

Unanswered Issues Delay Preliminary Plat Approval

by Patrice Brazie

Representatives of the Copper Mountain subdivision north of Ruidoso are expected to appear before the Lincoln County Board of Commissioners on Tuesday to make another request for approval of the preliminary plat for the subdivision's first eight units. Copper Mountain's request was tabled at last month's meeting of the county commissioners because of some unresolved issues of compliance with county and state regulations.

The application for the subdivision of 1,046 acres was filed in August of 2006, according to county attorney Alan Morel, who briefed the county commissioners on the subdivision's history during a special meeting of the commission on May 29th. The preliminary plat was reviewed by the Lincoln County Planning Commission in February or March of this year, he said. At that time, the planning commission highlighted several requirements yet to be met by the developer. Morel told the county commissioners that their consideration of a moratorium on subdivision approvals prompted the Copper Mountain representatives to present a request for a preliminary plat approval in lieu of the fact that some issues remained unresolved. County planning director Curt Temple issued a memorandum to the county commissioners on May 25th stating that the subdivision was not in compliance with county regulations. He reported during the meeting of May 29th that several drainage questions remained unanswered. An engineering report by Smith Engineering Company cited deficiencies in reporting that made it impossible to evaluate whether or not some drainage issues had been addressed. The report further contends that the subdivider failed to provide information identifying drainage basins, calculations for drainage flows, runoff values, velocities and ditch capacities. In some cases, the amount of slope on roadways exceeds the maximum allowed, and some flood plain areas have not been identified, according to the engineer's report. A revised report from the Office of the State Engineer has determined that there is sufficient water available to support the Copper Mountain subdivision, after that office issued a negative report last November. Annual water usage for the completed 85 lot development, with individual domestic wells, is estimated to be just over 28 acre feet. Some information is still needed to satisfy the New Mexico Department of

DURING A MEETING of the Lincoln County Planning Commission last week, member Jon Crunk told about 50 people in attendance that the commission's recommendation for a 6-month moratorium on subdivision approvals was made to protect careful, conservative, resourceful growth. County Planners to Recommend Moratorium On Subdivisions

by Patrice Brazie

Members of the Lincoln County Planning Commission, in a four to one vote, have elected to recommend that the board of county commissioners adopt a six month moratorium on subdivision approvals. About 50 people attended the June 6th meeting of the planning commission, a county advisory commission that rarely draws more than a handful of attendees to its meetings. The majority sentiment among those 50 or so in attendance was clearly in favor of the moratorium.

Many of those present hail from the county's District 1, and are represented on the county's board of commissioners by Eileen Lovelace, who requested in May that a public hearing on the moratorium be scheduled for the county commissioners' June meeting. District 1 includes Carrizozo, Nogal, and the subdivisions of Loma Grande and Magado Creek on the Nogal mesa. The district is facing the planned development of several large areas of ranch land, including the Fern Sawyer Ranch and the Mesa Ranch which essentially surround the community of Nogal.

The former O-Bar-O Ranch, also in the Nogal area, is being divided into parcels of 140 acres or more and is thereby exempt from subdivision regulations, but there is no guarantee against further division of the 140 acre parcels in the future.

The town of Carrizozo has approved and annexed 3,094.74 acres that will be 1,000 lot Valle de Sol subdivision on Highway 380. This subdivision is now inside the town limits and will not go through the county for approval.

Speaking on behalf of the Lincoln County Citizens Action Committee, Bob Havranek was first to address the planning commission. Havranek said that the recently formed grass roots organization was not opposed to the principles of development, but warned that a haphazard and irresponsible approach to regulating development would adversely affect the standard of living in Lincoln County. He said the sole purpose of the Lincoln County Citizens Action Committee is to assist county officials and commissioners in improving the subdivision ordinance. "We will do this by increasing public awareness, and by providing helpful input as the process moves forward," Havranek told the planning commission members.

Havranek called for a thorough assessment of the county's aquifers to determine the effects of new developments on water resources. He suggested that the county adopt stringent regulations limiting further division of land once subdivided and the establishment of enforceable rules to hold developers accountable in water sustainability issues.

Havranek also recommended studies to assess the future demands that will be placed on roads and highways connected with new developments, and an assessment of the needs and abilities of the county's volunteer fire departments to manage fire emergencies in rapidly growing rural communities.

Wildlife displacement, light pollution and forest access are also concerns of the action committee, Havranek said.

Jim Gibson, administrator of the Lincoln County Medical Center (LCMC), told the planning commission that he didn't know squat about subdivisions, or diddle about water. "I do know about strategic planning," Gibson said. He reported that the county owned hospital has seen double digit, accelerated growth over the past several years.

