Sandra McFadin Appointed Camp Sierra Blanca Warden

by Doris Cherry

On July 31 New Mexico Secretary of Corrections Eloy Mondragon appointed Sandra McFadin warden of Camp Sierra Blanca, New Mexico Minimum Security Facility.

With her appointment McFadin became the first woman to warden a men's correctional facility in New Mexico. Camp Sierra Blanca

Stanton. Being a minimum security facility, inmates are not locked in, and officers do not carry weapons.

The minimum security facility serves as a transition point for prisoners near the end of their sentences or are nearing parole. In the facility, inmates are expected to assume responsibility for following the rules. When inmates

Carrizozo School Approves Projects

Carrizozo Schools are having a good year.

Superintendent Jim Bayless reported Wednesday morning there were 223 students enrolled. The district had projected 213 students and had built its budget around that enrollment. The official mine the state funds for the district, will be taken on the 40th day of school.

Along with increased enrollment, Bayless told THE NEWS that morale at the school is high. And last Friday, the board of education approved a list of projects to upgrade the campus and enrollment, that will deter-equipment using mill levy and bond dollars.

Bayless was pleased when the board approved capital project funds, from remaining bond dollars, to refurbish the old gym. Funding will include new backboards and rims, refinishing the floor of the gym and the stage. Advertisement for bids is being prepared and will be published

The elementary playground will get an upgrade, with the help of the community. Resident Larry Cearley had offered community volunteers to install playground equipment at a previous meeting, if the school purchased the equipment and excavate the playground. Friday, the board approved $5,000 toward the purchase and excavation, as a capital project, funded by bond money. The project should be completed by October 1. The playground will be leveled and sloped first, then the equipment installed. Finally, the playground security fence will be repaired and as a last playground project, a water fountain.

The security fence projectwas a separate item, the first on Bayless' list of priorities for the SB-9 moneys (the two mill property tax approved by voters). The security fencing will also be repaired around the old practice field, across the street from the elementary playground. Bayless hopes to utilize the field for football practice. A turnstile will be installed at the entrance to Laabs Field. The turnstile is to keep wheeled vehicles-bicycles, skateboards, etc. off the track, while allowing pedestrians to continue to use the track.

Once the track is secure to wheeled vehicles, the track will be repaired. The board also approved spending the money to have the track repaired. A discus/shot cage purchase was also approved. The purchase price included installation. The cage and

EDCLC Works To Bring

Businesses To County

The Economic Development Corporation of Lincoln County (EDCLC) met in Capitan for its regular meeting on July 29. Attendance of directors was a topic of discussion, and it was agreed that the by-laws do not need to be amended to redefine quorum. It is important that anyone agreeing to serve on the board be willing to donate the time required for the organization to be effective. A nominating committee chaired by Richard Mound was appointed to fill three vacancies on the board. Two directors have resigned and one position is open due to the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce appointing Frank Potter to represent

The Board of Directors of them. He was already on the board in an elected position.

The fund raising drive is in progress with volunteers making contact with local businesses asking for support.

Executive director Karen Kopp announced a change of operating policy regarding prospects interested in Lincoln County. Until a decision has been made to make a move, a prospect's identity will remain confidential. Kopp had a list of prospects with which she is currently communicating, each identified by a code name.

EDCLC is currently working through village representatives to obtain inventories of

The allegations were deemed unfounded, McFadin said. Marrs, however, decided to retire, because of his medical situation. Sullivan continues to serve as deputy warden.

McFadin comes to the wardenship after spending most of her adult career in corrections. She worked as a parole officer in Washington state. Then she moved to Roswell, where she was a correctional officer at the Roswell Correc-

> "The most important training is doing the job," she said. McFadin has worked both with women and men in all fields of corrections.

Before McFadin was officially named warden, she began to implement some needed changes at the camp. Several grievances had been filed by the local corrections union, including the claim that employees were getting no train-

McFadin said she found that the CSB employees were not requesting the training. To get the proper training to the appropriate employee. McFadin has begun assigning courses to many of the 30 employees. She hopes this will create an initiative for employees to pursue the training on their own.

She also has called in outside persons to conduct training for employees, such as the food course presented to the kitchen personnel by a representative from the Environment Division. McFadin hopes to offer similar classes to of their sentences, or are inmates who work in the kitchen.

Another grievance from the union was that "higher level" inmates were going to be brought to the facility next McFadin and Sullivan both said the "level" of inmate is often open to interpretation since counties do not define crimes the same and pleabargaining can change the nature of a charge.

