

Citizens Request Review of Animal Ordinance

by Patrice Brazie

During the July meeting of the Lincoln County Board of Commissioners, Nogal resident Bob Moeller asked to be tasked with amending the county's animal control ordinance. Moeller has served briefly in the former Lincoln County Public Land Use and Rural Affairs Advisory Committee (PLURAAC), and the county's planning commission.

Moeller was removed from the latter after questions were raised regarding his request for information and an opinion about the county's mining ordinance from a mining attorney in Virginia.

County officials feared an inappropriate expenditure of county funds after the attorney (in Virginia) submitted a bill for services performed.

In July, Moeller told the county commissioners that he would like them to authorize a review of the county's animal control ordinance for a possible redraft. He recalled a statement made by county commissioner Tom Battin in December in which Battin said that the ordinance should be revisited as needed.

Moeller recommended that certain sections of the ordinance be re-examined, including sections relating to the authority of animal control officers, identification of animals, impoundment of animals, as well as sections dealing with animal cruelty and abandonment. He gave no clear indication as to how he believed those portions of the ordinance should be changed.

"If you were to approve and authorize this, I would be very pleased to work with (Lincoln County Attorney) Mr. Morel on this," Moeller said. "If it works for him, what I would propose to do is act as an input coordinator. I would interview the sheriff, his deputies, animal control officers, the county manager, Humane Society officials, shelter personnel and domestic companion animal advocates for their recommendations," he said.

County Anticipates Wind Energy Ordinance

by Patrice Brazie

With some parts of Lincoln County having been identified as prime areas for wind power generation, and a new high voltage electrical transmission line proposed to run from somewhere north of Carrizozo to Socorro, Deming and on to Arizona, Lincoln County officials are trying to prepare for changes that may come.

A public hearing held during the August 18th meeting of the Lincoln County Board of Commissioners gave residents and other interested parties a chance to speak out about a proposed Lincoln County Wind Siting Ordinance. Wind energy development companies were on hand to have their comments heard.

First to speak was U.S. Air Force Brigadier General Hanson Scott, director of the Office of Military Base Planning and Support, State of New Mexico. Hansen said that it was important that the county's proposed ordinance took into consideration any effect that wind power installations might have on military missions in the area.

"It would be helpful to us if the ordinance would ensure that military bases were taken into account," Scott said.

He told the county commissioners that he would present the county's draft of a wind siting ordinance to officials at Holloman to solicit their comments. No one from Holloman could attend the public hearing due to training exercises at the base on the same day, Scott said.

The Brigadier General said that the military has no preferred standards or specifications particular to wind energy systems.

"I think that the Department of Defense, the Air Force, the Army are behind in terms of understanding what the potential impacts of wind farming could be on their missions," Scott said. "The Navy folks out in California developed a process wherein they're involved with the counties in the siting of these devices, but I do not believe they have a set of standards. That's one of the issues. They've attacked this problem through regional environmental points of contact and the mission elements have been left out. I talked to the Air Force guys that are in charge of this and they are still trying to organize best how to attack this issue," he said.

A landowners group in the Corona area was represented at the public hearing by Mel Johnson, who asked the county officials to support the development of wind farming in Lincoln County. Johnson said that the industry could bring much needed economic benefits to the Corona area.

"It's going to bring a lot of good economic possibilities to our county and schools," Johnson said.

James Kelly, representing First Wind Energy, a wind energy development company working with some Lincoln County landowners, commended the county commissioners for their efforts in addressing the industry through a proposed ordinance.

"We're encouraged by the county's proactive approach to an ordinance for wind energy," Kelly said. "I think a direction for development is key, having clarity so that the company knows that they're following the right path, and that at the end of that path there would be a concrete sort of approval," he said. "That's very important."

Kelley said that wind energy projects are very dynamic and site plans are constantly changing in design. He asked the county commissions to allow flexibility in the ordinance in regards to site plans, which Kelly suggested could change as a project advances.