"I don't have the luxury of saying wait a minute, everybody stop getting sick for six months while we figure out a way to handle it," Gibson said. "The consequences of stopping the growth, on the hospital, the schools and industry in the town have the potential of being catastrophic," Gibson opined. He suggested that a temporary moratorium on subdivision applications would affect the hospital's ability to recruit qualified medical personnel.

In response to a question from planning commission member Jon Crunk, county planning director Curt Temple reported facts provided by the county assessor's office showing 11,000 lots within approved subdivisions that are yet to be built upon. "So we're not talking about stopping growth," Crunk said. "If we want to build houses, there are 11,000 lots out there." Crunk cited an already strained emergency services structure, with large distances from fire stations to developments and insufficiently staffed emergency medical services stations as just one of the issues that planners must address in facing future growth. "It's not just water," Crunk said. "Let's take a breath and make sure that the ordinances we are adopting are protecting careful, conservative, resourceful growth for our next generation," he added.

Former county planning director Patsy Sanchez told the planners that it would take a period of years and a couple million dollars to complete detailed studies on

by Patrice Brazie

School aged children in Capitan will be expected to be off the street and out of sight during school hours and a new village ordinance will penalize the parents of kids who are caught skipping school.

During the Capitan Village Council meeting of June 12th, the trustees heard comments from the public regarding the ordinance which, as drafted, was ambiguous as it related to home schooled children. Some parents of home schooled children voiced objections to what they said was a violation of their rights and the rights of their children.

One Capitan resident pointed out that home schoolers are not required to conform to the hours or schedules of public or private schools, and questioned the village's right to enforce the ordinance with home schooled children.

Police chief Randy Spear said that he was not concerned about the home schooled kids, and that the ordinance was intended to help him deal with a growing truancy problem. "I'm not after the home school children," Spear said. "I'm after the kids that go to school here, that are sent letters home to their parents, and their parents refuse to make their kids go to school. I'm going to start making parents take responsibility for their kids," he said.

When asked how the ordinance would affect children of tourists or visitors to Capitan, if those children were found walking along a public street during school hours, Spear said he would rely on the word of the child as to whether or not they should be in school. "If I find out that your son tells me he's home schooled, when he's supposed to be in school, you'll be getting a formal complaint from us," he said.

A woman who identified herself as a home school mom, expressed concerns about her children being approached by law enforcement personnel while going about innocent daily activities. "My concern is that I send them to the grocery store, or they're at the park while I'm in the grocery store, and they're approached by the law," she said. "There are documented cases in other states, because

Smoking Ban Begins Friday

Today is the last day that cigarette and pipe smokers can legally indulge those nicotine cravings in offices, restaurants, bars or other public buildings.

The Dee Johnson Clean Indoor Air Act goes into effect tomorrow across the entire state of New Mexico. Smoking can be allowed in certain public outdoor areas, so long as they are far enough away from windows, doorways and ventilation systems to ensure that smoke is not infiltrated into non-smoking areas.

Casinos, bingo parlors and legally identified cigar bars are exempt from the no-smoking law, as are private clubs and businesses that have only one employee.

Transportation regarding permitted accesses to Highway 48 and an average daily traffic analysis to determine any possible need for a turning lane on the highway. "They want some more information on the traffic flow for that area," Temple said.

Mike Runnells, the attorney for the developer, R.D.

Hubbard, told the county commissioners that a drainage report, calculations and maps were submitted at the beginning of the application process. "Our engineer has been back and forth with your engineer four or five times," Runnells said. "Your engineer never seems to be satisfied with what our engineer provides." He said that the problems in getting approval from the engineering firm hired by the county involved technical issues associated with calculation methods, and that there was no guarantee that that firm would ever agree with the engineer hired by the developer. "At some point in time we need an assurance that we can have a sign-off on this," Runnells said.

Temple again said that the outstanding issues with Copper Mountain were not due to the engineers' inability to agree on methods, but because the application was not in compliance with the county's subdivision ordinance.

Runnells said, "At some point in time, there has to be an acceptance of the work that's been submitted."

Morel told the county commissioners that the developer would have preferred to bring the preliminary plat to them for approval after all of the issues had been resolved, but that the consideration of a moratorium on approvals until the county's subdivision ordinance can be updated drove the developer to present the request prematurely. The timing of the approval of the preliminary plat will determine which of the county's subdivision regulations will apply to the subdivision, he said. Those regulations have been changed once since the application was originally filed, and are facing changes again as the county commissioners prepare to further revise the subdivision ordinance.

