LOOT!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Fall of Captain Kidd
CAPT. WILLIAM KIDD, perhaps the most famous pirate of all time, was hanged at Wapping, England on May 23, 1701. Popular feeling, evidently sensing what was established as historical fact 200 years later—that an innocent man went to his death at Execution dock that day—immediately made a martyr of him and he became the hero of a popular ballad which, like so many other ballads, grew and grew as each singer added his contribution to it. There are known to be at least 24 stanzas to the ballad, and possibly more. It is a typical example of balladry and perhaps the most famous of all ballads in which a pirate is the hero. Curiously enough William Kidd was always called Robert Kidd by the populace, and here is a part of the ballad as it was then sung:

My name was Robert Kidd, when I sailed,
My name was Robert Kidd, when I sailed,
My name was Robert Kidd, when I sailed,
God's laws I did forbid, and so wickedly I did, when I sailed.
My parents taught me well, when I sailed,
My parents taught me well, when I sailed,
My parents taught me well, when I sailed,
To shun the gates of hell, but against them I rebelled, when I sailed.
I'd a Bible in my hand, when I sailed,
I'd a Bible in my hand, when I sailed,
I'd a Bible in my hand, when I sailed,
By my father's great command, and sunk it in the sand, when I sailed.
I spied the ships of Spain, as I sailed,
I spied the ships of Spain, as I sailed,
I spied the ships of Spain, as I sailed,
I fired on them amain, 'til most of them was slain, as I sailed.
I'd ninety bars of gold, as I sailed, as I sailed,
I'd ninety bars of gold, as I sailed, as I sailed,
I'd ninety bars of gold, as I sailed, as I sailed,
And dollars manifold, with riches uncontrolled, as I sailed,
To Execution dock I must go, I must go,
To Execution dock I must go, I must go,
To Execution dock I must go, I must go,
Will many thousands flock, but I must bear the shock, and must die.
Come all ye young and old, see me die, see me die,
Come all ye young and old, see me die, see me die,
Come all ye young and old, see me die, see me die,
You're welcome to my gold, for by it I've lost my soul, and must die.
Take warning now by me, for I must die, for I must die,
Take warning now by me, for I must die, for I must die,
Take warning now by me, for I must die, for I must die,
Least you come to hell with me, for I die.

FORT STANTON NEWS

(Fort Stanton Correspondent)

Much to the surprise and delight of many at the Fort, Miss Emma Kincannon arrived on Tuesday with the intention of remaining as nurse. After having spent two and a half years here and being transferred elsewhere, this desire to return is another evidence of the attractiveness of New Mexico climate and especially at the Fort, as well as of the pleasant associations found here. Mrs. L. Riason, also, arrived on the train ahead of Miss Kincannon with a view to becoming one of the nursing force. On Friday, Mrs. Ramsing joined her husband and is at the Buena Vista at Capitan.

In honor of Mrs. Laine, who has been at Capitan for four and a half months, a reception and card party were given by Mesdames William Titsworth and William Coombs on Monday evening. Among those present were Mesdames Geo. Titsworth, Gerred, Beard, Howard, Boone, Gardenhire and White, Miss Belzer and Messrs. Howard, Coombs and Laine. They had a most delightful evening and gave to Mrs. Laine every wish for a successful trip to Chicago where she is going for an operation on her ear.

At Hondo, on Saturday night, many from the Fort enjoyed the delightful play given by the High School under the auspices of the principal, Mrs. Wilbur Coe, State Senator. The Fort Orchestra composed of Mrs. Coe, Pianist; A. D. McNeff, Violin; A. F. Kersey, Saxophone; C. H. Berggren, Sousaphone; A. M. Turner, Banjo; A. C. Hendren, Banjo-Ukelele; Dr. Rassmussen, Drums, and Professor Clowers, Soloist, entertained, both at the play and for the dance that followed.

Mrs. J. B. Corcoran, of El Paso is visiting her aunt, Mrs. W. W. Hale at the Fort. Mrs. Pat Dixon was called away to Paloma Springs to the bedside of her father on Tuesday. Mrs. Kincheloe is soon expected to return from her very sad trip to the deathbed of her father in Virginia. Everyone extends to Mr. and Mrs. Kincheloe their most heartfelt sympathy.

J. B. Gilland is visiting his son, C. E. Gilland of Ruidoso Junction. Mr. Gilland has just returned from a pleasant trip to California. He is in the hotel business at Plainview, Texas, and is one of the oldest residents of that place.

