel Lujan, have already voted in favor of a companion bill, HR 3112, last October.

North Carolina's conservative Republican Sen. Jesse Helms has promised, however, to organize a filibuster against this bill, even though it has the support of President Reagan, and a reported two-thirds of the Senate.

Helms charges that the law singles out certain sections of the nation on the basis of what they did years ago, and disregards what they have done to improve.

Helms also contends: "This law is focused on selected Southern states "that supported Senator Goldwater in 1964," as well as upon 40 of the counties of North Carolina. If these states and counties want to make any change whatsoever in the voting laws, even the change of a precinct, they must appeal to the Department of Justice in Washington. If they are denied relief by the US Attorney General, they have the sole alternative of going to Washington again, to have their case decided by the US District Court of the District of Columbia.

The State of Texas computed that one year's compliance with this act cost at least $100,000, as well as 35,000 hours of work. This law is now being administered as "an affirmative action program for minority politicians seeking elective offices."

As an example, Helms cited the city of Rome, GA, which recently lost a case against the federal government under this law, not because of any evidence of racial discrimination, but "solely because no member of a minority group had been elected to public office."

Sen. Helms further noted that one of the North Carolina counties singled out is Jackson, where there has been no charge of discrimination, but because there has been a low rate of registration and voter turnout by the county's Cherokee Indians.

Ralph Neas, of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, has told reporters: "We are confident that we can beat a filibuster."

But Helms is attracting such support as from one of his North Carolina predecessors in the Senate, Sam Ervin, who attracted international attention during the Watergate hearings.

Ervin, a former state supreme court justice, describes the measure as "a bill of attainder" (a declaration that a person is guilty of past offenses, and rendering punishment without trial.)

Ervin also recalls that former Attorney General Robert Kennedy "once twitted me" about the 1960 census reporting 30,000 illiterate blacks in North Carolina, "which he took to be evidence of discrimination."

But when Ervin consulted the 1960 census, he discovered that in Massachusetts there were 60,000 illiterate whites, so "I hastened to assure Kennedy that I did not accept this fact as proof that Massachusetts discriminated against whites in education."

Sen. Helms recalls that the 1960 census reveals that 49.2 percent of the blacks in North Carolina are registered to vote — but only 43.6 percent of the blacks in Massachusetts are registered.

Romantic suspense

EDITOR: Could you possibly put a small item in the paper to the effect that my new book is now available (from Aspen Tree Book Store in Ruidoso or Opal Greer at Nogal Store.) I enclose a copy for you, though likely romantic suspense is not to your taste! Thanks so much

Eva Zumwalt

Ed Note: My dear lady, I have been in a state of "romantic suspense" for years! Thanks for the book.

Happy hooper

EDITOR—You saved my life! Six months ago I was happily smoking a pack of cigarettes a day, eating my weight in sugar and junk food and contending anyone who jogged must have lots of problems, I was really quite content. Oh, I'll admit I was getting a little fat, had a nagging cough, and felt rather sluggish; but that was probably due to my restless sleeping habits.

A meddling friend persuaded me to give up these enjoyable habits and take up jogging. Can you imagine the pain I have endured and the effort I have put forth these last six months? Oh sure, I have a higher level of self esteem, my figure has firmed up and slimmed down, I have extra energy, no cough and, oh yes, do I sleep good at night!

But thanks to you I shall now return to my old, more enjoyable vices, because you, Mr. Editor, have said I will likely die of a heart attack. I don't understand it just when I was feeling so good, but surely you must be right. Although you didn't quite give the bottom line in the eight line blip in the "Wall Street Journal" on May 13th which ended with: "Exercise contributes to sudden death in susceptible persons, doctors conclude." A person just can't trust their own body anymore.

Thanks for saving my life!

Mexican immigration, a bilateral problem

By MARIA TELLES-McGEAGH
The author is a graduate student at New Mexico State University specializing in Latin American and Spanish literature.

The economic condition of many workers in Mexico has reached a desperate state. For despite its growing income from oil revenues, Mexico is far from prosperous. It is still having to deal with soaring inflation, devaluation of the peso, unequal distribution of income and shortage of jobs.

Frequently, the hardest hit by these unfavorable conditions is the unskilled laborer. For these persons, the 2,000-mile border between Mexico and the United States symbolizes an opportunity for survival and the promise of a better existence. Conversely, to the US labor market, the Mexican worker represents a source of cheap labor.

The controlling factor on both sides of the border is the economy. The US will absorb only as many Mexican workers as its economy allows, and if it suffers an economic crisis, immigration decreases as it did in 1907, 1921, 1929, 1947, 1954, 1974 and 1980.

Sometimes, however, politics decide what happens to immigration. If enough pressure is exerted by special interest groups like US labor unions, politicians blame the immigrant workers for labor problems of this country and attempt to decrease immigration.

But the flow of Mexican labor will continue into this country because Mexico has not yet been able to offer a favorable alternative to its unemployed citizens.

