

County Will Prorate Liquor Licenses

After some confusion on the part of a restaurant owner, the Lincoln County Board of Commissioners decided earlier this month to establish a method by which the county's liquor license fees can be prorated in the first year.

Sally Canning, owner of Laughing Sheep Restaurant, applied for her establishment's first liquor license in December of last year, half way through the county's fiscal year and billing cycle for liquor licenses.

According to correspondence between Canning and the Lincoln County Clerk's Office, Canning apparently did not understand that the county has fees for such licenses, and that she owed the county $250. On June 1st, a notice was sent to inform Canning that she could not sell liquor after June 30th unless the original $250 fee, plus a renewal fee of $250 for the 2009-2010 year was received by the clerk's office before the end of the month.

Canning wrote that her restaurant operates seasonally, from early April until the end of December, and said that she didn't apply for a state liquor license until April of this year and had thereby only utilized the county license for about six weeks before being required to renew.

During the July 21st meeting of the county's board of commissioners, county attorney Alan Morel asked the board to consider the fairness of the county's licensing fee schedule.

"This restaurant requested a license in the middle of the year," Morel explained. "Subsequently, on July 1st new licenses go into effect and are required to be purchased. There's been a dispute, and actually the statutes are not clear, on when you apply for a license from the county mid-year, whether or not you have to pay the full fee, which is $250, or whether you can pay a proportionate share of that fee, based on what time of the year it is," Morel said.

"We checked with counties all over the state and every county seems to be doing it differently," Morel continued. "Some of them prorate. My office contacted the state liquor control board. The state of New Mexico actually does prorate when they issue the first license. Ms. Maddox and I believe that the county needs a policy as to deal with these when we receive them mid-year. I wasn't comfortable telling Ms. Maddox that she could prorate it because there's nothing in the statute that says you have that power.

but in talking to state, they actually do it and half the state clerks do it. I think it's incumbent upon you to tell us, or set a policy as to how you want us to accept these fees, whether you will agree to prorate."

County Commissioner Don Williams asked if there would be any administrative difficulties associated with prorating.

"The one issue that we do need to make clear is, if you have a policy, when do we start prorating?" Morel responded. "We have discussed, and I think it's appropriate, that when the state issues their license, that's when the county fee needs to be prorated from, not when the business might actually open."

County Commission Chairman Tom Battin said that he knew that Maddox and her staff have worked hard to be fair in addressing

County Denies Road Grade Variance

by Patrice Brazie

Lincoln County's Board of Commissioners, as well as several attorneys and developers and the county's advisory committees, spent a great deal of time hashing out the county's most recent subdivision ordinance. Several subdividers hurried to file the necessary documents for their lands to begin the official process of creating a subdivision. The new ordinance went into effect in 2008.

One subdivision that was filed prior to the latest edition of the subdivision ordinance is the 32 acre, 14 tract Elk Haven subdivision accessed by Alpine Village Road. The subdivision, located west of state high way 48, about mid way between Ruidoso and Alto falls within the extra territorial zone around the Village of Ruidoso and must meet approval by the village as well as comply with state and county regulations. The roads within the subdivision are private, and regulated by the county's 2006 requirements for road construction. The county's road grade requirements vary based on considerations like distance from an intersection.

Earlier this month the Lincoln County Planning Commission and the Land and Natural Resources Advisory Committee (ANRAC) met jointly to review a request from the developer of the Elk Haven subdivision, Kenneth Keegan, for variances from the county's subdivision ordinance as it relates to road grades. Minutes of that meeting, prepared by the planning commission, show that the commission members were divided in their opinions and unable to recommend to the county commissioners either approval or denial of the variance request.

On July 14th, members of the Home Owners Association for the Alpine Village subdivision, another of Keegan's projects, submitted a letter to the county commissioners, asking that the Elk Haven subdivision not be approved until Keegan resolves some drainage and metering problems at Alpine Village. Keegan turned control of that subdivision over to the home owners association in 2008.

In a memorandum also dated July 14th, Planning Director Curt Temple stated that the developer had "re-examined" the preliminary plat for the Elk Haven subdivision since it failed to pass review by the planning commission and the board of commissioners last December. Temple wrote that he did not find the subdivision's preliminary plat to be in compliance with the subdivision ordinance, primarily because of excessive road grades.

Lincoln County's Fire and Emergency Services Director Travis Atwell issued a statement in late 2008 spelling out the probable inability of emergency service vehicles to access portions of the Elk Haven subdivision due to road grades of 13.18 percent.