"I think the county providing conditional approvals along the development path is important as well," Kelly said. "I

Rebecca Judd, master gardener, will present the program at the Capitan Public Library's First Friday free program Sept. 4 at 7:00 p.m. The event will be held at Smokey Bear Park Amphitheater behind the Capitan Fire Station.

The topic will be Dirt Cheap Gardening. Judd will share her experience of gardening with native New Mexico plants.

She has worked to make the Smokey Bear Park's display of native plants representative of those that are truly indigenous to the area.

She will discuss native plants, all kinds of gardens and gardening, composting and more. She will then take us on a tour of the museum's greenhouse.

The public is invited to attend the free program and learn more about this interesting topic.

Following the lecture, refreshments will be served in the greenhouse. If there are questions, call the library at 354-3035.

NASA'S Pad Abort One Crew Module, the next generation of a manned-spacecraft, stopped at Holloman Air Force Base in Alamogordo last week, then went on to White Sands Missile Range. The module was escorted from the BEAR Base portion of Holloman by members of the 49th Security Forces Squadron before officers from the NM State Police and the NM Department of Public Safety Motor Transportation Division along with deputies from the Otero County Sheriff's Department took over at U.S. 70. # Citizens Request Review . . .

"I would gather information from other New Mexico counties similar to ours with similar situations," Moeller continued. "I would screen these suggestions and recommendations. I would organize them and provide them to Mr. Morel for his review and possible incorporation into a proposed redraft of the ordinance," Moeller said in July. "We could work any way that Mr. Morel wants to work."

No response was made to Moeller's request and the proposal was not placed on the county commissioners' agenda for their August 18th meeting. However, during the public comment portion of the August 18 county commission meeting, the issue was raised again by others.

Barbara Culler, a resident of Carrizozo and founder of animal activist group Miracle Paws for Pets, told the county commissioners that she thought the section of the animal control ordinance that offers definitions can, in some cases, be too broadly interpreted.

Culler said that cats are particularly difficult to identify as most cats don't wear collars or any form of identification. She suggested that some change to the ordinance would assist in the identification of cats. She indicated that she might favor a micro-chip requirement being added to the ordinance. She said that both the Lincoln County Humane Society and the Carrizozo Animal Shelter are capable of reading the micro-chips.

Culler further suggested that the county's ordinance should be amended in its treatment of feral cats, and said that language in the ordinance does not clearly define the "reasonable effort" that must be made to locate an animal's owner.

Culler said that the ordinance essentially asks that owners of pets that have not been spayed or neutered put down a $25 deposit and promise to have the animal altered by a veterinarian. With the cost of spaying animals running much higher than $25, Culler said, people pay the deposit but never follow through with the commitment to "fix" their pet. She said the ordinance also fails to clearly define abandonment.

Caroline McCoy, also of Nogal, said that she didn't think a redraft of the animal control ordinance should be handled by a single individual, and suggested that the county commissioners appoint a committee to review the ordinance if they choose to re-address it.

Ruidoso resident Bunny Aris read a statement opposing the ordinance's method of dealing with feral cats, which is essentially euthanasia.

"We, in fact, protect many animals from harm with violations resulting in felony charges, while at the same time these feral cats, which cause no more harm than a deer, a fox, a squirrel, or even an owl are being destroyed with no guilt whatsoever," Aris said.

She recommended catch-neuter-and-release methods to help control feral cat populations and mandatory spay and neuter regulations for all dogs and cats.

"When I started reading this ordinance I was very encouraged," Aris said. "The intent of the ordinance is to protect animals from neglect and abuse and encourage responsible ownership of animals. But there's no teeth in there," she said. "If you don't start with mandatory spay and neuter, you're part and parcel of this problem."

Aris said it made little sense to ask the owners of pets that are apprehended by animal control to sterilize their pets.

"You're going to ask them to pay $25 when it costs them $125 or $200 or $300 to spay an animal?" she asked. "Of course they're not going to come back. If they're not responsible enough to have them spayed or neutered in the first place, that's just a giggle," she said.