County commission chair Tom Battin suggested that it would be appropriate to approve the Copper Mountain subdivision preliminary plat, subject to all unresolved issues being resolved prior to approval of the final plat.

County commissioner Dave Parks made a motion to approve the preliminary plat subject to the resolution of the issues spelled out by Smith Engineering and the Department of Transportation, and the addition of language in the subdivision's disclosure statement addressing fire danger. The motion failed to pass, with county commissioners Eileen Lovelace, Jackie Powell and Don Williams voting against the motion; Battin and Parks in favor.

D.T. "Tim" Collins, owner of a local land surveying company who often represents subdividers and developers at county commission meetings, asked the commissioners for a motion to reconsider the plat approval at their June 19th meeting.

Lovelace made the motion to reconsider the plat on June 19th, if all of the county ordinance requirements have been met at that time. That motion passed unanimously.

Lincoln's Worst Forest Fire Under Control; Many Narrowly Escape

by Dorothy Guck

The worst fire ever to have occurred in Lincoln National Forest is at last believed to be under control. A drizzling rain that started at 2 a.m. Thursday was still falling at press time. All the crews were standing by and were expected to remain at the scene all day Thursday in order to maintain a complete fire line around the area.

Conditions on Thursday appeared to be in favor of the fire fighters since there was little wind, and very cloudy skies. Because of the rough terrain, the fire crews are unable to reach the upper side of East Mountain.

Although the actual number of acres burned is unknown, it is estimated the area is seven to nine miles long, and between two and three miles wide in places.

A the height of the fire, approximately 500 men were on the scene. At the present time, about 250 men are on the fire line.

The regular service crew for Lincoln National Forest have been on duty continuously since the inception of the fire. In addition, forestry service crews from New Mexico, Arizona and California have been assisting in halting the conflagration.

The eight California rangers will remain in the area for a few days in case of further need for their services.

Earl Moore, forest supervisor, has been at the fire camp most of the week, as have been Sheriff S.M. Ortiz, Deputy Clyde Atwood and State Patrolman Herbert Douglas.

A complete Red Cross installation has been set up at the fire camp to handle any casualties. It is under the supervision of the Army and the Forest Service.

Many close escapes experienced by the fire fighters, who have been performing super-human duty, are reported. A very efficient fire camp is established at the site, and the men are receiving excellent food and have been provided with plenty of blankets. The Army has provided "pup tents" for the soldiers and the civilians are sleeping on blankets on the ground. Charles Sutton, Alamogordo Forest Service, is assigned to the camp as manager.

The Capitan High School has placed their shower rooms at the disposal of the fire fighters. Approximately 150 soldiers were taken there this week to refresh themselves with hot showers.

Sparks from the Whitcamp sawmill started the conflagration May 4, as the tinder dry country was whipped by fierce winds. Visibility was zero until late in the evening.

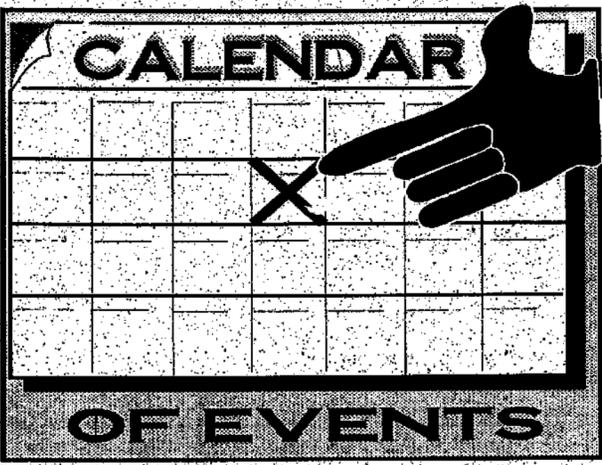

Dean Earl, Capitan forest ranger, headed a crew of 150 men, and succeeded in building a line around the fire during the night, however the line was lost next day as winds again became severe. The Whitcamp and Holladay mills were both destroyed.

Saturday morning the cigaret of a careless smoker was flipped into the duff to start a second blaze in the Gap, west of the road. The tired crews were powerless to stop the new smoke. Shortly after noon it exploded in all directions. The fire camp withdrew from the timber before fire swept through their campsite.

The Taber ranch, owned by Mrs. Coors, was in the line of the fire, but the buildings were saved by a wide fire line hastily cut around them. The Merchant the aquifers in the county. She suggested that six months would not provide ample time to collect data.