During its July 21st meeting, the board of county commissioners heard the request for road grade variances in the Elk Haven subdivision. Keegan was represented by Eric Collins of D.E. Collins and Associates surveyors. Temple was not able to attend but the county's legal counsel Alan Morel read the memorandum submitted by Temple on July 14th.

"An area for concern will be the temporary closing of Alpine Village Road for a period to raise the grade, construct the drainage mitigation items and reconstruct the intersection," Morel read. "I recommend you not approve Elk Haven subdivision preliminary plat road variances, based on road design grades being so extreme and not meeting the subdivision ordinance," he further cited from Temple's memo.

Collins acknowledged the previous decision by the county board to deny approval of the Elk Haven preliminary plat and road variances.

"I think the general consensus was, why don't you go back and try to re-engineer some of these roads to see if they can make it any better

That's what we've done," Collins said. "Currently the biggest liability to the county, and the biggest concern when we first brought this to you, is the intersection at Alpine Village Road and the entrance road."

Collins told the county commissioners that the only way to resolve the road grade issues at the intersection would be to raise the level of Alpine Village Road, which is dedicated to and maintained by the county.

"There's no way to decrease the grade within the subdivision itself," he said. "Working with an engineer, we have put together a plan to increase the elevation of Alpine Village Road, at the entrance."

Collins said Alpine Village Road is very dangerous, even by county standards, with steep grades and deep drop-offs. He said the developer's plan is to raise a portion of that road about four feet. Guard rails would be added to prevent vehicles from going off the road in one spot at the intersection.

When seeking variances from the county's ordinances, developers and their representatives often point out that there are other places, other subdivisions, that do not comply with the county's current, or even recent regulations. Collins followed suit. He also pointed out that developers in the mountainous parts of the county will necessarily request more variances than subdividers on flatter land.

Collins referred to Temple's memo, where Temple wrote that the need for a variance could have been avoided had the roads been designed before they were built.

"I'm Collins, my father, met with the developer and looked at different options before any roads were built in this development, and picked the best option that they felt was going to be safe," Collins said. "This is where the road is designed now. It is the only place where this road could have been built in order to get into the subdivision," Collins said.

CowBelles Award Scholarships

Each year Corriente CowBelles awards scholarships to deserving Lincoln County students who are graduating seniors, college students, or graduate students that are studying agriculture or a related field. This year four $400 scholarships are being awarded, two scholarships will be awarded in memory of Ken Schear, due to the generosity of his family and Ken's lifelong desire to help young people in any way that he could.

Staci Stanbrough, a senior at New Mexico State University in Las Cruces, and the daughter of Tiger and Karen Stanbrough, is the recipient of a Ken Schear Memorial Scholarship. Staci has maintained a straight A average during her college career along with actively participating on the NMSU Rodeo Team. She has qualified for the Collegiate National Finals Rodeo for two years and continues to take honors in rodeoing. Staci recently changed her college major from Ag Business and Economics to Animal Science with a pre-vet option. Staci is currently working as a surgery intern at Equine Sports Medicine and Surgery located at Sunland Park, New Mexico and plans to enter vet school after graduation from college.

The second Ken Schear Memorial Scholarship is presented to Ryan Games, son of Mike and Melody Games. Ryan is a 2006 graduate of Carrizozo High School and a senior at New Mexico State University where he is majoring in agriculture and extension education. Ryan has been very active in his local FFA and 4H organizations throughout his school years where he has gained strong work ethic, responsibility, and leadership skills. After graduation in May 2010, he plans to begin a welding business, and later teach technical and vocational skills at a trade school or college.

Dulcie Sultemeier, a 2009 graduate of Corona High School is recipient of a third Corriente scholarship. Dulcie graduated at the top of her class as valedictorian and is a fourth generation rancher on the family ranch east of Corona. She plans to attend West Texas A&M at Canyon, Texas in the fall where she will study veterinary science to become a veterinary technician. Working in that position she hopes to help the ranching community as well as her own family business.

Sara Rush is a fourth recipient of a Corriente CowBelle scholarship. Sara will be attending New Mexico State University at Las Cruces in the fall where she will major in Agriculture Business and Economics. Sara has been very active in extra-curricular activities at Capitan High School, including FFA, 4H, National Honor Society, softball, and Cross-Country group. She was FFA chapter officer for four years and has participated in Career Development Events for all six years of her FFA involvement. She has been in 4H for eight years and is currently president of the club. She has been an integral part of annual at the Lincoln County Fair including market lambs, market swine, market steers, breeding beef heifer, dairy heifers, poultry, meat goats and rabbits.

County Manager's Report

by Patrice Brazie

With a lengthy agenda for the July 21st meeting of the Board of County Commissioners, County Manager Tom Stewart submitted his regular monthly report without discussion or comments. The report offered a brief summary of some projects and events involving Lincoln County.