Aris pointed out that the county funds PAWS, a Ruidoso organization that encourages and assists pet owners in the neutering and spaying of their animals, while not mandating the procedures throughout the county.

"Why are you saying yes we believe in PAWS, but you're not starting with the responsibility you're saying you want?" she asked.

Aris further recommended that breeders be required to buy a breeders license.

"They're going to make money by breeding those animals. Tell them to take a license out and get the money from the revenue," she said. "That's a business."

County commissioner Tom Battin said that the commissioners will consider the proposal to amend the animal control ordinance, but must balance the consideration with issues like the cost of enforcement.

Jerry Carroll, Oscura freholder, suggested that the ordinance be amended to include a better definition of feral cats, and volunteered to serve on a committee to review the ordinance.

The county commissioners took no specific action to address the animal control ordinance at this time.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT IS . . .

by Kit Carson

The Pride of the Prairies the Southwest's Favorite

Range hands might call him "Ole Noah!" Did you ever hear of a big game animal with a dual personality a sort of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" quadrupled, that would disappear and reappear, at a specific time of the year. And that he did that thing for a definite cause.

Well, there's one of those creatures! But he is out on the prairies again, roamin' the range, as lord of his herd, the pride of the prairies, a phantom of reality of the llanos estacados!

He's the envy of every big game hunter in the Southwest, and herds of photo minded tourists and travelers, and lots of just common, ordinary folks! There's not a trophy den anywhere that hallucinations of daring sportsmen have not placed his gigantic, shiny, black horns on its walls!

He has been known to stall imperative work on major national warheads, as workers who grasped the fate of the Nation in their hands, laid down their tools and paused to admire the beautiful creature.

He has grown to be a local mascot, if not a national figure! And you can imagine, with his prestige, what a social stepper he must be!

Lots have been cast, haunting nightmares followed by shrewd schemes, loss of fitful sleep as snares of every description have been carefully laid by nimrods of the entire country in a contemplative plan for the capture of the pride of the prairies!

Dry runs have been made, and a cinch seemed positive by many a wanton hunter before drawing lots, as they dreamed of the day when the best trophy to ever stalk the plains of the great southwest would add prestige to their sportsman's display! The sleek, beloved, plains creature did not have a chance in their visions! Death for him was destined many a time to be a reality!

But that will never be! It's a relevant fact: "Ashes to ashes; dust to dust!" And to dust of the earth he'll return, in the haunts from which he sprang! The Reigning Gods of Prairie Animals have a strong, protecting arm wrapped about him!

Because he's the favored antelope of the Plains Country, the coveted pronghorn that stalks a region (unperturbed), unmolested, and completely surrounded by never-falling fortifications to insure him a long, eventful, life span, one of much recognition and publicity!

About 25 miles east of Roswell, on Route 380, is a great plains country, the llanos estacado, which is the home of the Pride of the Prairies. He lives there today, in a domineering sort of manner, just as countless numbers of his ancestors have done through the ages. Yet, he is far outstanding in the annals of pronghorn heritage. He has attracted untold thousands as the sleekish, most beautiful individual of the species.

His home is on the LE Ranch, formerly owned by J.P. White of Roswell, and ramrodded for over 30 years by the able, competent Rue Roberts, now of the same city. The Spool Cattle Company of Amarillo acquired the plains country landmark in April of last year. The spread is under the new management of Ray Sneed. The Pride of the Prairies was considered in the legal transaction, and remained on the range undisturbed with his great harem, just as he has done for the last seven or eight years, to prowl the region in a possessive sort of attitude.

Nothing seems to bother the prominent antelope. Neither does he pay any attention to the throngs of nimrods who covet his hide and horns. He is bizarre and spectacular. He has been known to pose for photographers, in the most graceful manner, always standing staunchly in the foreground of his herd as the nervous fingers of the photogenic individuals fingered the shutter. Later, twitching the white puff of fur on his rump, he'd gander away. Napoleon as he made his stand at the Battle of Waterloo never produced a more formidable pose!