Mr. Johnston and family of Mississippi are spending a month on the Ruidoso and are located in the Wingfield cabin.

C. E. Gilland, John Hammer and the writer were business visitors to the Pass city on Monday.

Mrs. Fairbrach of Roswell was a Sunday visitor.

A pleasant surprise was tendered Mrs. T. E. Kelley Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. R. W. Dozier, in the form of a handkerchief shower, when over thirty of her friends showered her with dainty handkerchiefs as tributes of the love and esteem in which the lady is held by her many ardent admirers. Refreshments were served at the close of the affair.

LOCAL TALENT DISPLAYS MERIT

Monday night at the Crystal Theatre, the concert which has been given special mention in these columns for the past two weeks, was given by the Athletic Association, and the program as printed in our issue of March 5, carried out to remarkable success.

From the rising of the curtain until the last number, which was a trombone solo by Marshall Beck with his Holton Revelation Trombone, "Lassus Trombone," with J. C. Burkett as director, did exceptionally well, and was a showing of efficient, painstaking leadership, and second, of the local talent which responded to the efforts of a careful instructor.

Each number received its share of deserving applause from the big audience which filled the Crystal Theatre to overflowing, and encores were called for, but on account of the length of the program and the great importance of each number in the proper amount of time, the performers bowed their courtesies to repeated calls for encores.

The Girls' Glee Club, J. C. Burkett, director, comes in for its share of the praise, as they certainly lived up to, and beyond the expectations of their appreciative audience. As a fitting addition to the musical numbers on the program, the Playlet was a laughable farce and the characters were well taken.

We wish it were possible to mention each individual connected with the program, as in so doing, we could but faintly give credit where credit belongs, but as space forbids such mention, we can only give credit in a collective manner, and say that Carrizozo should be proud of its local talent and Mr. Burkett, who shared his time in the interest of the same.

Again: the affair as a whole, was a demonstration of the fact that our community has the proper talent, and all that is needed is development, for without that exceptional virtue, which our younger set respond to in such a marked degree, the best leadership possible, would avail nothing.

We are not only proud of our musical talent, but of our Girls' Basketball Team (the best in the state), and commend Miss Igo, the Coach, and also the team as a whole, on the victories won throughout the season. The team was brought to the stage and mention made by Miss Igo of each member, amid roaring applause from the audience.

EATING HOUSE NOTES

IN MEMORIUM

Last Sunday afternoon, one of the best known and best loved railroad engineers in this part of the country, John A. Ulrey, died at a local hospital in the city of El Paso. His two brothers, Dan, of Eldon, Mo., Ray, of Sanford, Florida, and sister, Mrs. J. M. Bamtee of Grand Junction, Colo., were at his bedside when he passed on.

Mr. Ulrey began his career in the railroad service with the E. P. & S. W. in the year of 1903, as a fireman, after which he ascended to the position of engineer in which capacity he worked for the above-named road, and afterwards was in the employ of the S. P. At the time of his demise, he had been railroading for twenty-three years. He was a member of Carrizozo Lodge No. 41, A. F. & A. M., of this place, a member of the Royal Arch Masons No. 11 of Alamogordo, El Paso Consistory No. 3 of El Paso, Graluis Commandery No. 13 Knight Templars of Tucumcari, and of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The body was shipped to Grand Junction, Colo., where the same was interred alongside that of his mother, which was according to his wishes. The remains were accompanied by representatives of the Masonic bodies mentioned above and of the Brotherhood of Engineers.

As a last tribute to his memory, let it be said, that John A. Ulrey was the soul of honor, faithful to a trust, a friend whom the utmost confidence could be placed in sacred security; in other words, "a man, every inch of him." His passing will be mourned by his relatives, friends and the company in whose employ he had been for so many years, and his surviving relatives have the sympathy of our community.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Rejection of Nickel Plate Merger Is Factor in Collapse of Stock Market.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE REJECTION of the Nickel Plate merger of the Nickel Plate, Chesapeake & Ohio, Hocking Valley, Pere Marquette and Erie railroads, as proposed by the Van Sweringen brothers of Cleveland, was disapproved last week by the interstate commerce commission, and those so-called wizards of the railway world will have to devise a new plan if they wish to try again to bring about the giant combination. Their work on the rejected scheme is said to have cost them between two and three million dollars. If it had gone through, according to those who opposed it, the brothers would have pocketed a profit of about $100,000,000.