The manager reported having signed two contracts with the State Forestry Division in July for the continuation of efforts to

County Denies

He said that meeting a 12 percent grade requirement on a particular road ending a cul-de-sac would be impossible. Creating a grade of 12 percent would leave the cul-de-sac twenty-feet below the level of the ground, Collins said. If variances are approved, the maximum road grade in the Elk Haven subdivision would be 16 percent, he said.

County Commissioner Dave Parks suggested that, if the variance request was granted, the developer should include the caveat from Atwell in the subdivision's disclosure statement. Collins added that the roads will be posted with a speed limit of 20-miles-per-hour and property owners would be advised to drive with caution.

"I don't think these roads are out-of-character with the subdivisions that exist in the Village of Ruidoso and outside the Village of Ruidoso," Collins said. "You've heard me state this before, there's subdivisions all over the place with various grades in excess of 20 percent."

Collins reported that culverts, drainage pipes and rip-rap barriers in ditches will serve to control potential drainage issues in Elk Haven, and each lot will be required to utilize holding ponds to reduce rapid runoff. A concern expressed by the Alpine Village Cabins home owners dealt with runoff from Elk Haven onto their own properties.

"Has anybody looked at the downstream developments and where this is going to go?" County Commissioner Don Williams asked Collins.

Collins said that there is a natural drainage system within the Avalon Forest area that has historically carried all of the water that runs there.

County Commissioner Jackie Powell said that the engineering report that she read stated that the proposed drainage pipes for Elk Haven were too small, and that not all of the estimated water flow was accounted for in the subdivision's drainage plan.

A follow-up engineering report apparently not yet seen by Powell prior to the meeting states that all of the Elk Haven drainage issues have been addressed and satisfactorily resolved, and that the only remaining engineering issues were those of the road grades.

Regarding complaints from the Alpine Village Home Owners Association, local attorney Mike Runnells objected to any discussion during the public meeting.

"It's an improper, ex-parte contact, it has nothing whatsoever to do with the issue before this commission and it's at best borderline extortion," Runnells said. He suggested that the letter should have never been distributed to the county commissioners. "It's an attempt to extort action from this developer in an already existing subdivision, on issues in that subdivision. That has nothing to do with the variance request before this commission," Runnells said emphatically.

"They're trying to get you to hold up action on this to get him to do something that he's not legally required to do and normally wouldn't do. That, to me, is a classic definition of extortion," Runnells said. "I don't mind using the word, I know exactly what it means."

Morel told the county commissioners that the homeowners association has a right to present their concerns to the county board but because their concerns, as stated in the association's letter, do not involve the Elk Haven subdivision, the comments should be disregarded in contemplating the variance request.

Ronnie Ford, newly elected president of the Alpine Village Home Owners Association and resident of Keller, Texas, said that he would like the county commissioners to address an issue that affected him personally.

"Cliffside Road joins Alpine Village in a steep grade," Ford said, "which I estimate to be about a 16 percent grade."

Ford told the county commissioners about an experience he had when driving on Cliffside Road after a snowfall in January.

"As I came down the steep grade, my car began to slide and steering became a problem," he said.

Ford said that he was unable to stop the vehicle before it slid through the intersection with Alpine Village Road, hit a tree and went off a slope.

"I was finally able to hit two large pine trees, which did stop my trip down the mountain," he said.

Ford asked the county commissioners to ensure that the driving hazards that exist in Alpine Village not be repeated in Elk Haven. I'm asking for the county to install barricades on the other side of our subdivision to prevent any resident driving out of Alpine Village Cabins on Cliffside Road from endangering their lives," he said.

In response to a question from Battin, Collins summed up Keegan's request for a variance from a five-percent grade to a six-percent grade at one location, and a variance from a 12-percent grade to a 16-percent grade at another.

"I believe that we're being asked to approve the reconfiguration of the intersection, the reconfiguration of the drainage, and to grant a variance as to grades going up to 16-percent," Battin said. "I think we're in the same dilemma that the planning commission probably was. We want to respect the owner's right to develop his property. At the same time, the reason we have twice amended our ordinance is, in part, to protect the safety and welfare of people and residents in the county," he said. "Weighing those considerations, do we have reason to grant a 16-percent grade variance?"

Keegan reiterated the argument that the roads within Elk Haven will remain private and not used by the public at-large, and that probably only two home sites in the development will be regularly affected by the variances.

A motion to approve the requested variances and the reconfiguration of Alpine Village Road was made by Williams. The motion failed with commissioners Battin, Powell and Eileen Sedillo voting against, Parks and Williams in favor.