Recently millions of dollars of activity was performed on his range, construction of some of the world's largest missile launching pads. Yet, he never seemed to worry. At times he approached the hustle and bustle of human activity and the road of heavy equipment, to investigate with an eye of surveillance and an air of wisdom -- never giving an inch for his domain nor showing any signs of disturbance. He always licked his chops, planted his feet a little deeper in the goodly soil, and made a staunch stand. The writer knows of nine months that he did this very thing, and others can account for much more time than that.

His beauty and wisdom as an outstanding characteristic is talked of in cafes, in the bars, over the phones, offices, and everywhere -- but always in whispered versions around the Game Wardens! There is no accounting for the amount of rubber that has been burned from tires as motorists pulled to a screeching halt, along the Route, to stare amazingly at the beautiful creature. Cameras would be pulled and shots made; and the old scogger seemed all the time to swell with pride and take on the attributes of a most graceful pose. Even hunters have been known to, in form of dry think the way the ordinance is set up right now is to determine one approval, based on having all other entities' approvals. In New Mexico specifically, the PRC (Public Regulatory Commission) has a similar requirement where they need all other approvals before they'll give their approval, so you have this chicken-and-egg situation potentially," he said.

Kelly told the county commissioners that First Wind Energy would be submitting written comments on the proposed wind siting ordinance for further consideration by county officials.

Tim Marvich, of Horizon Wind Energy, a national developer of wind energy projects, said that his firm is currently prospecting in Lincoln County. He said the county was very promising from a wind energy producing standpoint. Marvich said that Horizon Wind Energy would also be submitting written comments on the ordinance, and added that he agreed with Kelly's opinion that a clear statement of the county's required processes in wind energy development would be helpful.

"If your intent is to permit responsible development in areas that you would like to have wind development, then you have succeeded," Marvich said. "Clear processes for developers are a good thing, so we know exactly what permitting hurdles we need to go over, under or through."

Marvich said that the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) is the clearing house for all projects that might affect special use air space or military missions. He also said that the Lincoln County Commissioners were slightly ahead of the curve when it comes to regulating aspects of wind energy development. He reported that there are currently few transmission lines to carry wind-produced energy from the county to larger metropolitan areas like Albuquerque and Phoenix, but the proposed SunZia transmission lines project could change that.

"That is several years down the road, but you've taken a proactive stance here by crafting an ordinance at this time," Marvich said.

The business development manager of Shell Wind Energy, Ravi Sankaran, also spoke during the public hearing, as well as submitting written comments on the proposed ordinance.

"I think we share the views of the need for flexibility and a need for clarity," Sankaran said. "Because there is concurrent development in neighboring counties, there could be some benefit of shared learning among those counties, in particular because there could be some overlap of projects between those counties," he said. "For that reason, there could be some benefit to both sides for having some collaboration, or at least discussions, among neighboring counties."

Sankaran referred to a section of the draft of the ordinance that requires identification of low-level aircraft routes, saying that his firm is having a hard time identifying where those routes are.

"Some of them could be in the process of being developed," Sankaran said.

Several members of the County Landowners Association told the county commissioners that they are actively involved in plans to bring wind generated power systems to Lincoln County, and asked the county commissioners to support renewable energy development efforts.

The county commissioners took no action regarding the wind siting ordinance and will continue to collect public comments as the drafting process goes forward.

THOUGHTS

From the Editor's Desk

Plan For A Fun Labor Day!

By Ruth Hammond

There is only one more week before the long Labor Day weekend, the weekend that more or less officially ends summer. Years ago it was considered a week of mixed feelings because it not only meant the end of summer, it also meant the start of school. Traditionally the day after Labor Day was when all students trotted off to school, usually carrying paper and pencils, crayons and the necessary school stuff.

And nowadays school starting dates can be in July or August, very few in September. Last week a student was skating around the court house and we didn't know if this was a situation of playing hooky or if that student had different days to be in school. If it is confusing for onlookers, what can it be for the youngsters? And what about questions being asked by people wondering why a student is not in school.