Lincoln County officials, as well as some private business persons and residents, are actively trying to get answers to questions like how much water is there and where is it. A hydrologic study of the Upper Hondo river basin by the U.S. Geological Survey is currently entering into its third of four phases, and specialists from Sandia Laboratories are assisting residents with a smaller water monitoring project in the Alto area. The final analysis of the data collected through the studies is still years off, Temple said.

The county planning commission also heard from a local health care professional who expressed concerns that, as land is subdivided and developed, some roads that local residents have used to access forest lands might be closed to the public. "I've seen other areas where somebody comes in and buys up the land, and the next thing you know they shut the roads down," Kevin Miller said.

D.T. (Tim) Collins, owner of a land surveying company in Ruidoso, challenged the statement made by Temple regarding the 11,000 lots available for new homes. "I think you're throwing out a number to scare people," Collins said. "How many of these are in failed subdivisions that you're doing away with?" he asked. He suggested that the county's new subdivision ordinance, which was adopted in 2006, has already slowed new development and that there is no need to further amend that ordinance. "I think all that's happened is we've had some new elected officials that are looking at things different than the old officials were," Collins said.

The surveyor drew objections from the public when he suggested that only executives, retirees and the home-bound were in favor of the moratorium, not members of Lincoln County's working class.

Collins said that a six-month moratorium on subdivisions would affect the concrete and asphalt truck drivers and utility installers in the county.

Among the changes to the county's subdivision ordinance under consideration is the requiring of subdividers to own water rights for the subdivision, and build a community water system based on those rights. In some cases, water rights connected to the land are sold or transferred prior to the division of the land, and domestic well permits for one acre foot of water annually are issued by the state for each home in the subdivision.

According to Duane Frost, chair of the Lincoln County Public Land Use and Rural Affairs Advisory Committee (PLURAAC), that process is commonly referred to as double dipping.

Harvey Foster, who told the planning commission that he has been a broker in Lincoln County for 30 years and sometimes handles water rights transfers, suggested an alternative to requiring ownership of water by the subdivider. "If (purchasers of lots) were allowed to relinquish their (domestic) water rights to the water association that's going to provide the community water system, and reduce it down to .25 acre feet, that's a 75 percent reduction in the water consumption," Foster said.

In response to a question from the planning commission, Foster reported that there are generally about 500 homes and 1,200 vacant lots for sale in the central and southern parts of Lincoln County through a realtor listing system he uses. "But you like blue, he likes green and you like red," Foster said. "Then Charlie comes in and he wants chartreuse, and I don't have anything for him. So he's going to buy in that new subdivision that has chartreuse. It's irrelevant how many lots are for sale," he said. "It's what someone wants to buy." The Lincoln Planning Commission will make its recommendation to the Lincoln County Board of Commissioners to adopt a six-month moratorium on subdivision approvals, but the final decision rests on the county commissioners. A public hearing on the issue is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. during next Tuesday's county commission meeting on Tuesday, June 19th.

THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Another Lincoln County War?

By Ruth Hammond

The Lincoln County War was fought back in the 1800s but another battle is brewing that could make the previous war seem mild. Squaring off for a battle next Tuesday when the county commission conducts a public hearing about the proposed moratorium on subdivisions are two or more different factions. Accusations abound as to what damage will be done if or if not the moratorium is put into effect. It might be a good idea to take cover during and after the public hearing. Ear plugs could be needed.

Hot headed individuals may not cool down enough to listen to the other side, which could result in the battle being fought with no actual winner. Back in the 1800s many of those engaged in the war were killed. Hopefully that won't happen Tuesday, but the end result will be too many hard feelings that may never be reconciled at all.

Emotions tend to take control in a situation such as this even though clear thinking and reasoning should be uppermost in everyone's minds. No doubt there will be exaggerations of so called statistics, which could sway the uninformed people. Counter arguments with hyped up percentages could also be tossed about quite vehemently.

Obviously it is not a decision to be made by the public but by the county commissioners. Those five elected county commissioners may not make a decision that is popular with everyone, but hopefully it will be a decision that is in the best interest of the entire county and all of the people they represent. They will need to consider the long term effect as well as the short term consequences.

Rational discussion could be productive, but there may be those in attendance who will not be rational or calm. Those hot headed people should realize that shouting can often dissuade people, not further their cause. If facts are presented politely instead of bombastically it could be the best for everyone. County commissioners need facts, not fiction in order to make the best decision. Fiction is fine in novels, movies and make believe, but fact is the main thing needed Tuesday. It is a fact that the earth revolves around the sun. It is fiction that the sun circles the earth. Centuries ago superstitions abounded about eclipses, but we now know the why and wherefor of eclipses and those superstitions have been discarded. Perhaps some of the brash comments made Tuesday may also be discarded.