Continuation of RANCHER OBJECTS TO FARM & LIVESTOCK BUREAU PROPOSAL . . .

Letter from L.D. Merchant
Objecting to F.B. Proposal

Addition to Original Letter

In attempting to analyze and to criticize the report of the action of the meeting, I would first admit that whatever did or may have happened, that I was in some respect apparently at fault and negligent in not attending a meeting of so great importance, and at the same time being one of a certain and particular number calculated to be in the forefront of a representative group with definite responsibility to the federal government and the many thousands of permittees on the public lands looking to us, and trusting that our loyalty and our experience through the past quarter of a century might well be relied upon.

There can be no doubt that the concern and sentiment of the segment of Farm Bureau membership not concerned with grazing the public lands in connection with a legitimate ranching operation, are quite sincere in their belief that the public lands have been in bad hands for the past 100 years, and that the Taylor Grazing Act has been flouted and that the allegation by federal land service that we who ranch and pay our way are unable to no longer operate our own outfits, and must now be regimented and reorganized under federal control and supervision if we are to continue use of the public lands.

Common horse sense and reason should convince any and all who are capable of intelligent reasoning, that ulterior motives now activate the exploitation of all public lands with a definite and detrimental effect upon fee lands, and lands of every status for whatever purpose the lands are calculated to be used.

We have lived through and persevered in near every conceivable condition of use of open range lands and in our later years have prevailed upon federal authority for the opportunity for protection of the lands and stabilization of our ranching interests, and it has been with pride that we have been allowed to cooperate with vested authority for the accomplishment of all as specified in the Taylor Grazing Act.

Our labors, our investments, our facilities and improvements, our civic pride, our concern for generations to follow who would enjoy the heritage we have protected, and the assurance that the potential production of food and fibre, has been augmented by the part we have had in that production.

Now after having coordinated land patterns and status of every and all lands in a ranching operation, we proudly say that "At least we have everything under control."

The federal land departments agree that the ranching unit is under control and is a separate and self-supporting unit which can now be readily managed and brought under a definite control of a dreamer's fantasy. The grazing fee question, now so lightly disposed of by resolution, proposes to surrender to the world's greatest and fastest growing bureaucracy, all that was intended to be covered in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, and to supercede and to forestall state's legislation for relief from tyrannical bureaucracy.

It has virtually been dumped into the lap of the Interior Department, with little or no reservation of practical or economic operation. The proposition is so top heavy, so unwieldy, so unpredictable, so impractical, so terrifically expensive, so impossible of breaking into workable detail, so lacking in consideration of existing feel and property holdings, so lacking in consideration of state's rights, in water rights, both surface and under ground, so lacking in requirement that any fee to be charged does not destroy the economy of the livestock operation now to be demoted to second place for consideration of use of the public lands.

Why should the livestock industry now underwrite the cost of administration and improvement of the public lands that are now to have a preferred use above the permitted livestock. Why should we pay the bill for the great American public for a vast playground, while we sacrifice our pride and surrender that most important principle of democratic government to an all-out socialist breakthrough, never again to be recovered.

Why should the official grazing boards now be flattered with an expression of gratitude for valuable service to the department in land administration, while so very short time ago the boards were designated as useless and unreliable and corrupting administration of the Grazing Act. The answer, cooperation first to establish confidence, to be terminated in control by the department, and soon, no need of cooperation but enforcement by constituted authority with definite provisions of penalties to be exacted for violations.

These worries may be easily laughed off, and state ments made poohoed as imaginary and without foundation. We would only ask, are you ready to assure any whom you may represent, that all is in order and no cause for concern in public land matters.

SEARCHING FOR THAT PERFECT GIFT?

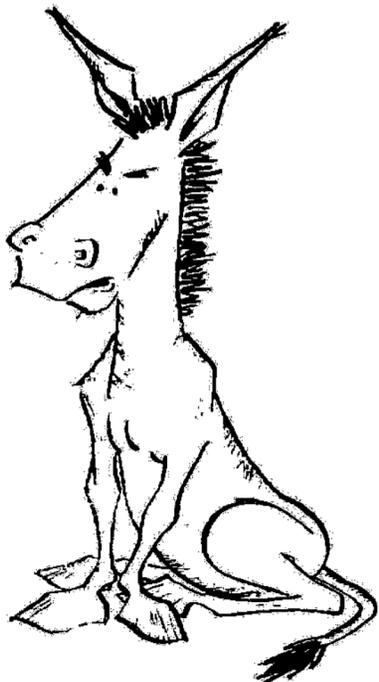

A mule is cheaper than a weekend in Las Vegas, will probably eat whatever grows in your back yard (or your neighbor's, has few or maybe no moving parts and the upkeep is a lot less than junior's car.

