mil levy funds of $25,000, and had an operating cost as of October 31st of $44,000. With revenues of $11,640, the clinic in Corona has an operating loss of $11,000, Mitchell said. "Which PHS took care of and paid. Not the mil levy," he added. "The mil levy is $25,000; that's the county's obligation in that regard, i.e. the public's obligation," Mitchell said.

The Carrizozo clinic's operating cost is $1,027,000, for which it receives mil levy funds of $360,000 and $95,000, and had revenue of $393,000, Mitchell said. "It has an operating loss of $180,000 which is born by PHS, i.e. the hospital board," he added.

Regarding the county's ambulance service as of October 31, Mitchell said the operating cost was $1,167,000 and resulted in a loss of $90,000, an amazingly low figure compared to other EMS systems around the state, according to Mitchell. He told the county commissioners and the public audience that any ambulance service which is run for the public interest operates at a huge loss. "But (EMS director) Jim Stover and that crew do better than anybody I've ever seen in over 28 years of looking at this stuff," he said.

Mitchell said that the county's health care systems will be all right until the end of this year, but referred to some projected figures for the county's 2008-09 fiscal year provided by county manager Tom Stewart. "Available under the hospital proceeds for this coming year is $1,738,000. Available for the clinics after June 30th, 2008, is $212,698," he said. "The county receives $800,000 from (PHS) for operating the hospital." He suggested that, if no money at all was spent on the hospital or the ambulances during the next year, "we could get through to 2009."

Some residents have indicated that the LCMC improvements currently underway should be curtailed because of funding issues now being faced by the county, but Mitchell disagreed. "Working with the county, we have saved up over $4,000,000 in advance for that project so that the county wouldn't be indebted to anybody," Mitchell said. "We had the money to build it. It is the rehabilitation center and the therapy center. It isn't some public swimming pool inside the cotton picking thing, it's a therapy pool for all you guys and gals that think that at age 60 we ought to be able to act like 30 year olds, and when we get our hips replaced and our knees replaced, or have a stroke or a heart attack and need rehabilitation, that's the place we'll go to." He pointed out that halting the new construction would require the breach of a contract, an action that could have consequences and repercussions in the future. "We'd have to pay out a lot of money and get nothing in return if we breached it," Mitchell said.

If the county pays only enough into the health care system to cover those fees that it is required to pay in 2008, the funding will fall $280,000 short, Mitchell said. "In order to get reimbursement from Medicaid, the county's obligated to pay $296,091," he told the county commissioners. Mitchell said that part of the county's contract relies on the county's support of the Sole Community Provider funding for the hospital. "The total for Medicaid and the Sole Community Provider program is $988,000," Mitchell said. Regarding the clinics, the county's contribution has been approximately $542,000, he said. "That's $432,000 for the clinic in Carrizozo, $25,000 in Corona and $85,000 at Hondo," Mitchell said. "That total is $1,530,000. Those are what you have to pay for every year in order to help us take care of indigents, those who can't pay, and to take care of the clinics."

So what does all this mean? According to Mitchell, if a new mil levy is not approved by the voters, there will be some major changes in the clinic system in 2009, and officials will have to find new funding sources to purchase new ambulances.

Mitchell told the county commissioners that it is imperative to hold another mil levy election, this time for 3 mils instead of 4.25, and that the election should be held before July of 2008. Holding the election after the first of July would mean that the county must operate without mil levy funding for the following fiscal year. If an election is held and the mil levy fails again, the county must wait two years before having another mil levy election. "The 4.25 was estimated to be exactly what we needed to improve the hospital and take care of the clinics and such, and to do the job right," Mitchell said. He added that with a 3 mil levy, the goals can still be reached although it will take a little longer.

Mitchell suggested that, without mil levy funds, the county officials should consider which clinics it can afford to maintain and which might have to be closed. "The board is recommending to PHS that we close the Rose Clinic at the end of the Pat (and ghost) Told It Like This . . .

EDITOR'S NOTE -- Not long after the escape, Pat Garrett, the sheriff who killed the Kid at Pei Maxwell's ranch near Fort Sumner, published a book with the involved title of "The Authentic Life of Billy the Kid; the Noted Desperado of the Southwest, Whose Deeds of Daring Have Made his Name a Terror in New Mexico, Arizona and Northern Mexico." Like many a latterday celebrity, Pat had a ghost -- Ash Upson, a sometime newspaperman and later a partner with Garrett in an ill-fated real estate venture.