Ironically, the Mexican government resents losing so many of its able-bodied workers and is convinced the US benefits from a ready-made labor pool without having to provide for the initial social, welfare and educational needs of these individuals. Still, Mexico seems unable to recognize that once individuals begin working, they will seek employment elsewhere if their country does not provide them job opportunities.

The immigrant labor situation benefits the United States and Mexico. About two-thirds of the income received by the Mexican alien is spent in the US, the other third is sent to Mexico. This income is important to Mexico's economy and a dire necessity for family members remaining in Mexico. Without immigration, unemployment and urban overpopulation in Mexico would be even greater.

For the United States, immigrants add to the numbers of buyers of consumer goods. The wage deductions of these workers also increase the nation's tax income. Finally, contrary to popular belief, the number of aliens on welfare in the United States is comparatively small—perhaps because of their alien status or because of the majority's returning to Mexico after a temporary stay in the United States.

Unfortunately, the Mexican immigrant worker continues to bear a stigma. Mexico sometimes sees him as a disloyal citizen and a threat to tradition, and the US often abuses him or uses him as a scapegoat. But exploitation of people's fundamental rights does not occur only in the United States. History shows that unjust practices are as old as the world. Neither is it peculiar to the US that a small but powerful economic, social and political elite has arisen at the cost of a weaker majority.

Regrettably, this US elite uses racism to cast a bad light on the Mexican immigrant and through mass media aways public opinion. Once such opinion is established, powerful organizations sometimes support these negative views by reasons which, at first, appear sound.

Several agencies and interest groups have drawn up lists of misleading accusations and justifications. Some of these include:

—Mexican immigrants are burdens on public services;

—they are responsible for an increase in crime;

—they compete with US laborers, including US minorities;

—they undermine current wages and unions; and —they constitute a threat to the ecological balance of the US and its political and military security.

Research indicates that these accusations are more distortions than threatening realities. Actually, the majority of Mexican workers come to the US temporarily because of unemployment or subemployment conditions in Mexico. Were Mexico's employment opportunities more favorable, most immigrants would remain in Mexico. Once the alien leaves Mexico, he usually returns to the United States because of higher wages.

Research also shows Mexican laborers desire improved social conditions so that they will not have to immigrate. They want their country to promote community development by creating new jobs, improve wages, distribute land equally, construct irrigation systems so that limited arable land will produce more and to provide efficient public services. The Mexican government may argue that such changes are already being put into practice, but a question remains whether it is being done effectively. The high number of Mexican immigrants into the United States indicates these persons do not think reforms are yet satisfactory.

Many observers think that the lack of jobs in Mexico could be partly resolved by a new surge of energy resources, but new jobs will not appear overnight. To the contrary, Mexico is now experiencing the problems increased oil production syndrome:

higher inflation, increased national debt in production development and processing and population redistribution, which creates more problems for the nation. Mexico must now concern itself with providing public services and other social needs for these new population centers.

For economic and security reasons the United States and Mexico must maintain friendly relations. But the continuing "silent integration" of these neighboring countries will be handicapped if they do not recognize the bilateral nature of Mexican immigration. If this problem is not shouldered together, the Mexican laborer could suffer the most.

For one thing, Mexico needs to review its views of the immigrant problem. It needs to see the political import of this subject. Ignorant indifference and confusion also characterize the opinions of organized Mexican labor regarding their brothers who temporarily migrate to work in the United States.

In the US, some legislative effort has been made at the national level to remedy this ever-present problem. Peter Rodino's bill H.R. 14831 of 1972 considered it a crime to employ undocumented workers and established sanctions against those who knowingly employed such aliens. The House passed the bill, but the Senate rejected it. In 1974, Senator Edward Kennedy proposed a similar measure in Senate Bill 3827, which was also rejected. In 1976, Congress approved Public Law 94-571 which has been in effect since January 1977.

During his presidency, Jimmy Carter made four proposals to Congress. He argued that the US should tighten US border controls through increasing border patrols by at least 2,000 persons; restrict employment of undocumented workers by imposing penalties on employers; require identification cards for all migrant workers; and increase foreign aid to developing third-world countries.

These recommendations were not so much a collection of new measures as a combination of previous ineffective remedies. As for the immigrants, the direct effect would be that those who entered the US before 1970 could obtain a permanent resident visa provided they fulfilled certain requirements. Those who entered the US between 1970 and 1977 could obtain a temporary resident visa for a period of five years, but those who entered after 1977 would be subjected to deportation. The recommendations were tabled.

The most recent recommendation is President Reagan's Guest-worker Plan, which has been under discussion by US commissions and governors of states on both sides of the border. Mexico welcomes this plan if it takes into consideration the civil rights of Mexican workers in the United States. In addition, Mexico does not want negotiations limited to border state governors; it calls for the establishing of a national bilateral commission. Persons wishing to enter the US under the agreement Reagan outlines are also urging the Mexican government to demand a higher quota. If larger numbers are not allowed, they argue, the flow of undocumented immigrants will not be stemmed and will ironically become a threat to those who enter the US legally.