You can purchase a mule for around four or five hundred -- things ain't like they used to be but mule prices are concerned and this special gift probably won't be any more stubborn than some of the people around the Lincoln County News. Sure would be a surprising gift if you could sneak your mule into the living room some Christmas morning.

If, after you have considered all the many advantages of a gift mule, and you finally decide that maybe this isn't exactly for you -- consider the Lincoln County News as a special gift. The News doesn't eat a thing, doesn't smell, won't frighten your neighbors much, and has many uses after you've passed your copy around among many friends and relatives.

The NEWS is different in many ways. It's strictly a local newspaper, all about people of Lincoln County and surrounding areas, with pictures of people doing their thing in this great big county. And it's a bargain.

thin forest overgrowth in areas of wildland-urban interface. The projects for this fiscal year call for the treatment of 230 acres on Snowflake Ridge and 215 acres of private land on the Alto Mesa.

Stewart attended a recent scoping meeting in Carrizozo which introduced the proposed SunZia transmission line project. He reported that about 100 people attended the meeting. Bureau of Land Management representatives told The News that more people attended the Carrizozo meeting than a similar meeting held in Socorro.

A state-of-the-art audio/visual monitoring system was installed at the Lincoln County Detention Center in July, at a cost of $86,675.

Nine legislative projects were completed during the 2008-2009 fiscal year, including improvements at the domestic violence shelter in Ruidoso Downs and the former detention center in Carrizozo. Repairs to the Lincoln County Fairgrounds and the purchase of a new fire fighting apparatus for the Arabela Volunteer Fire Department were also among the completed projects. The manager reported that the State of New Mexico owes Lincoln County more than $157,000 in project reimbursements.

Lincoln County's plumbing contractor was called in to work on a remedy for the sewer odors that have infiltrated the county courthouse of late, and forced the closing of the courthouse proper for an afternoon in July. An inspection was made of the duct and ventilation systems and several leaking sewer lines were discovered under the court area. Stewart reported that sealing off a ventilation tunnel originating under the old detention center has remedied the problem in the courtroom area. Additional work to seal more lines, remove an obsolete air handler and eliminate old detention cells at the former detention center is planned. A portion of the costs for work done at the old detention center, $10,000 worth, will be reimbursed to the county from legislative appropriations from the state.

their licenses that were gained during this year that need to be addressed similarly?" County Commissioner Don Williams asked.

Battin said that there had been at least one other license issued during the year. That was the license for which the application was submitted with just thirty days left before renewal. Battin admitted that the county manager had at that time approved prorating the fee for that license.

Maddox said that another liquor license had been issued in August. Battin suggested that the license holder should receive a one-month reduction in the fee for the first year of licensure.

The board of county commissioners unanimously approved a motion to prorate the fees for new liquor licenses, and to base the rate on the date of issuance of a license from the state. Canning will only be required to pay for the six week or so that she was able to sell liquor, from the issuance of her state license to June 30th. Canning's renewal license fee will remain at $250 per year.

THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Whole New Process This Week

By Ruth Hammond

This has been an interesting week at The News. If you heard wailing and crying coming from the building at odd times, mostly in the daytime hours instead of at night, don't be alarmed. It was only the shrieks of being forced to learn a new and totally foreign process. The good news is we lived and hopefully we survived the inundation of new processes and procedures that are totally unfamiliar.

One person asked why we weren't trying something that was easier. Luckily that person asked the question on the phone and not in The News office where a flying object probably would have zeroed in on the person's head and if not having left a lump on the person's head would at least have caused much happiness in the heart of the determined thrower.

Getting to know a new computer program is not at all unlike having to relearn the alphabet, only the relearning would be in an different language, not one we already know. When babies learn to talk it is after having made sounds for quite a long time and they are aware of some of the sound interactions.

Except for not knowing which computer tool does what and not knowing how to get rid of an error or mistake and not knowing which key to strike, it has been an education. At this time we do know that this issue of The News is a different innovation than we had imagined. Please enjoy and ignore the typos.

Through the years there have been changes in publishing the weekly newspaper but the changes this week are the most drastic. Instead of shooting the pages, actually shooting is a misnomer because there were no firearms used and the shooting was with a camera. This week the large camera and dark room are idle. It seems odd to not have the paste up tables being used and no hum of the wax machine.

However, the end result is supposed to be the same. The Lincoln County News will be printed on newsprint with topics of interest about communities and different areas in and around Lincoln County.

Enjoy this premiere edition of a new way to compile your favorite weekly newspaper and watch as pleasant changes are being made each week.