During the weeks following the Kid's escape, I was censured by some for my seeming unconcern and inactivity in the matter of his re-arrest. I was egotistical enough to think I knew my own business best, and preferred to accomplish this duty, if possible at all, in my own way. I was constantly, but quietly, at work, seeking sure information and maturing my plans of action. I did not lay about The Kid's Old haunts, nor disclose my intentions and operations to any one. I stayed at home, most of the time, and busied myself about the ranch. If my seeming unconcern deceived the people and gave The Kid confidence in his security, my end was accomplished. It was my belief that The Kid was still in the country and haunted the vicinity of Fort Sumner, yet there was some doubt mingled with my belief. He was never taken for a fool, but was credited with the possession of extraordinary forethought and cool judgment, for one of his age. It seemed incredible that, in his situation, with the extreme penalty of the law, the reward of detection, and the way of successful flight and safety open to him -- with no known tie to bind him to that dangerous locality, -- it seemed incredible that he should linger in the territory. My first task was to solve my doubts.

Early in July I received a reply from a letter I had written to Mr. Brazil. I was at Lincoln when this letter came to me. Mr. Brazil was dodging and hiding from The Kid. He feared his vengeance on account of the part which he, Brazil had taken in his capture. There were many others who "trembled in their boots" at the knowledge of his escape; but most of them talked him out of his resentment, or conciliated him in some manner.

Brazil's letter gave me no positive information. He said he had not seen The Kid since his escape, but, from many indications, believed he was still in the country. He offered me any assistance in his power to recapture him. I again wrote to Brazil, requesting him to meet me at the mouth of Tayban Arroyo, an hour after dark, on the night of the 13th of July.

A gentleman named John W. Poe, who had superceded Frank Stewart, in the employ of the stockmen of the Canadian, was at Lincoln on business, as was one of my deputies, Thomas K. McKinney. I first went to McKinney, and told him I wanted him to accompany me on a business trip to Arizona; that we would go down home and start from there. He consented. I then went to Poe, and, him, I disclosed my business and all its particulars, showing him my correspondence. He, also, complied with my request that he should accompany me.

We three went to Roswell, and started up the Rio Pecos from there on the night of July 10th. We rode mostly in the night, followed no roads, but taking unfrequented routes, and arrived at the mouth of Tayban Arroyo, five miles south of Fort Sumner, one hour after dark, on the night of the 13th. Brazil was not there. We waited nearly two hours, but he did not come. We rode off a mile or two, staked our horses and slept until daylight. Early in the morning we rode up into the hills and prospected awhile with our field-glasses.

Poe was a stranger in the county and there was little danger that he would meet anyone who knew him at Sumner. So, after an hour or two spent in the hills, he went into Sumner to take observations. I advised him, also, to go to ambulance services under a single umbrella with the county services, owned by the county and operated by PHS.

County Gets Update on EMS Program

"Three of those ambulances have more than 200,000 miles on them and another has in excess of 100,000 miles," Stover said. "One in Carrizozo has 230,000 miles," he added.

Although plans were to replace those high-mileage rigs over the next two years, Stover said that is not likely to happen since the 4.25 million failed to pass voter approval. Stover said he has cancelled plans to purchase a new critical care unit that was to be used for patient transfers, and will not purchase the new cardiac monitors that had been previously budgeted for.

"We do go out occasionally and put in for grants," Stover said, and he has recently applied for a grant to fund the purchase of a new ambulance. If the county's EMS is awarded the grant, the process of getting the new unit takes a long time, he said, so the new ambulance would likely not be in service until 2009. "It takes between 19 months and two years from the time you get the grant to actually have the ambulance on the street," Stover said.

Stover told the county commissioners that he tries to keep some of the newer ambulances in the stations that service rural areas, essentially because rescuing a broken-down ambulance in those areas is more difficult and time consuming. "It's a long way to get some help to them," he said.

Four of the county's five EMS stations are staffed by licensed volunteer Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) who only get paid while they are actually responding to an emergency. The EMS station in Ruidoso is staffed full-time by paid paramedics and EMTs.

Stover said that being able to staff the stations with volunteers probably saves the county somewhere near one and a half million dollars per year.