McFadin said the process to allow an inmate to be transferred to a minimum security prison is long, and not frivo-

"The rules are very strict," McFadin said. "It's not a frivolous thing. The committee looks at every aspect of the inmate's history, past and present, misconduct reports and so on."

Inmates are scored, based on points given for; the time remaining on their sentence, for instance, those with less than 3.5 years get a zero; severity of offense, past criminal behavior, escape history, misconduct in the last 12 months, detainers, special factors and custody level. Inmates with scores of 0-13 are considered for transfer to a minimum facility.

Inmates convicted of certain crimes, by law, are not eligible for the inmate-release programs offered in the minimum security facility. These inmates are not transferred to minimum security, said McFadin.

Inmates who are not eligible for the programs are those afflicted with serious emotional or personality defects: those convicted of a crime involving assaultive sexual conduct or violence to a . child, or those linked with organized criminal activity (racketeering); and those who, in the opinion of the superintendent, are likely to evoke an adverse public reaction by his presence in the community.

"The classification process is very complex and individualized to each inmates' needs, as well as the services offered by the institution," McFadin said. Inmates are sent to the facility appropriate to their classification.

When inmates arrive at Camp Sierra Blanca, their files are again reviewed by McFadin or Sullivan. "We take it very seriously, and try to balance the needs of the community and inmate.' McFadin said.

Once inmates are okayed by the camp administrators, inmates become part of the minimum security life. The minimum security helps inmates integrate back into society, McFadin said.

Camp Sierra Blanca has 77 beds in four housing units. The kitchen is centralized. One of the most popular programs at Camp Sierra Blanca is the work-release program. Some 40-45 inmates currently are in the work release program. To be part of the program the inmate must sign an eight-page agreement which defines the rules concerning infractions of laws and ordinances, possession of contraband and removal of articles, contacts with outsiders, business activities, job approvals, schedule of work, conduct on the job or at school, driving motor vehicles, medical attention, money and law enforcement advisory. Inmates must sign the agreement, then follow it or be denied the program or experience some other type of discipline.

Businesses or individuals who hire the inmates through the work-release program must also sign a one-page agreement which requires the payment of minimum wage to the inmate-employee and other requirements.

McFadin said the work-release program is very popular with the community, paroled, they are released. Most released inmates go back to their homes, McFadin said. "We discourage them from paroling into this community," she added.

Aside from having to impose some discipline to make staff conform to state correctional policies, McFadin has had few problems since she came in May. In fact, McFadin has had a great reception by the community, "People in Capitan and Fort Stanton have just been so nice," she McFadin is excited about being at Camp Sierra Blanca. She thinks some of her changes have had positive effects on the inmates and staff. "I consider myself a greenhouse and water supply, junior class sponsor. The greenhouse materials will be purchased and the greenhouse constructed as a VoAg class project. Funds were also okayed to clean out, and install a pump on, the existing well on the south side of the campus. The well would be used to water campus lawns and fields. Also included was the drilling of another well to be located near the greenhouse and proposed aquaculture facility.

The proposed purchase of additional computer equipment was pared down to the purchase of a printer fordurafting. Bayless said the school already owns several computers, and he plans to inventory those to determine their best uses. The goal is to have a computer on each teacher's desk and have computers accessible for regular use by students in grades .K-12.

The highest dollar items, the new floor for the new gym and remodeling of the concession stand and lobby of the new gym were tabled. Board members agreed they would accomplish the most needed items first, then see how much of the funds remain.

Also Friday, the board approved some changes in the student handbook to reflect curriculum changes and to correspond to board policy...

A bus route got another look. Nogal is the only area that is experiencing growth in the district. Everett Greer's 22 passenger bus is so crowded that he must make two runs to transport all the children on the route. Bayless said the route has become a management problem, because it requires teachers to remain at the school until after those on the second run leave.

Bayless is working with the state transportation department to get a bigger bus for that route.

Duty hours for teachers were increased. Teachers now are expected to be on campus from 7:50 a.m. to 8:45 p.m. to be present when children start arriving.