The commission based its disapproval of the merger on a disapproval of the financial structure of the proposed new Nickel Plate company, holding that the terms and conditions of the proposed acquisition of control by the new company of the other companies were unjust and unreasonable. The commission held that the merger would be in the public interest from the standpoint of providing efficient transportation, leaving the inference that it would have been approved had the financial provisions been above criticism.

"We cannot escape the conclusion that the plan was arranged with the intention of keeping control in the hands of its proponents, even though their interest is a minority one in fact," the commission said. "Such an arrangement is not in accord with sound railroad practice. The Nickel Plate is the only railroad of importance in the country in which preferred stockholders do not have the right to vote, and now it is proposed to extend this feature to over $155,000,000 of new stock of a company comparable with the New York Central, Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio."

IN FINANCIAL circles the immediate result of the Nickel Plate ruling was the biggest day's trading in the history of Wall street, with a perpendicular decline in prices that involved practically all stocks and in one extreme case reached 50 points. The stock market had been in a state of comparative collapse for several days, anyhow, and this was a staggering blow to the bulls. Trading eclipsed every former record, which had stood for years. The total for the day was 3,864,000 shares. The size of the market may be judged in comparison with the Northern Pacific panic market on May 9, 1901. On that day 3,072,205 shares were traded in.

Stocks had been technically weakened in seven previous days of drastic decline; the confidence of shareholders in the speculative shares had been shaken by loss of from five to fifty points of more in their holdings. Many margin traders had reached the edge of their tether.

The excesses of the wild upward speculation in many shares which had continued over a long series of months since the election of President Coolidge were being corrected and brought down to a wholesome level by the market itself. Stocks were engaged in seeking their true market value, based on earnings rather than on merger prospects, or stock dividends, which this year and last have fanned the speculative flames.

The collapse of the stock market, which was accompanied by severe reactions in the grain and other speculative commodity markets, was described by experts as mainly a speculative orgy of powerful groups and professional operators. The general public was not caught to any great extent.

BY CLOSE votes the house military affairs committee junked all the pending army air service legislation, this including the bills for a separate air corps, for a unified air service, for the creation of a department of national defense and for the adoption of the recommendations of the Morrow board. The committee then proceeded to write its own bill, using as a basis the $150,000,000 five-year program submitted by Secretary of War Davis.

The new War department proposals contemplate appropriations of $30,000,000 a year more than now is available for the air service during the five-year period. Of this $7,500,000 would be spent each year in the purchase or construction of new planes. At the end of the five years, according to the Davis program, the air service would have 2,200 modern planes, 1,650 regular army officers, 500 reserve officers on active duty, 15,000 enlisted men, and 500 flying cadets.

According to Representative Morin of Pennsylvania, the measure when finally reported by the committee will embrace most of the major recommendations of the Morrow board. Secretary Davis said his program had been concurred in by the chief of staff and the chief of the air service.

FARM organization leaders of the middle western states, together with a number of governors from that region, gathered in Washington last week for a conference and let the congressmen know plainly that they wanted speedy action on legislation for the controlling of farm export surpluses so as to increase domestic market prices. In their statements were hints of a political revolt in the West unless their demands were heeded. A committee from the conference called on President Coolidge and on Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, and its spokesmen afterward said that the prospects for an agreement between farmers, legislators and the administration on the mechanics of necessary legislation were exceedingly bright.

President Coolidge expressed his sympathy with the aim to stabilize agricultural conditions and let it be known he would favor any legislation unanimously agreed on by the Department of Agriculture, the farm organizations and the various agricultural committees in congress.

THE Watson-Parker bill, abolishing the railroad labor board and providing for the settlement of rail labor disputes by direct conference between railroads and their employees and on mediation and voluntary arbitration, was passed by the house by a vote of 381 to 13. The measure has been favorably reported to the senate and its early enactment into law is expected. The board has before it cases involving approximately $30,000,000 in wage increase demands and doesn't know what to do with them, as the Watson-Parker bill makes no provision for disposition of the pending disputes.

Executives representing about eighty western railroads met in Chicago and selected a committee of twelve to conduct the wage conferences with conductors and trainmen. These workers ask a raise of 7 per cent and the managers have gone on record as opposed to this boost.

SECRETARY OF STATE KELLOGG sent a new note to the Mexican government in reply to its latest communication concerning the new land and oil laws, and while not revealing its contents, he told the senate committee on foreign relations that he hoped it would end the controversy. Presumably the administration has toned down its demands a little. Some of the senators, however, were not satisfied and Mr. King of Utah was preparing a speech on the subject.