Mexican observers are aware that the US has been ailing recently from what analysts call a "triple crisis": post-Watergate distrust of government, declining economic activity and soaring prices and increasing doubts about US roles in international affairs. This third crisis indicates that the US is no longer the undisputed capitalist leader of the world and must be compared to other emerging economic powers, especially Japan and West Germany. Mexico realizes what role it can play as a country with abundant energy resources, and both countries are aware of the interdependence existing between them.

To deal with these border problems, the US has proposed a consolidation of interests through a trilateral common market among Canada, the United States and Mexico. Canada and the US would make available their technology, and Mexico would be in charge of producing the energy resources. The US State Department and Congress favor an alternative proposal of bilateral negotiations between the United States and Mexico. Mexico is hesitant about entering into either agreement however, because of its interest in establishing stronger political and economic ties with other Latin American countries.

These issues complicate the problem of Mexican immigrant labor. To Mexico, labor spillover into the US eases the dilemma of unemployment and subemployment within its borders and helps curb social unrest among its unskilled labor population. Mexico should also consider the possibility that its emigrants may acquire industrial skills in the US and return to Mexico better prepared to render service at home.

On the US side, agriculture and industry still need cheap labor, a need that US workers are not meeting. Further, the US should consider a politically and economically stable Mexico as opposed to the instability in other parts of Latin America. Finally as an ally of the US, Mexico is of tremendous strategic value to the United States.

This mixture of obvious and not-so-obvious interests between the United States and Mexico reaffirms the need for amicable, bilateral negotiations regarding their largest mutual headache: the Mexican immigrant worker.

Predator losses force N.M. sheep ranchers out of business

Lambing season in New Mexico brings a certain amount of anxiety to New Mexico sheep ranchers who know that a sizeable number of lambs are going to fall prey to winged and furred predators. Dr. William P. Stephens, secretary, New Mexico Department of Agriculture says that data collected by NMSU, Agricultural Experiment Station researchers, indicates about 15 percent of lambs born don't survive. Stephens says there are three main causes for sheep and lamb losses: weather, disease and predation.

Referring to a study by agricultural experiment station researchers, V.W. Howard, Jr. and Tony Booth, Stephens says the study indicates predator losses are in addition to losses caused by disease and weather. Previously it has been believed that sheep killed by predators were weak and probably would have died anyway he said.

Researchers Howard and Booth surveyed sheep ranchers in southeastern New Mexico to determine causes of their losses. The original survey, conducted in the 1972-73 lambing seasons, included 100 ranchers. Two years later 15 ranchers had gone out of the sheep business, several citing excessive predator losses as the primary reason for leaving, Stephens said.

Since the lamb losses of these ranchers would probably be higher than those who remained in the business, the survey would reflect a lower average loss figure than if the ranchers had remained in business.

Stephens says, the report shows lamb losses to coyotes and bobcats after the lambs were gathered and "marked" averaged about 6.3 percent. Ranchers indicate the post-marking losses represent only about one-half of the total losses. By including the losses before lambs are gathered and marked, the estimate of predator losses averaged over 12 percent of lambs born.

The study shows losses of lambs to eagles accounted for about one-half of total predator losses.

Lamb losses were in addition to the losses of adult ewes, he said. Predators killed about one percent of all ewes in the study. The major predator of ewes was the coyote.

The most important thing to remember, Stephens says, is that all of the ranchers in the study were practicing predator control at the time. Without control, the losses to predators could have been much higher.

From the business perspective, an annual loss rate of 10 to 15 percent will have a serious impact on any business, whether it is a retail store, a manufacturing company or a ranch, he said.

Crown Cowbells

Bob Bohks was guest speaker at the Canyon Cowbells salad-luncheon, on June 2, at the Community Meeting Room of the Citizens State Bank. Mr. Bohks spoke on Frontier People, and told of the hard work, poor pay, and deadly boredom in every day life. Camp meetings were an outlet, where the pioneers could hear preaching, visit, make new friends, exchange ideas and trade. Women were slaves to work and hardships, and many died from childbirth and diseases in the hard new life. He quoted the old saying, "The cowards never started, and the weaklings never arrived", about the Wagon Trains headed west.

Johnny Bob Stearns was awarded the Canyon Cowbelle Scholarship, and plans to attend New Mexico State in Las Cruces. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Stearns of Nogal.

"Real Cowboys Eat Beef" that is the new bumper sticker of the Cowbells. They are now available at 50 cents each to any interested person wishing to help promote the Beef Industry.

The Crown Cowbells of Corona are in charge of the Lincoln County Ranch Tour on Saturday, June 12. The Canyon members will furnish door prizes and Ditty Bags filled with recipes of both beef and lamb, brochures on Lincoln County, pens, scratch pads, and all kinds of "goodies".

The Father of the Year, will be honored on Fathers' Day, Sunday June 20, with an ice cream social at the Wilson Ranch at Ancho. A gentleman is selected each year, that has given his service and support to the Cowbells in their many projects. That very important man will be surprised at that social.

Jeanette Smoot was hostess of the luncheon, and guests were Bob Bohks and several of the ladies that work in the bank. June Tyree is a new member of Canyon Cowbells, increasing our number to fifty.