Kay Patterson was hired as Athletic Director, Rhoten was hired as junior high girls basketball coach, Candie Aguilar was hired as Writing to Read Instructional Assistant, and Stacy Weyermuller was hired as

The board also approved Bayless recommendation to delete several defunct activity accounts and transfer the moneys to other active accounts. Deleted, with funds transferred, were: a general account with $1,548.93, science club with $16.12, OEA (Office Education Association, defunct) with $64,87, computer club with $79.15, adult computer club with $437.44, honor club with $7.54 and Grizzly raffle with $107.45. All funds were: transferred to the student activity fund, which includes all current student activities.

The first football game is Friday, in Animas. The team scrimmaged against Laguna/Acoma last weekend in Socorro and looked good, Bayless said. The volleyball teams will travel to Capitan this Saturday for the volleyball jamboree scrimmage.

The third phase of the ADA compliance will begin soon. Bayless was to meet with the architect and contractor Ned Pieters.

The yearbooks arrived this week, and a yearbook signing assembly is set for 2:40 p.m. in the old gym today (Thursday), August 26.

A Masters In Disasters

Lincoln County News Columnist

I started working on my Masters in Disasters at a young age. When I was six we lived next door to neighbors with a dog who regularly got a bath. I remember thinking it would be a lot of tun to bathe a dog. Mostly I thought it would be fun to be on the right end of a bath. Likewise, I had resolved at that tender age to be a dentist or a doctor to be on the right end of the needle.

But my family only had a cat. As I pondered what I was missing one day. I realized I had been negligent in not bathing our cat. I'm glad it didn't occur to me to also brush the cat's teath.

First I had to persuade the cat to go in the bathroom with me. That was easy. I just grabbed him around the middle as he was napping and towed him into the bathroom.

The cat, just awakened, was too groggy at first to put up any real resistance. Ol' Michael wasn't all that bad most of the time the cat thought and concluded I was playing some kind of game.

Next I closed and locked the bathroom door. The rest of my family were next door at a neighbor's house. As I filled the tub with warm water the cat looked at me as if to say, "Why does he want me to watch him take a bath?"

When I turned and smiled, Sharpy, (named for his sharp claws) flattened his ears and backed into a comer. As I grabbed him, Sharpy lef out a yowl and tried to squirm away. I cheerfully repeated to him what my mom always said, "This won't hunt a bit,"

Sharpy made a scratching sound as I dragged him across the tile floor. I realized the cat wasn't going to get into the tub by himself. Well, I said to myself while hitching up my pants, that's why I'm here. It was nip and tuck as to if Sharpy was actually going to get into the tub. I admired his resolve. It was too bad that no one was home with us at the time or we both might have been spared much pain, agony and trauma. I got the worst of all three,

I finally got the cat completely wet by tumbling into the tub while holding the scratching and biting cat tightly. At that point I decided to let Sharpy finish bathing by himself now that he was wet. When I opened the door he bolted under the bed in my parent's room to sulk for the rest of the day.

When my parents came home they asked me what I had been doing to get all those scratches. I told them matter-of-factly that I had given the cat a bath. They didn't say much other than look at one another as if to say, "He got that from your side of the family."

My mom said, "Let's not bathe the cat anymore, OK?"

I told them it was all right since I had found that bathing the cat wasn't as much fun as I had thought it was going to be. They gave me a real funny look that I had only seen once before. One day when they were at the neighbor's house I was standing around thinking—that's real dangerous. I looked at the stove and remembered my mom's warnings-don't ever touch the stove! So I walked over and touched it. It was cold metal.

Nothing bad happened. I turned it on. It came on with a whoosh. I turned it off. Then I thought to myself, I bet I can even light the oven. It didn't have an automatic pilot light so you had to use matches, had figured out matches by then and nothing bad had happened, though I didn't demonstrate my knowledge to my mother.

I turned on the oven gas, walked to the counter, got a match, walked back, opened the oven door, stuck my head inside and struck the match. The gas had built up and burned all at once with a dull thud. I retraced my head and turned the oven off. It wasn't all that much fun.

Later my mom came home and put her hand on my head. The hair crinkled off. She was suspicious, "Have you been playing with the stove, young man?" "Only for a moment," I truthfully answered as one of my eyebrows fell off. Whoops.

So I'm real careful about bathing cats and lighting ovens. My cat, Grumpy, has no front claws and, you guessed it, I have an all ric kitchen. Incidentally, my ey

EDITOR-I would like to commend the organizers of the annual Lincoln County Pony Express Race.

Our family has attended the event from time to time over several years, but had become disappointed at the consumption of alcohol and its unfortunate results. However, we decided to attend once again after reading the news item published in our local newspaper.