Needless to say, school is no longer a daily grind from Labor Day until Memorial Day because many students have unique schedules. It probably makes it easier for some people to plan vacations, but what about people needing sitters for younger children? That could be a nightmare. Years ago the majority of students had a parent at home when they got home after school. Now most parents work and some children are referred to as latch key children.

Golly gee but how things change in a short or relatively short time, or so it seems. Other things have been changing also but older people are just now aware. Take for instance models, not toy models but females who wear clothing as they walk down a runway. Years ago, about 60 years at least, models were known for their ability to walk while keeping their body straight. Young girls who hoped one day to be a model would practice walking with a book on their head, hoping to attain the model look. Nowadays the models, if you can call them that, sway from side to side, using the entire runway for their promenade.

Lest we forget, older people need to adjust their way of looking at things and remembering how things were done in the olden days, before massive electronic takeovers that control everything we do.

Even this newspaper is now being compiled in an electronic method. While you enjoy reading, remember to make plans for Labor Day Weekend.

SANTA FE -- The originals of two Billy the Kid's letters to Gov. Lew Wallace have been located and now are on display at the state History Library in Santa Fe.

The Kid wrote the first letter, probably in 1879, proposing to trade testimony for freedom and the second asking the governor to uphold his end of the bargain, as Billy lay manacled in a Santa Fe jail cell three blocks from the Palace of the Governors.

The letters are highly important to New Mexico history. Billy the Kid is the most famous New Mexican ever. More books and movies have been inspired by him than by any other person in our nation's history.

Not much survives from The Kid's era 130 years ago. These letters reveal more about the real Billy than anything else we have. They reveal that he was not a homicidal moron as he is often envisioned.

The letters are polite, literate and well reasoned. The penmanship was the flowing and formal Spenserian style of that era. So how did Billy manage to get so well educated?

It was those Silver City schools, from which I graduated and from which Billy dropped out in order to escape the law in ninth grade. But when still a teenager, Billy wrote a heck of a lot better letter than I did at the same age.

The two letters were purchased by the Lincoln County Heritage Trust from the Wallace family many years ago. Other letters are in the Lew Wallace Library in Indiana. Incidentally, Indiana chose Lew Wallace for one of its two figures in the U.S. Capitol's Statuary Hall.

The letters were displayed in the Trust's museum in Lincoln until the Trust went out of business in 1999 and R.D. Hubbard, of Ruidoso Downs, took over the property, including the two letters. Evidently they were put in a safe and were not displayed after that.

By the time Hubbard turned all the Lincoln property over to the state, in 2006, the letters had been forgotten. A chance conversation between noted Western collector Bob McCubbin, of Santa Fe, and head librarian Tomas Juehn indicated the new History Museum was trying to get a Billy letter from Indiana to display.

McCubbin suggested the state use its own letters that should still be in Lincoln. A search was made and the letters were found, still in good condition. By the way, McCubbin's impressive collection includes the kitchen knife Billy was carrying when Sheriff Pat Garrett shot him.

So the letters are still safely in the hands of the state and reside in the Fray Angelico Chavez History Library where they can have adequate security and care. Public viewing is available only from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday through Friday. That's not much but who really has to see the original. If you are one who does, you can visit that library.

For all others, copies of those letters should be available everywhere Billy is featured because visitors need to see that side of Billy the Kid.

It is almost inconceivable Billy the Kid would have entered our folklore the way he has if he had been no more than a juvenile delinquent. These letters are part of the evidence that he was more than that.

Obviously the one authenticated picture of Billy does not make him appear intelligent -- or a ladies' man as he undisputedly was. Some theorize he was less than sober at the time although Billy was not reputed to have a drinking problem. Let's just say he was having a bad day.

And let's dispel a couple of other myths while we're at it. Billy didn't kill 21 people -- one for each year of his life. First, the date and place of Billy's birth are in doubt, so he may not have been 21. Second, only about six killings can be authenticated and most of them were connected to his role as a hired hand in the Lincoln County War.

One More . . .