Regardless of how it is put together, The Lincoln County News is now electronic. Great day!

SANTA FE -- Tough economic conditions sometimes require imaginative, even desperate, solutions. Budget crunches have hit our neighboring southwestern states with a vengeance. Arizona, California and Nevada have suffered budget deficits of 20 to 25 percent.

New Mexico has come off relatively easily with a four percent deficit. It also has more than a 10 percent cash surplus, which could be used to erase that deficit. But lawmakers like to keep a comfortable reserve just in case even worse times are to come.

So New Mexico legislators are talking about furloughs and layoffs of state employees rather than use of cash balances or repealing Gov. Bill Richardson's tax cuts for the wealthy or requiring out of state corporations to pay taxes equal to instate businesses.

They call those "painful" remedies. Any kind of tax increase is painful, even if it is on rich people or rich corporations. Those same rich people and corporations also tend to make big donations to political campaigns.

And we wouldn't want to create an unfavorable business climate for big corporations. Wal-Mart might move out. A host of small local businesses would cheer that.

Our neighbors to the west already have tried the less painful options and are having to get more creative. California has okayed some offshore drilling and may have to do some more, even off Santa Barbara.

Gov. Schwarzenegger wanted to drill there but the Democrat-run Legislature wouldn't approve, so the governor made cuts in education and children's services in retaliation. He also began issuing IOUs.

For awhile California was considering legalizing marijuana, which would have brought in big tax money but junked that while still considering auctioning off state owned items signed by the celebrity governor.

If you think that's desperate, in Arizona, they are considering selling their state capitol buildings and renting them back. Arizona's complex of state capitol buildings aren't impressive. They look just like office buildings, except the old capitol, which is now a museum.

New Mexico would have to get awfully desperate to sell its distinctive capitol, which is full of unique New Mexico art. The art may be worth more than the building.

In Arizona's capitol, we saw prints of paintings by New Mexico artists, including two in the governor's office. And that wasn't during New Mexico-raised Janet Napolitano's administration. The governor at the time was Republican Fife Symington.

Southwestern states aren't the only ones getting hit hard by this bad economy. Several southeastern states have not yet begun issuing refunds due on individual income tax returns. That is money that would go right back into the economy as a stimulus.

Although New Mexico state government revenues aren't in as bad shape as most other states, portions of our state are not as well off economically as others.

Southeastern New Mexico' economy has suffered ever since the end-of the oil boom. And the outlook isn't good with many wells in secondary and tertiary recovery.

So, around 25 years ago, the Southeast began looking at the nuclear industry as a financial savior. That isn't something most of our state would accept but it is one of those imaginary and desperate solutions.

First came the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, near Carlsbad. It has turned out to be an economic boon, while controlling for hazards. Now the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has granted its first license in 30 years for a major commercial nuclear facility near Eunice.

August 18, 2009	1:00 p.m.	Capitan Sr. Center	115 Tiger Drive, Capitan, NM

The purpose of this public hearing will be to report on past CDBG program activities and to receive public input on Community development needs and suggestions for future CDBG projects.

The Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program was established under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, in order to assist communities in providing essential community facilities, providing decent housing for residents, promoting economic development and maintaining a suitable living environment. The State of New Mexico estimates the 2010 appropriation of $14,500,000 to be distributed statewide on a competitive basis.

State and national objectives of the CDBG Program require that assistance be made available for activities that address at least one of the following:

- 1) An activity identified as principally benefiting persons of low and moderate income;
- 2) Aid in the prevention and elimination of slums and blight;
- 3) Meet other community development needs of recent origin having a particular urgency because existing conditions pose a serious and immediate threat to the health and welfare of the community where other financial resources are not available to meet such needs.

Applications are limited to a maximum of $500,000, except for planning applications which have a limit of $50,000.

Eligible activities and categories will be described. All interested parties are invited to attend, to submit project ideas, to provide supporting data and testimony, and other pertinent information.

SACRAMENTO MOUNTAINS DEFOLIATION PROJECT DECISION AFFIRMED

Alamogordo, NM (August 5, 2009) - A detailed review of the record by a U.S. Forest Service Appeal Review Team at the Southwest Regional office in Albuquerque, has affirmed the decision for the Sacramento Mountains Defoliation Project made by Lincoln National Forest Supervisor, Jacqueline Buchanan, on April 27, 2009.