Even if you are firm in your belief as to whether the moratorium should or should not be put into place, it is your duty to consider the reasoning of the opposition. It could be that your information is flawed in some way and needs to be discussed to clarify what is correct or wrong.

Many people were affected during the Lincoln County War back in the 1800s. Many people will also be affected by the decision that may be made Tuesday. Don't be a casualty, be a survivor. Help, not hinder the process.

Mountainair Ranger District to Host Community Open House

The Mountainair Ranger District will be hosting a series of community meetings throughout the district. These meetings will serve two main purposes:

The first is to formally introduce Karen Lessard, the new district ranger, to the local communities. Karen comes to Mountainair from the Angeles National Forest in California, where she served as the forest planner and NEPA coordinator. Prior to moving to California, Karen worked for the Forest Service National Headquarters in Washington, D.C., and the White Mountain National Forest in New Hampshire. Karen has been busy her first three months, acquainting herself with the district as well as meeting with various Forest Service partners. She has also been familiarizing herself with the many projects that are underway or being planned on the Mountainair Ranger District.

The second purpose is for Karen and the Mountainair District staff to meet with community members to discuss the various projects on the district as well as answer the communities' questions and respond to comments and concerns.

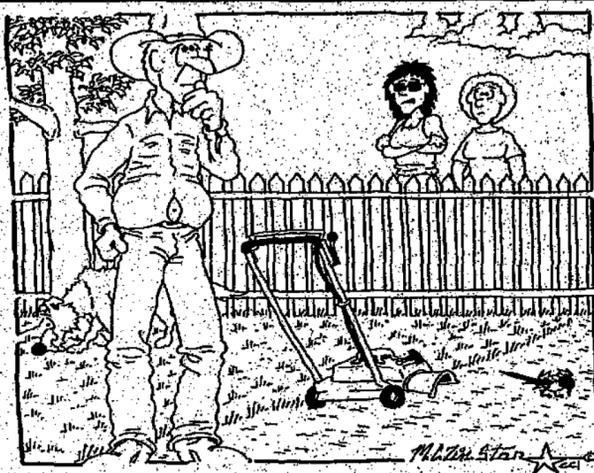

The community meetings will be held from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. and are scheduled for June 18th at the Corona Senior Citizen Center, June 19th at the Torreon Community Center and June 20th at the Shaffer Hotel in Mountainair. An additional meeting will be scheduled in Belen the following week.

All local residents are invited and encouraged to attend any of the meetings to meet Karen and voice any comments.

SANTA FE -- Today, Flag Day, June 14, is the least celebrated of all national observances. One reason is that it never has been declared an official holiday.

As we headed into World War I, President Woodrow Wilson tried but failed to get Congress to recognize the observance and make it a holiday.

Flag Day was slow in getting started and only picked up steam in the late 1800s when Americans became concerned about the flood of immigrants coming to our shores during a period of generous immigration policies, prompted by the need of burgeoning industries for cheap labor.

Sound familiar? The idea was to Americanize the children in the schools. Since most schools aren't in session in June anymore, observances in the schools have dwindled.

Americanizing the younger generation hasn't been much of a problem anyway. They learn much more quickly than adults.

Flag days began in scattered communities around the nation and that is the way they still are observed. A check of the first 200 Flag Day Web sites Google gave me indicates a real hodge-podge of observances, with each Web site having its own agenda.

Flag Day is little enough recognized that many other organizations have their own Flag Day for completely different purposes. The Armed Forces have a Flag Day on a different date to raise money for needy veterans and active duty personnel. Donors are given a flag sticker to wear.

And Flag Day means something completely different to bloggers, who want a specific day to identify and flag objectionable blogs.

Since stores don't really observe Flag Day, there are plenty of sites that sell specific Flag Day items. Many sites also have teaching materials for Flag Day.

A major problem with community Flag Day observances is that the day falls halfway between Memorial Day and July 4th, our nation's two biggest patriotic observances.

No wonder Congress hasn't wanted to make it a holiday. Not even the flag wavers have suggested it. They prefer to advocate a constitutional amendment banning flag burning.

Putting together the information from many Web sites, here is the comprehensive story of Flag Day that I had hoped to find all on one convenient Web site.

On June 14, 1777, the Continental Congress adopted a resolution designating the flag's design. Most modern historians think it unlikely Betsy Ross either suggested the design or stitched the first flag.

In 1861, the city of Hartford, Conn. held a Flag Day observance to indicate its hope that the Union could be preserved as the nation entered into a Civil War.