"One of the things that I don't think the public understands is that we're paid a flat rate when we transfer somebody," Stover told the county officials. "It's regardless of what we spend on the patient. So if there's a new drug out there that we can give a cardiac patient and we put it on the ambulance, and that drug costs 500 dollars, we get no additional fees for doing that service," he said. "The only way we can add skills is if you have supplemental funding sources to bring that in."

One service provided by Lincoln County EMS that might have to be re-examined is the stand-by units at sporting and other events. The county has traditionally provided on-scene ambulances and staff at football games, rodeo events, running and bicycling events and other outdoor activities at no charge, but Stover said he didn't know if that policy will continue without additional funding. "It's not so much the cost of the unit, but the hours of staffing," Stover said.

year," Mitchell said. If the next mill levy fails, the county will have to look to bonds for funding, he added. "We won't have any choice. If we have to go to bonds, for the first time ever, we'll be indebted and we'll have to pay interest," he said. "There's not some huge surplus of money here someplace," Mitchell said. "It's not there. It never has been there."

County commission vice-chair Eileen Lovelace questioned Mitchell as to why the Rose Clinic in Capitan, which is not owned by the county and has not received mill levy funding in the past, should be closed as a result of the recently failed mill levy.

Mitchell told her that the hospital board has to cut back expenses.

"So your first cut would be the Rose Clinic?" Lovelace asked.

Mitchell assured her that the LCMC board would "take another look" at the recommendation to close the Rose. He said that, prior to the failure of mill levy, the hospital board had planned to ask the county commissioners to consider taking ownership of the Rose Clinic and contracting with PHS for its operation, as is done with the Carrizozo and Corona clinics. "That was the plan, but it's a cost that we're going to have to look to," Mitchell said.

THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Alien Debate Continues

By Ruth Hammond

When the word alien is mentioned there are all kinds of reactions. Some people think of aliens as people from other countries who enter the United States without the proper paperwork while others think of aliens as being from out of this world or creatures from outer space. The space aliens are getting much publicity here in the state. A couple of weeks ago the rhubarb was about the design for the state float that will be in the Rose Bowl parade on New Year's Day. The float will include three aliens, from outer space, of course, because they will be made of split peas. There has been no explanation as to why split peas will be used or who will split all those peas or why green chiles from New Mexico are not being used for the float.

However, there is now a new rhubarb about aliens, all because of an ad campaign depicting aliens touting that New Mexico, Earth, is the best place in the universe. The ads are different but someone likes them because we received notice the state won a national award for the ads.

Only in New Mexico could aliens get coverage to this extent. Maybe the naysayers are complaining to get more publicity or maybe they are serious. Maybe the people in favor of the alien exposure believe it will be beneficial. And maybe the little green men are responsible for it all.

Let's not jump to conclusions, but look at the facts. It is considered to be a fact that Area 51 does exist though the powers that be deny it. It is also considered to be a fact that aliens have visited earth from outer space. And it is considered to be a fact that some aliens live near us.

Even if you don't want to believe this mumbo jumbo, have you stopped to look at some people? They may look like us, but are they actually like us? Yes, the differences may be subtle, but there are differences. Could it be that they are from another state or is it from another planet?

Suppose for a minute that half the people in the area are actually from another planet. Why would they want to live here? Is it because you are here? Yes, you are lovable and nice, but is that reason enough for an entity to come here from millions of miles away, across many galaxies?

Or is it because the aliens believe they can improve the area to where even more aliens would come here? If they do improve the area, how will they improve it and why would they want to improve it and what was wrong with where they were living before invading the earth?

Many questions could be asked, and probably will be asked before the alien debate calms down, but in fairness to these out of this world creatures who probably aren't green, either split pea green or green chile green, if they are here by choice it could be an indication that earth is the best place in the universe. And aren't you glad it is?

Even if you don't believe in the alien theory, it is fun to speculate and watch as the alien debates continue.

"The Rose Clinic should be very operational until the end of June, 2008," Stone said.

However, LCMC and Presbyterian Healthcare Systems (PHS) operate on a fiscal schedule that runs from January 1 to December 31, unlike the county's fiscal year which runs from the first of July to the end of June.

Stone expressed disappointment on behalf of the Rose Clinic advisory committee in that they were not invited to the LCMC board meeting in which the recommendation to close the clinic was discussed. He said that when the advisory board first met with PHS and the LCMC board, they were told that they were "part of the family."