Our apprehensions were dissolved immediately when we saw not only a uniformed law enforcement official but a sign actually assuring us of our safety at the day's events.

The committee can be confident that if this type of atmosphere continues to be maintained, not only will I return with my family, but, as others become aware of this excellent family-oriented event, the future of the Race and its assoclated activities will be assured.

EDITOR-Upon reading a letter appearing in the News, August 12, 1993 issue, my first reaction was anger at the misrepresentation attributed to a "Dennis McDaniels, Bristow. Oklahoma". However, after a couple of minutes the absurdity of it all became amusing. First a call to the post office, the telephone in the Bristow area, and to a long-time resident of the town, no one by that name was known. There are some McDaniels living there, but none knew a "Dennis". Since the letter was postmarked in Carrizozo, could it be that a person or persons meant to vilify a very peaceful and successful Pony Express Race and Little Punchers Rodeo? Hmmm!

The five teams signing up did experience a little confusion due to the heavy rainfall the evening before the race and it was not known for sure whether one rancher (who could not

by Jay Miller

SANTA FE-Washington's political pundits have a hard time figuring us out.

The 1991 Almanac of American Politics has just been released. This 1,500-page political bible, authored by a U.S. News and World Report writer and a Reader's Digest editor, is a dog-eared com-panion of every Washington lobbyist and political writer.

Michael Barone and Grant Ujifusa stay on top of each state's political scene. They update their publication every two years with a discussion of the latest congressional votes and Washington developments and how they play back in the states.

The two are known for not pulling punches. They are brutally honest and have taken healthy shots at some of New Mexico's Washington delegation in the past.

But this year the barbs are thrown at our state, followed by head-scratching musings about how New Mexico ever elected such an upstanding group of delegates to Washingten.

The author, of course, praise our state's "majestically vast vistas" and marvel at how the nation's "oldest settlement" can be home to its "newest technology," And at that point begins their amazement at New Mexico's apparent contradictions, which are labeled "unusual and even surrealistic."

A fair amount of time is spent describing political "bosses-first Republican, later Democrat-who controlled the vote. Elections in many countries featured irregularities that would have made a Chicago ward committeeman blush," the publication says. Descriptions are in the past tense but do nothing to indicate there has been much change.

The almanac isn't any more charitable about New Mexico's economy. describing it as "downscale Sun Belt."

Particularly troubling to the authors is our "distinctive" state's status as a beliwether of national politics-we've voted for the winner in every presidential election since statehood, except in 1976.

The almanac finally concludes: "Its beliwether status seems more accidental than anything else; it's hard to think of a state more atypical of the nation."

Perhaps the authors should check the subscription lists of U.S. News and World Report and Reader's Digest, for whom they work, and learn that we actually get their publications out here. Some of us even read them. Santa Fe has daily home, delivery of the New York Times-as may some other communities in our. state.

But, oh well, nearly all of us in the nation like to brag about our states being unique. New Mexicans have some corroboration.

As for our "corrupt" state's Washington delegation, the almanac says Sen. Pete. Domenici's "principles have cost him a chance at the Republican leadership."

Rep. Steve Schiff "is the sort of man who goes where his sense of right and wrong take him, regardless of poli-

Rep. Bill Richardson is "an ambitious politician who has sometimes taken impolitic stands apparently just because he thought they were right,"

Sen. Jeff Bingaman rose because "bright young people Bruce.

are not nearly as numerous as they are in New York or Washington or Los Angeles."

Rep. Joe Skeen is a little more understandable. The only out-of-the-ordinary comment about the GOP representative is that 'on occasion, he cooperates with Demo-crate" to get what he needs for his district.

But there's a happy ending. The authors finally take solace in Gov. Bruce King-"the single constant in New Mexico politics. They chronicle how New Mexicans keep electing, very different governors be-fore and after King, but they always return to the Santa Fe County rancher with "a cowboy walk and a Little Texas malaprop-prone personality."

Well, at least we have a politician Washington pundits can figure out. And we'd worried that the rest of the counswiftly in New Mexico politics try couldn't understand 'ol

Water Quality Act Will Help Preserve New Mexico's Water

SANTA FE-New Mexico's precious water resources now have a new ally: the Amendments to the Water Quality Act passed by the 1993 Legislature are now in effect. Environment Secretary Judith Espinosa, Chair of the Water Quality Control Commission, said the Amendments will help preserve New Mexico's water quality. "Many new provisions have been added to the Act to allow us the same flexibility other states have in preventing our water from becoming polluted."