In 1877, Congress asked that all public buildings fly the flag on June 14 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the flag. It wasn't until 20 years later that New York became the first state to require that all public buildings fly the flag.

In 1885, a Wisconsin school teacher began an energetic campaign to get Congress to declare June 14 a national holiday. In 1888, a Pittsburgh schoolboy founded the American Flag Day Association. In 1889, the principal of a kindergarten for the poor in New York City, held ceremonies that attracted the attention of New York authorities.

In 1893, the Philadelphia Society of Colonial Dames convinced the city to display the flag on all city buildings. In 1937, Pennsylvania became the first and only state to declare June 14 a legal holiday.

Finally in 1949, during the early days of the Cold War, Congress approved the national observance and President Harry Truman signed it. Presidents sometimes mention Flag Day and occasionally issue proclamations. But celebrations remain a local matter.

Not surprisingly, all the localities listed above celebrate Flag Day and claim to be its founders.

Maybe adoption of our flag isn't sufficiently momentous.

How about celebrating our Constitution the first Wednesday in March?

Lincoln County Sheriff's Posse

The Lincoln County Sheriff's Posse (LCSP) was incorporated to aid the Lincoln County Sheriff's Office and to foster and encourage the ideals of good citizenship.

More than 60 members take an active interest in the civic, social and moral welfare of the county and its communities while also supporting benevolent, charitable and educational undertakings.

LCSP is striving to interest young people in its activities and to sponsor events, programs and other worthwhile projects for the benefit of the people of Lincoln County.

This year LCSP is entering an exciting and new phase of its continuing development with the planned construction of its very own offices. With a matching grant from the R.D. and Joan Dale Hubbard Foundation, plus generous donations from the public, the LCSP hopes to complete its new building this year.

Regular monthly meetings and all other gatherings of the LCSP are currently being held at the Otero County Electric building on 12th Street in Carrizozo. When construction is complete the meetings will be held in the new building.

The new location will have rodeo pens and horse facilities to accommodate annual activities including trail rides and children's rodeos.

Tino Lopez Has Memorable Trip to Canada

EDITOR'S NOTE: A few weeks past the NEWS ran an article about former Carrizozoite Tino Lopez, Jr. leaving on a planned vacation to Canada, and requested if Tino would share a photo or two of his trip. The following photos, with a few comments from Tino, were sent to the NEWS from Canada to share with our readers.

exposed me to scenic snow-covered alpine ridges, meadows, and pristine lakes. It was the memorable highlight of my trip, leaving invigorating butterflies in my stomach even after my pilot, Andrew, landed the helicopter.

MINNEWANKA LAKE, near Banff, Canada, meaning "water spirit" where the Canadian Rockies end at Devil's Gap cut by a glacier 10,000 ago.

Minnewanka Lake is dotted with white bald eagle nests, abundant with bighorn sheep, elk, and bear. Beyond Devil's Gap the Canadian fields continue. On the way, I was fascinated by the Cascade Mountains and learned that the road I was on is closed in November through mid-May as thousands of elk congregate on that deep canyon road during the winter months.

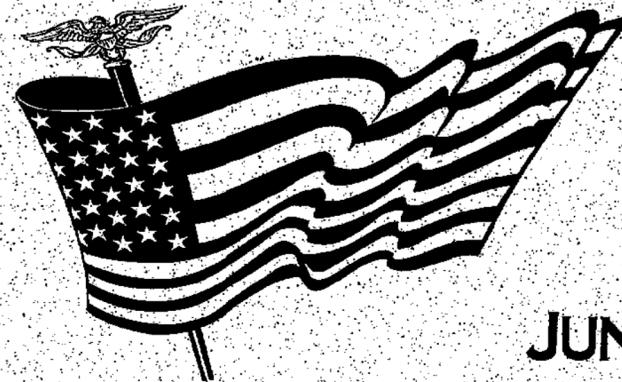

The Indian tribes considered Minnewanka an eerie lake. On windy days, haunted sounds were heard as the winds swept down the crags that were formed by waterfalls. The lake still has several new magnificent falls. On windy days, the sounds prevail but its waters are closed to boating. Evil spirits still make their sounds, and the gap was cared by the devil himself according to legend.

Leaving Minnewanka, bighorn sheep were crossing the road as I completed my first, must-take tour and hike. The day before, it hit me just how far North I was as it was still daylight at 10:15 p.m.