The Mexican government has notified all foreign Protestant ministers in that country that they are in the same category with the Catholic priests and must get out. The first of the expelled Catholic clergy to reach the United States arrived in New York on a steamer. In the party were ten priests, one nun, and four Marxist brothers. They were penniless, stating they were not given time to take even their belongings. The states of Vera Cruz and Tamaulipas have issued laws limiting the number of priests. Vera Cruz allows one priest in communities of 10,000, two in communities of 30,000, four in communities of 60,000, and a limit of six in larger communities. Tamaulipas provides only one priest for each community, with the exception of five.

AT THIS writing the prospect is that the session of the League of Nations council in Geneva will be exceedingly lively and that the net result will be that Germany, alone will be given a permanent seat in the council. The probable compromise plan is for the holding of a second session at which it will be proposed that Poland be given a non-permanent seat. In this way Germany, through Doctor Stresemann, would be enabled to participate officially in the council's action. It is likely that a special committee will be named to study the question of a re-organization of the council.

According to a London correspondent, Premier Mussolini, with the aid of Spain and the Vatican, has formed a Latin-South American bloc in the league by which he hopes to control it. The first demands of this bloc will be for permanent seats in the council for Spain and Brazil and another temporary seat for another member of the group. The story says that the bloc is prepared, if it does not get its way, to leave the league and turn a new association of the Latin states of Europe and America.

With only 71 votes in opposition, the French chamber of deputies ratified the Locarno treaties, giving Premier Briand a splendid endorsement. The approval of the senate is assured. The Polish diet also ratified the pact.

Our State department last week officially notified the secretariat of the League of Nations and 43 governments that the senate had voted for adherence to the World court. Copies of the reservations were enclosed in the letters. Department officials said they expected these reservations would be accepted, although jurists of several European countries had favored their rejection.

FIERCE fighting for the control of Peking marks the progress of China's civil war between the national armies, directed by Marshal Feng Yuhsiang, and that general's opponents, who include Marshal Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria and Marshal Wu Peifu, who heads a Hupeh army. The names and localities do not mean much to the average American reader, but the result of the conflict probably will be that the government will fall into new hands.

IN MOROCCO the French and Spanish armies are preparing for a great offensive by which they hope finally to crush the Rifians. But Abd-el-Krim is alert and already has started the fighting himself, attacking the French and certain tribes that are unfriendly to him. Both sides are trying for strategic positions from which to negotiate peace.

POLITICS in Chicago has reached a stage where it not only awakes the rest of the country but in a way becomes of national interest. Strange combinations of Republican factions are fighting bitterly and one result has been a request that congress investigate crime conditions in the Illinois metropolises. Naturally, the Democrats are happy and hopeful. George E. Brennan, the astute Democratic national committeeman from Illinois, has announced his candidacy for the senate seat held by Mr. McKinley of Champan, and for which Frank Smith is a Republican contender against the incumbent in the primaries. Mr. Brennan says his platform has only two planks—modification of the Volstead act to permit light wines and beer, and home rule for Chicago. The coming election, he says, will be a referendum in Illinois on Volsteadism.

REPRESENTATIVE HILL of Maryland was re-elected chairman of the unofficial committee of congress on modification of the Volstead act and was instructed to appoint a committee of five, called a "companion board," to outline a program for the drys. This board will begin hearings on March 31, preliminary to drafting a bill for revision of the prohibition law. All congressmen and private citizens will be given opportunity to express their views on prohibition and its success or failure.

THEODORE and Kermit Roosevelt have returned from their adventurous trip to central and southern Asia, bringing back many fine specimens of the animals which they want to get. Theodore refused to talk politics when he landed in New York, but there were indications that he would again be a candidate for some office, perhaps the governorship of the Empire state.

Tweed Suits Are Shown for Spring

Navy Blue, Beige and Pale Shades of Rose and Pink Are Favored.

By all the fiery that flutters in the Southern breezes, gray and green are leading colors, especially for daytime wear. More shades of green than nature ever essayed to use in her decorative schemes are seen and in all popular fabrics. But that's not saying that other colors are out of the picture, notes a fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star, for every observer of fashion knows that green combines delightfully with nearly every other color under the sun. Fashion will not overlook this opportunity to use other colors. The same is true of gray. The pinky beige lingers out of popularity and service to womankind rather than for any new note it serves in the mode.