"We signed an agreement saying that we would not drink, cuss or spit tobacco on the floor during their meetings, but the bottom line is that we were not included in these meetings," Stone said. Stone suggested that if the county commissioners, the LCMC Board and PHS would keep the Rose Clinic open until the end of June, it would give them an opportunity to seek out additional sources of funding to keep the facility open. He also suggested that a portion of the $800,000 gained by the county annually through its lease of LCMC to PHS could be used to support the clinic.

"We need that care in Capitan," Stone said. "Don't take it away from us, we can make it work. Do not allow the health care of Lincoln County to become involved in the political arena," he said.

County commission vice-chair Eileen Lovelace, who sits on the advisory board for the county owned health clinic in Corona, said that the Corona board was also not invited to the meeting in which the closure of the Rose Clinic was discussed. "I wondered why, and if any of the clinics were invited," Lovelace said.

Big Dry Syndicate

★ Inside the Capitol

by Jay Miller, Syndicated Columnist

SANTA FE -- As predicted, politicians throughout the state are rushing to take advantage of New Mexico's four open congressional seats.

But voters will not have to wade through a ballot full of unfamiliar names on election day. Preprimary nominating conventions held by each party next March will whittle the hopefuls down to about three in the crowded races.

Candidates must receive at least 20 percent of their convention vote to get on the June primary ballot. Theoretically four, or even five, candidates could garner the required 20 percent, but those chances range from unlikely to nearly impossible.

Until this year, candidates not making the cut could secure additional nominating petition signatures and squeeze in on the bottom of the ballot. But the 2007 Legislature eliminated that possibility. If a large number of candidates are still vying for a ballot spot next March, it could be possible that none of them will receive the required 20 percent.

The situation is most likely to arise with Democrats in northern New Mexico's 3rd Congressional District, but it could happen anywhere in either party. It would be a disaster in the north, where Democrats reign supreme, not to have a candidate make the ballot.

The Legislature has time to change the rules in the 2008 short session before the preprimary conventions. But it would take a two-thirds majority to allow it to go into effect immediately.

In the 2007 sessions both parties voted overwhelmingly to tighten access to the ballot. But this time, Republicans might not be so willing to loosen them again if it might mean a huge Democrat embarrassment.

Complicating matters further, House Speaker Ben Lujan has told blogger Joe Monahan that he doesn't think legislation is needed. That has raised some eyebrows since Lujan's son, Ben Ray Lujan, a member of the Public Regulation Commission, will be one of the stronger candidates in that race.

But Speaker Lujan's comment may not be motivated by favoritism so much as a belief that a messy legislative battle can probably be avoided.

Several candidates are likely to eliminate themselves by the time of the convention. And it may be possible that the parties themselves can establish a rule for run-off elections among the top candidates.

It isn't really necessary to get as many candidates on the ballot as possible. They are ranked according to the number of votes they receive at the convention and usually the candidate in the first position wins.

I can't remember a single time that a candidate who got on the ballot by submitting extra petitions ever won a race. It mainly has been a face-saving opportunity.

A candidate denied ballot access by a nominating convention could go to court and attempt to overturn the law. But why spend the money when the combination of prevailing in court and then winning with the voters is such an extremely long shot.

The law on ballot access gets changed often. At one time, filing fees were high enough to discourage all but the most serious of candidates. Not surprisingly, it became a civil rights issue.

It was replaced by a high amount of signatures, which were later lowered and combined with a preprimary nominating convention. The conventions have bounced in and out of the law. Actually they are a service to voters because they winnow the field for the ballot.

The 1972 Democratic senatorial primary showed us what happens when there are no rules for ballot access. The seat was open as the result of Sen. Clinton Anderson's retirement, so 25 Democrats filed for the office.

It was chaotic. The eventual winner of the seat was a Republican named Pete Domenici.

Equally as interesting was the Democratic primary for the northern district House seat. A group of lawyers at the Bull Ring, next to the Capitol filed for their bar maid, Sparkle Plenty, received 3,470 votes.

Old Lincoln

by Roslie Dunlap

Lincoln County is losing two good officials: when Martha Guevara retires and Rick Silva moves to Santa Fe. Martha was always available and so knowledgeable on so much of Lincoln County.

The Wortley Hotel was hosts to the Lincoln people and their guests Thanksgiving Day. The Cowboys were playing and several wanted to go home and watch the game but you know they were all having such a good time and really no hurry to go home. It is always so nice to see old friends under such fun times.