Continuing to Canmore, Alberta, I hopped on a helicopter adventure to Mt. Assiniboine Glacier against a sea of peaks, icefalls, still frozen lakes (Lake Gloria, Marvel Lake, and Owl Lake), and the "Three Sisters" mountain range. I was routed to "The Matterhorn of the Canadian Rockies" which rises majestically 11,870 feet along the Great Divide separating Canada and British Columbia: Mount Charles Stewart

LAKE LOUISE, along the TransCanada Highway, is 660 vertical feet above the valley floor with its abundant ice floats and diverse terrain. The lake is named after Queen Victoria's fourth daughter, Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, who died in 1939.

MORATORIUM - CHECK THE FINE PRINT YOUR JOB AND POCKETBOOK MAY DEPEND ON IT!

ISSUE

The Lincoln County Commissioners will vote on a proposed moratorium Tuesday, June 19, to halt private property development in the county for an indefinite time period.

CONSEQUENCES

An affirmative vote will immediately shut down all development activity affecting thousands of local workers and jobs in the construction, homebuilding, realty, retail, entertainment, tourist and service industries — and more. The damaging ripple effect of this shutdown will also jeopardize the lifeblood of our economy by decreasing land values and suspending much-needed public tax revenues.

ALTERNATIVES

There are numerous modern examples of master planning and smart growth available in other areas that can be used as alternatives to the drastic consequences of a moratorium.

CONCLUSION

The overreaction to indefinitely suspend development doesn't consider the short- and long-term economic consequences for our workers and their families, and the county at large. This is another attempt to stop ALL growth in Lincoln County. Let's have responsible growth in Lincoln County. Can you afford a moratorium on your income?

SAVE YOUR JOB AND OUR ECONOMY by contacting your Lincoln County Commissioners immediately, and encourage them to consider thoughtful alternatives like zoning and Planned Area Development rather than a moratorium. June 19th is imminent and time is running out, so please contact the Commissioners NOW!

ranch was also saved from any damage. Sunday night the surrounding towns of Carrizozo, Capitan, Ruidoso, Lincoln and Hondo were stripped of manpower. Soldiers were recruited from Fort Bliss, Walker Air Base and Holloman Air Base.

Monday at 3 p.m. the fire had burned the north side of East Mountain from the Gap to a section near Koprian Springs.

Near tragedy in the Capitan Mountain fires has brought out many stories of the heroism of our Lincoln County men. Faithful to the saga of bravery in the days of "Billy the Kid," our local fire fighters well deserve to be heralded for their courage.

Saturday night, Roy Morgan led a crew of men before the leaping flames to safety on top of the mountain. Sam Servis, Forest Service man of Alamogordo saved his crew in the same manner.

Monday afternoon, I was in the fire camp when a weary group of men were rescued from a rock slide that could be seen above the camp. Speed Simmons, game warden of Artesia; Earnest and Roy Purcella, Joe Phillips and 13 soldiers took refuge on the slide near the crest of the mountain when flames completely surrounded them. They boys dug their feet and faces into the rocks trying to protect them from the searing heat. For three and a half hours they were marooned on the slide. Meanwhile, they were missed in camp. Fred Pfingsten rode out on horseback to find them. He topped out on the ridge above the slide and helplessly watched until the worst of the flames had burned on to the East. Then shouting above the wind that whipped through the burning timber, he led the men up through the smoking embers to safety. The men, shaking with fatigue and the terror of their close escape, were streaked with black. They suffered blistered feet and faces, but no serious injuries.

Monday, an Army captain from Alamogordo effected the rescue of the Whitcamp family from the heart of the burn. The Whitcamps were reluctant to leave their home when the fire burned the sawmill Friday. Monday, the velocity of the wind increased to whip the fire in renewed strength. Flames again swept through the sawmill burning the homes. The Whitcamps, father, mother and three children, took refuge under one of the three trucks. Then the trucks burst into flames.

The Army captain was driving his jeep up each road he came to in the burning area, his siren shrieking, searching for any possible persons who might be stranded. He heard a woman's cry and drove through the smoke to the sound. The Whitcamps were brought into camp, black, frightened and ready to seek shelter elsewhere.

Probably the most pitiful victim of the terrible holocaust is a small bear cub found in a tree above the smoke of burning duff. The pads of his broad feet were scorched and bleeding and he readily accepted the kindness and fondling of human hands in lieu of the care of his dead mother. Ross Flatley brought the cub into the fire camp where he was the center of attraction until Mr. Flatley received permission from the Game Department to take the cub to his ranch.