When permits issued by the Department or water quality standards are violated, the Act now allows Administrative Compliance Orders to be issued to ensure corrective action. Civil penalties for such violations - have also been increased - from a maximum of $5,000 a day to a maximum of $15,000 a day.

The Act also now allows criminal penalties to be filed by the Attorney General or by District Attorney for discharging a water contaminant without a permit, for making false statements in applications and reports, or for failing to monitor, sample or report as required by a permit. The severity of the criminal penalties for knowingly violating the regulations ranges from second to fourth dezree felonies. In the past, all criminal penalties were misdemeanors. The State will have the burden of proving "imminent and substantial danger to public health" or "substantial adverse environmental impact."

The Water Quality Control Commission membership was also expanded under the Amendments. Two additional representatives of the public will be appointed to the Commission, bringing the membership to 11. Governor Bruce King has appointed Jeff Witte as one of the new Commission members. The second appointment is still pending.

The Amendments also call for-the enactment of new regulations, including those governing disposal of septage and sludge.

Anyone with questions about the Amendments or desiring copies of them should contact the Surface Water Quality Bureau, New Mexico Environment Department, P.O. Box 26110, Santa Fe, N.M. 87502; (505) 827-0187. classifieds

The Other Side

By OWEN RUSSELL

Last week I listed a variety of subjects to talk about, and I spoke about several of them, but a few were overlooked. ("Spoked" was intentional because when you use words like listed and overlooked, you must be consistent throughout the paragraph. When I was in school, tense referred not only to a form of speech but also an emotion experienced by my English teacher when she tried to figure out what I was saying.)

One of the subjects I started on was the art of legal writing, but when I got past the definition to "legalese" which I stated was closely related to "jargonese", I ran out of steam, so I will continue on the concept this time.

I have often wondered what passed the legal mind when it came to trying to put thoughts down on paper. Does what they think about really resemble how they write about it? So I asked my resident legal writing expert, U.R. Obfuscated, Esq., to enlighten me a bit. (That already sounds like the first half of an oxymoron. I didn't know the term "enlighten" was an understandable concept to a lawyer.)

"First," he said, "you have to bear in mind the purpose you are trying to accomplish." The essence of the legal profession is precision in communication, and the overall purpose of legal writing is to reduce generalities to specifics." "However," he continued, "lawyers being the conservative animals they are, they tend to hang on to archaic terminology simply because the phrase they are using, no matter how horribly constructed, has been upheld in some prior case."

"Oh," I said. "What you are really doing," : he continued, "is attempting to communicate with another: lawyer who may be grinding? the other side of the axe, so your purpose is to create razor: sharp clarity in those provisions which you deem important and to avoid calling attention to those which you desire not to discuss and you? hope your reader will agree with you that your emphasis is correct."

"Huh?", I interjected. (Good Lord, I've created a monster.).

"The concept of convenient ambiguity plays a large role; in legal writing," he continued. This is a form of creative writing in which only one door to the barn is left. open." "In other words, if the mule gets out, at least he will be on your side of the fence."1 This also fulfills the obligation of stating your subject specifically enough to exclude? extraneous meanings, but at' the same time leaving it general enough to include those things you overlooked when you were drafting it."

"Is there more?", I asked. "You bet!", he replied. "We legal scholars have developed a number of words and phrases that are designed to state specifically what we mean without disclosing the fact that we don't mean what we say we mean." "Words like whereas' or 'hereinbefore' or thereinabove or 'insomuchas',

Helping Children With Disabilities

There are an estimated 9.000 children with disabilities who may be eligible for Supplemental Security Income in New Mexico. The SSI Outreach Project staff are looking for these children. They need your help.

Children with disabilities in families with limited incomes can receive up to $434 a month from the Social Security Administration. The exact amount depends on the family's income. In New Mexico. children who qualify for SSI will receive Medicaid. Medicaid provides free health care to help pay doctor bills.

Social service workers, health care providers, educators, religious and community groups, children's advocates and others who work with children are being asked to help tell eligible families about SSI and get them to call THE ARC OF NEW MEXI-CO SSI OUTREACH PRO-JECT AT 883-4630 OR 1-800-358-6493.

Many people do not know about SSI for children with disabilities. Families should apply now, whether they applied before or not. New rules make it easier for children to

(Sigh!)