This column should have been published last week but time, space and some memory lapse prevented me from getting in everything I wanted to last week.

In naming all the people that have helped us over the past few weeks I omitted the name of Jeff Hammond, his contribution helped us get this project off the ground.

Others I wanted to acknowledge are the many people in the newspaper business that have helped us through the years. People like Bob Tooley and the group at the Herald in TorC who printed our paper when we shut down our press years ago; people like Tom Reeves and Richard Colthrop at the Alamogordo Daily News and everyone in the press room like Robert and Steve Telles, and Jim Seth; the group at the Las Cruces Sun-News like Tom Juarigue; and most recent the people at the Valencia County News-Bulletin in Belen, people like David Puddu, Mike Mendoza and Mike Sambaluk, and now the group over at the Roswell Daily Record. What a great bunch of more than nice people. To each and every one of you and the many more that didn't get mentioned. . . . THANK YOU!!

Getting back to my last column, just in case anyone read it. . . . yes I do know the difference between grips and gripe. We are getting better each week at this new way of getting a newspaper out. . . . and can't wait till I can memorize all that needs to be, and not have to check the many notes that I have to reference to much too often. We're getting there.

Now that football and volleyball seasons have started, we invite all county coaches to send any and all information they might want in the paper to us, my e-mail is aguilar@tularosa.net, or send directly to paper at news@tularosa.net. peter aguilar runs, line him in their rifle sights and reluctantly count the days when he would be theirs. But it never happened.

The protecting gods of antelope kingdom constantly hold a protecting arm over the pronghorn. At a certain time of the year, he disappears -- conveniently during the hunting season -- and is not seen again for weeks. Then again he appears as predominately as ever, if not more antagonizingly than before, to the nimrods.

It is whispered, and even talked with sincerity, that the cowboys on the range assist the Pride of the Prairies in finding a place of seclusion during the rampage of the hunters. They say that he goes to the corals of the home ranch, of his own accord, and takes fortification in a stable until all is quiet on the Western Front! Quien sabe? about this!

It's possible; for he is of a rare nature, intelligently far above the average of his race -- with a possible IQ unparalleled in animal kingdom -- and his outwitted some of the best and most wanton hunters of the big game conquistadores!

And even with the short life span attributed to the antelope family -- the shortest of all big game animals -- "Ole Noah" seems that he will, as another outstanding characteristic, long surpass that of his ancestors. And when he has wrapped up his business on the prairies, people will continue to see him, if not in reality, in visions of the days when he was the Pride of the Prairies.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT IS . . . The beloved pronghorn will acquire attention far above that of any other big game animal, if he hasn't already reached those heights -- unparalleled only by that of Smokey the Bear that had his origin in Lincoln County, and became universally famous and finally settled in the limits of our nation's Capital.

To kill him now is something that no one would want to be guilty of.

Rosa Torres Elected as Vice President Candidate

The FHA meeting was called to order by president Margaret Withers. The minutes read, officer's reports given. Carol Vigil read some information about one of their many projects for the year, to adopt a girl from Viet Nam in view of all the trouble that they are having there.

The FHA yearbooks were given to the girls. The yearbook covers had three red roses (which is the FHA flower) on them and were real pretty.

The girls elected Juanita Baca as the District Secretary/Treasurer, Rosa Torres was elected as a candidate for State Vice-Pres. of State and National Projects.

The FHA District meeting is Saturday in Ruidoso. Sue Shrum is trying out for District Song Leader and Faye Fallis for Recreation Leader. Hopi Palomarez is Chapter song leader and Sue Shrum and Janet Greer are Chapter recreation leaders. Chapter moters who attended were: Mrs. Shrum, Mrs. Withers, Mrs. Torres and Mrs. Greer.

WE DON'T KNOW if great weather and good music inspired this gentleman's colorful attire, or if he was reminiscing about the 40th anniversary of the 1969 Woodstock concert, but he was one of many who came out to enjoy a free concert in Carrizozo recently. (Photo by Patrice Brazie)