The portable kitchen, light plant and many cases of food were almost lost at the first fire camp before their hasty removal to a new site at the junction of the Gap and the Base roads. The cooks, Earnest McDaniels and Leroy McKnight, failed to salvage the beans and stew, and a new dinner had to be prepared. The old camp was supplied by means of radio from the camp to Monjeau and thence by phone to Capitan. The new camp is connected by phone to Block Lookout.

Six huge dozers were brought in Monday night and by Tuesday a line had been dozed out on the northeast side. Wednesday, a plane flew through the low flying clouds to drop dry ice in an effort to give the relief of rain. A slight sprinkle resulted.

Dean Earl, ranger in charge of the fire, is optimistic about the fire providing the weather does not become too hot and windy.

The fire fighters have been finding additional freak results of the holocaust since Wednesday when they have been able to penetrate more of the burned area.

Two more bear cubs were found, but since they were not in bad condition, the cubs were released. Carcasses of deer and cattle have been discovered, the animals having probably become confused and headed for instead of away from the flames.

Roosts of wild turkeys were found in the tree tops where they had evidently sought shelter, and didn't sense they could fly out of the area of danger.

The final sum of timber, scenic beauty and wildlife lost will affect Lincoln County for many years to come.

CORONA NEWS

The Village of Corona Public Library's summer reading program will be held in the Village Hall council chamber for children ages 5-17. The program starts Friday, June 15, from 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. and continues every Friday throughout the summer.

The Corona High School Class of 2007 earned more than $65,000 in scholarships. Each member of this class is going on to higher education. The graduates are Jared Arnold, Ross Davis, Joel Duarte-Perez, Alejandro Lozano, Stacy Merritt, Jordan Muncy, Patrick Palomarez, J.R. Shafer, Janet Torres and Kelli West.

Members of the Corona FFA Chapter attended the FFA state convention in Las Cruces last week. They brought home a superior chapter rating for the third year in a row which means they were in the top 10 percent of the state.

Individual honors went to Markie Sherwood for winning the state job interview and Charley Encinas for winning the beef placement proficiency which earned him $250. Markie and Charley both qualified to represent New Mexico at the national FFA convention. Dulcie Sultemeier finished second for the star Greenhand award.

The Corona FFA chapter tied with Artesia for the most members receiving the State FFA Degree. To qualify for this degree, individuals must spend at least 333 hours or earn $1000 in a supervised agricultural experience project in landscaping, wildlife, cattle or sheep management, etc. They must also participate in FFA leadership courses and be a junior or senior. The 14 members receiving the degree were Jared Arnold, Adam Bailey, Cindy Burroughs, Tysa Davidson, Ross Davis, Charley Encinas, Randa Hutcheson, Alejandra Lozano, Quirt McDaniel, Stacy Merritt, Patrick Palomarez, J.R. Shafer, Markie Sherwood, and Janet Torres.

Capitan Adopts

of this law, where kids are approached by the police and they're not police.

When Spear said that children would be asked to identify themselves and then the school would be contacted to verify whether or not they were truant, the home school mom suggested that the ordinance might be a violation of her children's freedom.

Spear said that the New Mexico Children's Code forbids him from detaining minors without parental notification. "But we're not going to be detaining them," Spear said.

Spear told the audience that the Ruidoso Police Department's juvenile case load has increased 25 percent since Capitan schools went to a four day school week. "That's just from Capitan," Spear said.

A resident suggested that, if juvenile cases have increased due to the four day school week, a curfew during school hours would probably not solve the problem.

When asked why the village needed a law when there were state laws already in place, Spear indicated that the process of dealing with truancy through state agencies was complicated and not always successful. The Capitan ordinance would allow him to quickly identify children who should be in school, notify their parents of a problem and deal with the violation directly, Spear said.

Capitan trustee Jim Davis acknowledged that current state statutes address truancy issues and parental responsibility but, he said, the law is being lost in the bureaucracy. "It's reported to the school, then it goes to the state, then it goes back to local probation," Davis said. "Nothing's being done about these kids." Davis said that he was adamantly opposed to the ordinance when he first read it, but then he started calling law enforcement agencies to discuss it. "The kids are falling through the cracks," he said. "They're becoming heroes among their peers."

Attorney for the village of Capitan, Zachary Cook, explained that the enforcement of truancy laws under state statute is the responsibility of the District Attorney and the New Mexico Children, Youth and Families Division. "This ordinance gives the authority to the municipality," Cook said.

A home school dad pointed out that the ordinance didn't clearly exempt home schooled children from complying with public school hours, and Cook suggested a change in the language of the ordinance that eliminated the mention of home schooled children.

The ordinance was adopted by the trustees, after being amended to apply only to those children who should be in public or private schools during regular school hours.