The Lee Ruckers had lots of company over the holidays. Besides her granddaughter and family, 23 members of Lee's joined them the day after Thanksgiving.

The Arrowsmiths enjoyed the holiday with his parents, Rex and Bonnie, in Tucson.

Susie (Shree) and Dick Kuns had Thanksgiving with Susie's parents Mr. and Mrs. Bill Shreecogost in Santa Fe.

Others visited with family members in Roswell and elsewhere.

Winter arrived over the weekend with the snow. It was not a wet snow in Lincoln. Other areas in the county received more snow than we did.

Jon Amastac was coming up from El Paso and was just ahead of the storm. It started snowing just before he finished unloading. Max, his new dog, loved the snow and cold weather. Jon saw several elk signs in the area when he and Max were taking their early morning walk.

Vandals did a lot of damage to the coke machine at the La Placita over the holidays.

The Old Fashioned Christmas in Lincoln will be Saturday and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m.

Sunnyside, seven miles above Sumner, and interview M. Randolph, Esq., in whose judgment and discretion I had great confidence. I arranged with Poe to meet us that night at moonrise, at La Punta de la Glorietta, four miles north of Fort Sumner. Poe went on to the Plaza, and McKinney and myself rode down into the Pecos Valley, where we remained during the day. At night we started our circling around the town, and met Poe exactly on time at the trysting place.

Poe's appearance at Sumner had excited no particular observation, and he had gleaned no news there. Rudolph thought from all indications, that The Kid was about; and yet, at times, he doubted. His cause for doubt seemed to be based on no evidence except the fact that The Kid was no fool, and no man in his senses, under the circumstances, would brave such danger.

I then concluded to go and have a talk with Peter Maxwell Esq., in whom I felt sure I could rely. We had ridden to within a short distance of Maxwell's grounds, when we found a man in camp, and stopped. To Poe's surprise, he recognized in the camper an old friend and former partner in Texas, named Jacobs. We unsaddled here, got some coffee, and, on foot, entered an orchard which runs from this point down to a row of old buildings, some of them occupied by Mexicans, not more than sixty yards from Maxwell's house. We approached these houses cautiously, and when within ear shot, heard the sound of voices conversing in Spanish. We concealed ourselves quickly and listened; but the distance was too great to hear words, or even distinguish voices. Soon a man arose from the ground in full view, but too far away to recognize. He wore a broad-brimmed hat, a dark vest and pants, and was in his shirtsleeves. With a few words, which fell like a murmur on our ears, he went to the fence, jumped it, and walked down towards Maxwell's house.

Little as we then suspected it, this man was The Kid. We learned, subsequently, that when he left his companions that night, he went to the house of a Mexican friend, pulled off his hat and boots, threw himself on a bed and commenced reading a newspaper. He soon, however, hailed his friend, who was sleeping in the room, told him to get up and make some coffee, adding -- "Give me a butcher knife and I will go over to Pete's and get some beef. I'm hungry." The Mexican arose, handed him the knife, and The Kid, hatless and in his stocking feet, started to Maxwells, which was but a few steps distant.

When The Kid, by me unrecognized, left the orchard, I motioned to my companions, and we cautiously retreated a short distance, and, to avoid the persons whom we had heard at the houses, took another route, approaching Maxwell's house from the opposite direction. When we reached the porch in front of the building, I left Poe and McKinney at the end of the porch, about twenty feet from the door of Pete's room, and went in. It was near midnight and Pete was in bed. I walked to the head of the bed and sat down on it, beside him, near the pillow. I asked him as to the whereabouts of The Kid. He said that The Kid had certainly been about, but he did not know whether he had left or not.

At that moment a man sprang quickly into the door, looking back, and called twice in Spanish, "Who comes there?" No one replied and he came on in. He was bareheaded. From his step I could perceive he was either barefooted or in his stocking feet, and held a revolver in his right hand and a butcher-knife in his left.