"In interpreting language" he continued, you not only consider what is written, but also what is not." 'An experienced legal draftsman must consider not only what he says, but must also anticipate those issues others will raise when they try to read between the lines." "When you are dealing with the vital interests of your clients, if it requires more than one word to be concise and inclusive, you'll use it." "By the way, what was your question?"

"Never mind," I groaned.

After a few minutes of thinking about what he had said, I resolved to send his mother a sympathy card and to make a liberal donation to the spotted owl habitat protective society.

CAPITAN NOTES

The new Olympic Museum opened in Lausanne, Switzerland, in June according to Arts and Antiques magazine. The Museum is dedicated to "Olympian" the union of sport, art, and culture meant to produce the highest in human achievement..." In my way of thinking Capitan has the same "high human achievement" only in a smaller way. Look at our sports programexcellent-look at our art interest-numerous talented artistslook at our culture-ranchers. The ranchers made the "Western Culture." Our Smokey Bear parade on the 4th of July has kept true culture.

I have lived in New Mexico over 50 years but I never realized the impact the real rancher not the drugstore cowboy made till I moved to Capitan. I have to admit I was intimidated when I saw such big men with highheeled boots on and those 10 gallons hats especially sitting at the table with their hats on. When I saw the real cowboy remove his hat when he came into the house and fan a fireplace fire to get it going I had a complete conversion about the real cowboy-the rancher. Talk about culturethat is Capitan's culture.

REAL RANCHERS and cowboys to mention a few that I can remember are: Trankie Silva, N.E. Britton, Fletcher Hall, Wally Ferguson, Bob Shafer, Sterling Spencer, Bill Gallacher, Walt Wilson, Sid Goodloe, Shirley Goodloe, Betty Schrecengost, Bert Pfingston, Bobby D. Crenshaw, John Robinson. and Johnson Stearns, historian for the cowboy.

Then my brown-eyed boy friend being a "green-horn" from Pennsylvania wanted to be a big help when old Bill Gallacher was branding. Bill, grinning says, "Alton, you be reached the night preceding the race) was planning to open his pasture gate for the riders. However, like a true Western rancher, he was there and we thank him and all the other ranchers who not only gave permission for riders to cross their land, but some even helped tag the race route, and all were there to open and close their gates. Thank you every one.

One team did not get the message and arrived late, thus decided not to run. The only thing to mar an otherwise good race happened when one rider was unable to turn his horse through the gate and the animal tried jumping the cattle guard. As a result its leg was broken, and our official veterinarian, Dr. R. Washburn went immediately to examine the horse, and after conferring with the owner it was decided to put the horse down. Thank you, Rebecca Washburn, DVM, for your expertise and professional knowledge. As most people know, horses frequently are injured at race tracks everywhere-I have been to horse shows where accidents occurred and the animal was humanely put down. It happens in pastures, stalls or wherever horses are, that they often are seriously injured. Did Mysterious Mr. McD ever see and care for a horse badly injured by barbed wire?

The present Committee started out with a trail ride in June, and we appreciate each of you—but, we especially thank the two men who dug the pit and served up a delicious barbecue with all the trimmings. It was a fun time.

Much time was devoted to clearing, leveling and building the new arena. Most of the work was done by a few volunteers who really are appreciated. You know who you are, and so do we, and we think you are great!

A word to Mr. McD—for the past 25 years the Pony Express race, first envisioned by Nat Gnatkowski and the late Truman A. Spencer Jr., and with plenty of input from a number of others, put together this historical minature race commemorating an important part of history in the West. Although a very expensive endeavor, the Pony Express fulfilled a method of communication until extension of the railroad on westward. Read the well-researched article written by Mrs. Dorothy Guck which appeared in both newspapers in the county and was later picked up by the AP wireline for publication in many newspapers. We are proud of Mrs. Guck and her contribution. Thank you very much.