Gray is one color that requires an ensemble of complete harmony. It brings us back to an increasing vogue for gray hosiery, something lighter than the gunmetal shade and partaking of fleshy tones so much a part of the nude-shade hosiery. Paris has not given up beige and flesh-colored hosiery by any means, but it must be conceded that many another shade may be worn and still be in good taste; even black hosiery has its sponsors by women who are regarded sartorially correct on every occasion.

Importance in colors is given to chartreuse, which, by the way, is a much-abused word this season, as all shades of yellowish green now come under that name. Pale blue, lavender, pink and delicate yellows are very popular both in tulle for evening and in wool for sports. Jersey, knitted fabrics and tweed all come in these delicate colors.

The new tweeds are as varied as the silks and crepes, and it goes without saying quite as lovely in their way. Whether you choose the safest of all shades, navy blue, or r flatterer beige or the still more flattering pale shades of rose or pink, rest assured that fashion is with you.

The long tunic frocks for daytime wear are leaders in their particular fields of dress.

It was O'Rossen who made famous the boyish suit of a few seasons past, one that never had quite faded from the picture since that time.

Its tremendous popularity may be repeated again if the O'Rossen models meet with the same approval of seasons ago.

Black Crepe de Chine, Navy, Tan, Printed Crepe

Black crepe de chine and navy and tan printed crepe are pleasingly combined in a pretty frock for springtime. The tie and cuffs of the printed silk are effective touches.

Crepe de Chine, Voile, Chiffon for Lingerie

Crepe de chine, triple voile and chiffon are all much in favor for lingerie. Real lace dyed in deep ochre shades trims the classical flesh-pink underwear, while when more original colors are chosen, such as almond green, pale blue, mauve or yellow, the lace is often dyed to match the fabric. Black lingerie always enjoys a certain vogue, and in chiffon or georgette amply trimmed with lace it is exquisite this season. Inlet points and incrustations of lace that are turned or vandyked are very popular. Sometimes black lingerie is trimmed with black lace, chantilly or d'Alençon being the favorites, although many women prefer the contrast of light ochre.

The printed chiffon crepe has also spread to lingerie. One of the prettiest sets seen in Paris this season was made of white chiffon scattered with a field flower design in blues, reds and yellows, trimmed with inlet triangles of fine black lace, giving that amusing little flare at the hem of the chemise and knickerbockers that follows the dress line.

Pastel Print Ensemble; Coat Is Edged With Fur

Showing a delightful ensemble of pastel print in modernistic design. The coat is lined with the printed silk of which the dress is made, and it is edged with bands of fur.

High Lights of Modes of Interest to Women

A prominent actress arrived, from Paris wearing a grayish beige wool skirt with a red leather straight-line coat with raglan sleeves. Summer or-line appeared in a narrow collar and in a border down the side of the coat. A lipstick-red felt hat draped in the back, and grayish beige was repeated in her hose and shoes.

Martial and Armand accent the princess lines of a velvet bridal gown, with insets of lame and lace.

Lanvin shows a black lace schu draped across the front in rounded line with flowing ends near the waistline in the back. The hemline is peaked. This is adhered to by every French house.

Broad stripes, too wide even for an awning, are woven into lovely tweed mixtures for coats at Palm Beach. These are worn above a turtle neck sweater outfit; the stripes in the sweater are horizontal.

Shantung is favored for sports wear as being practicable and of novelty interest.

The tailored dress in French openings is developed frequently in fine navy woolens; the severity of line and color is relieved by white collars and cuffs.

There are many soft dresses of crepe de chine presented in the collection, accompanied by coats in costume effect. Delicate shades in hosiery, pale blues, lavender and all shades of pink, are seen in the new hosiery.

White plique is much used for vestees and waistcoats.

Novelty Handkerchiefs in Attractive Designs

The popularity of the novelty handkerchief continues and varied and interesting new designs are being shown in the spring assortments. Linens, of course, are the best medium to consider from a style aspect. From Ireland come the daintiest and sheerest of handkerchiefs. Fine hand-embroidered corners, hand-rolled hems and hemstitching are the outstanding features of the white ones. Printed linens have a touch of colored embroidery, but only a suggestion. Artistic colored designs are seen in the French importations. These have white or solid centers with contrasting colors in the borders. All-over effects are also good, especially when they include the brilliant colors in a border design. Swiss handkerchiefs made of net, voile and crepe de chine are more decorative than useful, as is suggested both in their size and sheerness.