He came directly towards me. Before he reached the bed, I whispered: "Who is it, Pete?", but received no reply for a moment. It struck me that it might be Pete's brother-in-law, Manuel Abreu, who had seen Poe and McKinney, and wanted to know their business. The intruder came close to me, leaned both hands on the bed, his right hand almost touching my knee, and asked, in a low voice: -- "Who are they Pete?" -- at the same instant Maxwell whispered to me. "That's him!" Simultaneously The Kid must have seen, or felt, the presence of a third person at the head of the bed. He raised quickly his pistol, a self-cocker, within a foot of my breast. Retreating rapidly across the room he cried: "Quien es? Quien es?" (Who's that? Who's that?) All this occurred in a moment. Quickly as possible I drew my revolver and fired, threw my body aside and fired again. The second shot was useless; The Kid fell dead. He never spoke. A struggle or two, a little strangling sound as he gasped for breath, and The Kid was with his many victims.

"Looking Back"

THROUGH OLD NEWS FILES

Maxwell had plunged over the foot of the bed on the floor, dragging the bed-clothes with him. I went to the door and met Poe and McKinney there. Maxwell rushed past me, out on the porch; they threw their guns down on him, when he cried: "Don't shoot, don't shoot." I told my companions I had got The Kid. They asked me if I had not shot the wrong man. I told them I had made no blunder; that I knew The Kid's voice too well to be mistaken. The Kid was entirely unknown to either of them. They had seen him passing, and, as he stepped on the porch, McKinney, who was sitting, rose to his feet; one of his spurs caught under the boards, and nearly threw him. The Kid laughed, but, probably, saw their guns, as he drew his revolver and sprang into the door-way, as he hailed: "Who comes there?" Seeing a bareheaded, barefooted man, in his shirtsleeves, with a butcher knife in his hand, and hearing his hail in excellent Spanish, they naturally supposed him to be a Mexican and an attaché of the establishment; hence their suspicion that I had shot the wrong man.

We now entered the room and examined the body. The ball struck him just above the heart, and must have cut through the ventricles; Poe asked me how many shots I fired; I told him two, but I had no idea where the second one went. Both Poe and McKinney said The Kid must have fired then, as there were surely three shots fired. I told them that he had fired one shot, between my two; Maxwell said that The Kid fired; yet, when we came to look for bullet marks, none from his pistol could be found. We searched long and faithfully -- found both my bullet marks and none other; so against the impression and senses of four men, we had to conclude that The Kid did not fire at all. We examined his pistol -- a self-cocker, calibre 41. It had five cartridges and one shell in the chambers, the hammer resting on the shell, but this proves nothing, as many carry their revolvers in this way for safety; besides, this shell looked as though it had been shot some time before.

It will never be known whether The Kid recognized me or not. If he did, it was the first time, during all his life of peril that he ever lost the presence of mind, or failed to shoot first, and hesitate afterwards. He knew that a meeting with me meant surrender or fight. He told several persons about Sumner that the bore no animosity against me, and had no desire to do me injury. He also said that he knew, should we meet, he would have to surrender, kill me, or get killed himself. So, he declared his intention should we meet, to commence shooting on sight.

On the following morning, the Alcalde, Alejandro Segura, held an inquest on the body, Hon. M. Rudolph, of Sunnyside, was forman of the Coroner's Jury. They found a verdict that William H. Bonney came to his death from a gun shot wound; the weapon in the hands of Pat F. Garrett, that the fatal wound was inflicted by the said Garrett in the discharge of his official duty of Sheriff and that the homicide was justifiable.

The body was neatly and properly dressed and buried in the Military Cemetery at Fort Sumner, July 15, 1881. His exact age, on the day of his death, was 21 years, 7 months and 21 days.

I said that the body was buried in the cemetery at Fort Sumner; I wish to add that it is there today intact. Skull, fingers, toes, bones and every hair of the head that was buried with the body on that 15th day of July, doctors, newspaper editors and parographers to the contrary notwithstanding. Some presuming swindlers have claimed to have The Kid's skull on exhibition, or one of his fingers, or some other portion of his body, and one medical gentleman has persuaded credulous idiots that he has all the bones strung upon wires.

It is possible that there is a skeleton on exhibition somewhere in the States, or even in this Territory which was procured somewhere down the Rio Pecos. We have them, lots of them, in this section. The banks of the Pecos are dotted from Fort Sumner to the Rio Grande with unmarked graves, and the skeletons are of all sizes, ages and complexions. Any showman of ghastly curiosities can resurrect one or all of them, and place them on exhibition as the remains of Dick Turpin, Jack Shepherd, Cartouche, or The Kid, with no one to say to him nay, so they don't ask the people of the Rio Pecos to believe it.

Again I say that The Kid's body lies undisturbed in the grave, -- and I speak of what I know.