Another fund raiser for this year's race was serving lunch to the Capitan Alumni. Mothers, daughters and grandmothers helped in this endeavor, and are also to be commended. Our gracious, talented and hardworking Postmistress was, as usual, helping and urging us always. Betty Joiner, you are wonderful and we appreciate you so much. The envelopes and history inserts were great. Our Chairman,

Lisa Annala, was everywhere and much credit goes to her. The race ended about 10:00 A.M., and a very successful auction began about 11:15. There were many nice donations and the bidding went fast under the experienced Bob Bullard and helper. Thanks to those who donated items and/or bought them. A number of cash donations were made and we appreci-

At 1 p.m. the Little Punchers Rodeo began, and if you missed it you missed a really neat event organized and directed by Sherry Goodloe Underwood and her husband, John. There were 18 events and the youth were from two to 16 years of age. The winner in each activity received a halter. and all other participants received a bandana with a Pony Express logo imprinted. One slight annoyance occurred when some person/persons kept disconnecting the electricity. No problem! The announcer, Sid Goodloe, has a fine voice which projects very well. Thanks to each of you-it was a really funfilled activity.

Reference was made in the silly letter regarding the . horses running on the black top. The race rules allow riders to ride within 50 feet of the established route, and the Committee gives credit to the rider who knows his horse and has common sense enough to handle the short 100 yards or so. After all, the team riders train their mounts for a considerable length of time and care for them because each team is there to WIN! And win they did. Philbert P. Vigil, winner, took home $1750.00 and was awarded a $1500.00 made-to-order saddle; second and third place teams each received a split, giving each team $875.00. And, to my knowledge, for the first time, the last two teams were given $250.00 each for their endeavors.

Mr. McD must have been dreaming or imbibing too much as there were two qualified EMT's, and the Supervisor of EMT's lives directly across the road from the finish line and arena. And, since when is it so difficult to see and read the words on cars parked and occupied by uniformed officers of the law? They were there to prevent happenings of the past few years and I would note they were successful. Thank you for being there for all of us.

Maybe you do things differently in Bristow, or wherever you came from (maybe in the neighborhood???), please go back and take charge of whatever you are capable of handling, but please, we don't need you here.

However, like a true Western rancher, he was there and we thank him and all the other ranchers who not only gave permission for riders to cross their land, but some even helped tag the race route, and all were there to open and close their gates. Thank you every one.

One team did not get the message and arrived late, thus decided not to run. The only thing to mar an otherwise good race happened when one rider was unable to turn his horse through the gate and the animal tried jumping the cattle guard. As a result its leg was broken, and our official veterinarian, Dr. R. Washburn went immediately to examine the horse, and after conferring with the owner it was decided to put the horse down. Thank you, Rebecca Washburn, DVM, for your expertise and professional knowledge. As most people know, horses frequently are injured at race tracks everywhere—I have been to horse shows where accidents occurred and the animal was humanely put down. It happens in pastures, stalls or wherever horses are, that they often are seriously injured. Did Mysterious Mr. McD ever see and care for a horse badly injured by barbed wire?

The present Committee started out with a trail ride in June, and we appreciate each of you-but, we especially thank the two men who due the pit and served up a delicious barbecue with all the trimmings. It was a fun time.

Much time was devoted to clearing, leveling and building the new arena. Most of the work was done by a few volunteers who really are appreciated. You know who you are, and so do we, and we think you are great!

A word to Mr. McD-for the past 25 years the Pony Express race, first envisioned by Nat Gnatkowski and the late Truman A. Spencer Jr., and with plenty of input from a number of others, put together this historical minature race commemorating an important part of history in the West, Although a very expensive endeavor, the Pony Express fulfilled a method of communication until extension of the railroad on westward. Read the well-researched article written by Mrs. Dorothy Guck which appeared in both newspapers in the county and was later picked up by the AP wireline for publication in many newspapers. We are proud of Mrs. Guck and her contribution. Thank you very much.

Another fund raiser for this year's race was serving lunch to the Capitan Alumni. Mothers, daughters and grandmothers helped in this endeavor, and are also to be commended. Our gracious, talented and hardworking Postmistress was, as usual, helping and urging us always. Betty Joiner, you are wonderful and we appreciate you so much. The envelopes and history inserts were great. Our Chairman, Lisa Annala, was everywhere and much credit goes to her.

The race ended about 10:00 A.M., and a very successful auction began about 11:15. There were many nice donations and the bidding went fast under the experienced Bob Bullard and helper. Thanks to those who donated items and/or bought them. A number of cash donations were made and we appreciate that.

At 1 p.m. the Little Punchers Rodeo began, and if you missed it you missed a really neat event organized and directed by Sherry Goodlee Underwood and her husband, John. There were 18 events and the youth were from two to 16 years of age. The winner in each activity received a halter, and all other participants received a bandana with a Pony Express logo imprinted. One slight annoyance occurred when some person/persons kept disconnecting the electricity. No problem! The announcer, Sid Goodloe, has a fine voice which projects very well. Thanks to each of you-it was a really funfilled activity.