In June 4, 2009, a 23-page appeal of this project decision was filed on behalf of WildEarth Guardians and Center for Biological Diversity. In rejecting the appeal the Reviewing Officer determined that:

a) the actions to be taken and purpose and need are clearly described; b) the selected alternative should accomplish the purpose and need of the project; c) the proposal and decision are consistent with direction in the Forest Plan, agency policy, direction and supporting information; and, d) scoping and the public involvement process was appropriate and there was ample opportunity for public participation. This decision constitutes the final administrative determination of the Department of Agriculture [36 CFR §215.18(c)].

The project decision provides for salvage harvest of dead trees on about 5,200 acres from the recent Nepytia janetiae defoliating insect outbreak. The decision also includes the removal of hazard trees along approximately eight miles of roads, trails and utility lines; and decommissioning of about four miles of closed system roads. The project is located near the Village of Cloudcroft, and south of Cloudcroft in the vicinity of the Sacramento Lookout, all within Otero County, New Mexico.

Project implementation will begin immediately with the offering of a series of salvage timber sales within the area covered by the decision.

Forest Supervisor Jacqueline Buchanan stated, "This beneficial decision will decrease fuel loading, provide for public safety and salvage merchantable dead timber brought about by the insect caused tree mortality. The buildup of fuels is of particular concern in proximity to the Village of Cloudcroft, private lands, and 14 National Forest campgrounds and recreation sites. The project will be implemented over a five-year time period with no adverse impacts and will provide wood products."

Additional information on this project and decision is located on the Lincoln National Forest website at: www.fs.fed.us/r3/lincoln/projects/index.

The Long and Short of it is . . .

Fences -- Barbed Wire Fences!

Some time ago I had a little to say about real fences, their appearances in the timber country, the amount of work involved in their construction, and that barbed wire followed immediately in their wakes over the prairie sections. But no detailed mention was then made of the strife and trouble that transpired among the plainsmen when the wire was introduced.

This is a little about the subject, even though volumes would be required to cover it thoroughly -- and then certain portions would be omitted, as the turbulence of the era was of such a scope as to be most difficult to annotate.

Some genius who more than likely during the time was called a damn smart-aleck, if not names of stronger nature -- around St. Louis, shortly after the civil war, invented barbed wire. I believe this date is at least approximate. Everybody knows something about the commodity, because its introduction created such a turmoil that it has never been forgotten! Its mention then, almost the same as today in many ways, was a first-cousin to fighting terms. Everybody has had their problems, and it is to be remembered that every fence has had problems, too!

When the timber country with its virgin forests petered out, and the back-breaking process of splitting rails faded out of the picture, barbed wire appeared as a method of enclosing homesteads and certain parcels of land which individuals laid claim to as their property. It was a method much faster for enclosing a piece of land than that of the rail fence, and served many purposes. Operators on the free range had no use whatsoever for a fence, and, with its appearance, range wars rapidly dominated the plains country.

Many of the western pioneers had left the eastern sections because fences were crowding them and they felt 'hemmed in.' And they sought space. Those old plainsmen who sought 'elbow room' can be no better described than one of their remarks that has been handed down from the times. He had pulled his small caravan onto the vast-plains, and halted. No sign of man was to be seen.

With rifle resting in the folded crooks of his arms, with the eye of an eagle, and with portrayal of powerful fight and determination, he declared, 'Yep, this is what I've been huntin.' This is my land, as far as an eye can see!' -- And we are to be reminded that such a statement covered a large scope; for as he traveled, he could still see farther!

Those frontiersmen had already been antagonized by the rail fences into the country which they left, and they did not yield readily to the barbed wire fences -- you can 'bet your bottom dollar' on that!

However, despite the first howls about the fencing operation, it was not stopped. The issue at once, as a flashing meteor, flared up, hotter than hell. And a wagon -- load of barded wire and a fencing operation spelled nothing short of bloodspill and endless property damage.

With its first appearance, the resulting problems became so hot that politicians backed away from it, and refused to have anything to do with the matter. Therefore, each homesteader, each land-owner, each rancher, and each free-range operator fought his own battle, in his own way, with blood in his eye, with sharp fangs, and hot -- barreled six-shooters!

Texas felt the blunt of the bloody issue first. Other states soon followed. By 1883, practically every county in the prairie country of the Lone Star State was bogged down, to their necks, much of it blood, in more of the fencing problem. Most cattlemen either owner or leased the land they operated, and they enclosed it with barbed wire -- many times including lands of the public domain, as convenience of the fencing task justified, usually following the path of least resistance, and certainly never closing out any acreage which was possible to incorporate into their own holdings. And there's a fence law on that too -- after the fence of an individual has enclosed a certain acreage for a certain time, it becomes, legally, his property, regardless of the former boundary lines.

Those first fence enclosures included the choice water holes of the country, public roads, and everything that was convenient to fence in! -- and enhance the value of the property.