Reference was made in the silly letter regarding the horses running on the black top. The race rules allow riders to ride within 50 feet of the established route, and the Committee gives credit to the rider who knows his horse and has common sense enough to handle the short 100 yards or so. After all, the team riders train their mounts for a considerable length of time and care for them because each team is there to WIN! And win they did. Philbert P. Vigil, winner, took home $1750.00 and was awarded a $1500.00 made-to-order saddle; second and third place teams each received a split, giving each team $875.00. And, to my knowledge, for the first time. the last two teams were given $250.00 each for their

Mr. McD must have been dreaming or imbibing too much as there were two qualified EMT's, and the Supervisor of EMT's lives directly across the road from the finish line and arena. And, since when is it so difficult to see and read the words on cars parked and occupied by uniformed officers of the law? They were there to prevent happenings of the past few years and I would note they were successful. Thank you for being there for all of us.

Maybe you do things differently in Bristow, or wherever you came from (maybe in the neighborhood???), please go back and take charge of whatever you are capable of handling, but please, we don't need you here.

Apple Stickers

The state's apple growers are getting support from New Mexico State University's Cooperative Extension Service to better promote their crop. New grading standards will help buyers better determine the types of New Mexico apples for sale. The new standards will appear in the form of stickers on apples to cover size, quality, color and texture. Four free workshops will be held to teach the new standards to growers: Mayhill-Aug. 27, Las Cruces-Aug. 28, Corrales-Sept. 8. and Velarde-Sept. 9. For more information call Esteban Herrera at 646-2921, the New Mexico Apple Council at 425-7016, or your local-county extension agent.

Exercise Is Important For Childrens' Health

By JERRILYNN LILYBLADE

In a nation faced with a $900 billion plus health bill, health habits play an important role. While adults are exercising less and weighing more, children's health habits also are declining. They learn from adults to browse video stores and sit in front of the television for entertainment. Parents drive them to school and to the mall. They eat frozen dinners, fast food for lunch, and sugar-laden cereal for breakfast.

Recent polls show that Americans' health habits have declined. Today only 33 percent say they exercise strenuously three or more times a week. According to the 1992 Baxter Survey of American Health Habits, the percentage of Americans who exercise has declined steadily in the past decade. In addition, increasing numbers of Americans weigh more than they did 10 years

During the warm summer weather, games like Nintendo and Sega Genesis are becoming more popular than "hideand-go-seek" and other outdoor activities. These games exercise little more than children's wrists. Because these children are the adults of tomorrow who will face an even larger health care bill, they need to build healthy habits today that will lead to healthy bodies tomorrow.

A recent Harris poll shows that 85 percent of American parents think their children are physically fit; however, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control found that only 37 percent of children are fit.

. They also found that the percentage of children who vigorously : exercise . three . or more times, jago week has dropped 40 percent since 1984. Parents can't expect their children to get enough exercise at school. Many physical education programs are under tight budgets.

"Without realizing it, many parents are establishing routines that will effect their children's lives for years to come," says Jamie Phillips, R.N. wellness coordinator for the Rocky Mountain Health Care Corporation. "Adults need to play an active role in their children's physical fit-

Fit kids are healthier, happier kids. They require fewer visits to the family physician and miss fewer days of school. Parents also miss fewer days of work to care for sick chil-

Unfit children tend to have lower self-esteem. Parents should encourage their children to join local sports teams or send them to sports camps. Their children will not only learn fitness habits but will make friends and develop selfesteem. Household and outdoor chores also can help your child exercise. Vacuuming and other inside chores build strength and burn calories, Older children can help with yard work and farm chores. Organize family events around exercise. A picnic in the park can include a rousing game of frisbee and baseball. A trip to the pool or the water park makes exercise fun. Take a walk after dinner. Family events will not only strengthen bodies but will strengthen relationships, too.

Dieting is not for children.

While parents cut back on fat, many physicians say that children should get at least 30 percent of their daily calories from fat. Any less deprives them of important vitamins. minerals, calories and energy they need for healthy growth. Fix balanced meals that include all the essentials of the food pyramid. Cut back, but don't cut out entirely on sweets. Encourage healthy snacks of nuts, yogurt, fruits and milk.

Poor health habits lead to a lifetime of health problems. Experts say children are unlikely to follow an exercise program-if their parents don't.