Free-rangers had no use for such operations. It harassed them and obstructed open range grazing. And they lost no time in commencing to cut and slash the endless strands of barded wire which was "hooking" them from free grass, and freedom of operations.

Drought conditions also poured a hell-hot fire onto the issue, when water became scarce and the choice water holes were all fenced in. Very shortly blood marked the fence lines, as bands of fencewreckers cut and destroyed the fences by night, as the land-claimers constructed during the day.

The armed bands who roamed the plains at night and destroyed the fences soon acquired such names as Owls, Javelinas, or Blue Devils -- besides those names which we do not choose the print. The bands almost over night became a symbol of fence-destruction. They could, and did, in a short time, destroy more fence than an army of hardworking men could erect in weeks. And it does not require a dreamer to visualize the temp that existed!

By the fall of 1883, damage from wrecking fences in Texas was estimated at $20 million. Brown County alone claimed $1 million of that sum. The blood wasn't measure; neither were the sore knuckles nor the rounds of ammunition accounted for. The strife discouraged farming and scared out of the country may prospective homesteaders. Tax valuations declined $30 million, and the issue was so hot state politicians would have nothing to do with it. Every homesteader, every rancher, every free-ranger, and every individual connected in any way whatsoever with barbed wire had blood in his eye, and an individual weapon of some sort with which to deal with the situation.

The Texas Governor John Ireland called a special session of the Legislative Branch for January of 1884, to enact some sort of measure to cope with the turmoil and bloodspill of the prairies. Lawheads raked their brains, and went to work. Crude and bungling laws were passed to cope with the tedious situation. And ever since that called session an endless string of enactments have found the way into the statutes. Texas Rangers were dispatched into the field to enforce the legislative decisions. Their battle was most difficult, and many times taxed the ingenuity of that famous band of law-enforcing individuals.

Suppression of fencing feuds was a die-hard proposition for all concerned, and required more than a decade to simmer it down. Fence destruction slowly dwindled away, but never completely eradicated, as one might think. And even today fencing problems continue to exist, and rarely does a month pass without the notation of some jamor fence complexity. However, today, they are handled in milder manners!

Too, it will be noted, the fencing problem continues to be a headache to the legislative branches, and laws are piled high onto the already huge stack, making research difficult.

Many people contend that a law still exists in Texas which prohibits the possession of pliers, or any other fence cutting tool, while traveling about over the country, which brands it as an unlawful act. But the long catalogue of enactments concerning fences almost defies the researcher who would verify such an enactment, even though they are digging away on it. They declare they'll scrape the bottom of the barrel, or else find it! While they search, other laws are being dumped into the bin.

Only a short time ago, lawheads were forced to pass new fence laws in Texas -- laws to prevent the enclosure of public seashores, and don't become excited when you pick up the newspaper today, or tomorrow, and read of fencing troubles; because you will not have read any NEWS. It happens all the time!

THE LONE AND SHORT OF IT IS . . . The fencing operation will always be a problem, today as in the past. The term itself has a heritage -- TROUBLE!

I've had my neck stuck out in fencing problems, in grazing country, as has every other man who needs fences. Once I enclosed a little piece of land, with a fence that would "turn" or "hold" my stock. The adjoining property-owner refused to "chip-in" his share of the cost of fence construction, declaring he needed no fence. And told me, "If you want one, go ahead and build it!"

I did, and on the property line. Later, at the country store, he blazonly boasted how he'd outfoxed Old Carson. And added that if he had a few more neighbors, like as such, he'd have his land fenced without having to dig into his purse. Of course the word reached me. Did my blood ever boil! I'll know next time, because there's a law that governs such a condition, in some states, provided you can dig it from the gigantic pile!

Fencing problems were a common topic as I grew up. Every man that ever enclosed a piece of land, knows the trouble that can arise from them. Even the old zig-zag course of the rail fence and the fence-rows around the corn fields created nightmares, back in my youth. Those zig-zag courses were always built on the most fertile soil of the farm, and weeds grew taller and more dense there than anywhere else in the world. When frost fell, they died, and a fire-hazard existed.

Therefore, annually, war was declared on the weeds and bushes in that zig-zag course and on that fence-row. A Mosko-bee-hoe crusade was enacted, and the rubble was all cleaned out to prevent a possible fire destroying the old rail fence which had so laboriously been constructed many years before -- and clear the bushes from the fence-row to prevent spreading and eventually "taking" the farm.

And, too, very likely some genius will fence SPACE -- whether it be of barbed wire, or with some other material yet unknown to man, we do not know. But we are inclined to believe the task will be no greater than the fencing of the Southwest! And we know it took blood and guts to perform that task!