Gloves Are Gay

Accessories to costumes are gay, but none are gayier than the gloves. There are red gloves with a little scallop at the top, and one red and one gray with stitching in the two-tones effect. Green with tan; red with black; blue with tangerine, and gray with tangerine are other color combinations which are proving popular. We are told on every hand that it is to be a season of color, and here are the gloves to prove it. Worn with a dark fur coat, they will lend a note of gaiety to the most somber costume.

Dance Hats

Reports from here and there lend ever more interest to the evening urban for-restraining unruly tresses. It is made on the lines of an aviation cap, and in one instance is described as being of black "hatter's plush," laid in a solid band of plumes which circle the hat, extend down over the ears, and are finished with a pearl and rhinestone pin worn at the front.

All in Black

Brilliant satins that shine like the surface of a lake, soft velvets, hard failles, severe taffetas, soft crepes, all in black, are now to be seen. Black is coming in again, especially for afternoon wear, in consequence of the stylish effects that can be obtained with it.

Game Commission Reports Increase in Revenue

Santa Fe, March 14—Receipts of the New Mexico game department during the first eight weeks of 1926 were two and one-half times as great as the corresponding period in 1925, according to figures given out by the department. For the first eight weeks of 1925 receipts totalled $2,247.10, while the total for the first eight weeks of 1926 was $5,616.81.

The department attributes this increase principally to a greater number of deputies and consequently a larger sale of hunting and fishing licenses. The revenue is derived entirely from the sale of licenses.

The desire of New Mexico sportsmen to have the open season on ducks and geese changed from October 1 - January 15 to October 16 - January 31, has been approved by the U. S. biological survey according to a letter written by A. K. Fisher, acting chief of the bureau, to E. W. Loveridge, secretary of the state game protective association.

Mr. Fisher has taken the matter up with the advisory board of the migratory bird treaty act and will notify the New Mexico association as soon as he learns their view of the matter.

The executive committee of the state G. P. A. at a meeting last month agreed unanimously that the season should be changed. The proposed change would make the season in this state conform with the open season in Arizona and the western portion of Texas.

Women's Missionary Society

The above named society held an interesting meeting March 9, at the home of Mrs. Bennett Dingwall. An original paper, "Our Duty," was read by our president, Mrs. S. W. Wells, which was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Calvin Carl read an interesting scripture lesson.

After the business session, a delicious salad course was served. The society's next meeting will be with Mrs. C. E. Freeman at her ranch home on the afternoon of March 23. Mrs. Freeman issues a cordial invitation to each member to be present.

The ladies realized over $15.00 at the baked sale last Saturday and wish to thank those who patronized the same.

The task of Christianizing the life of the world is not to be left to a few great-hearted missionaries; it is a community matter to be worked out by individuals in which, all must take part and unless all participate, it can never be done. The question for each one to decide, is, in his relationship and contact with world, is he a Christian? The contact of a Christian with the world's work must be a missionary contact; must help to bring it into harmony with the purpose of Jesus; then, bit by bit, here a little and there a little, the transformation will be accomplished which will make world of work, one of the expressions of God' upon the earth. Corresponding Secretary.

Farm Wife Calls It the Finest Thing on the Farm.

Economic problems concerning the extension of electric power lines to farms do not, as yet, disturb those who have installed independent light and power plants. Many thousands of these plants are at work on farms that are too far removed from transmission lines to hope for service of the latter sort within a period of years. Of the 400,000 farms in the United States on which electricity is used in one way or another, fully half are supplied by self-contained farm light and power sets. That they are serving the purpose successfully in this period of the beginnings of farm electrification is indicated by the story of one farm family using such a set. This family lives in Stark County, North Dakota, and uses its electrical plant chiefly for lighting. What it means to them is told by the woman of the farm: "We have in our house hot-water heat, hard and soft water piped into the kitchen and into the basement, and an electric light plant, which we think is the finest thing on the farm. When we are out evenings, upon returning we need only to turn a button to give us light outdoors, by which the children and I can find our way into the house without any trouble. Then it is so easy to turn on the light in any room needed while husband takes the car to the shed, where he also has the light to see his way."

CHAPTER XIV

On the night of Little Jacques' return to Portage lake the four men sat by the fire planning their future movements. It had been a week since the bear had howled or visited the traplines in the district, for David had arranged with the uplake hunters to relay the news of his appearance immediately.

"I'd give ten years of my life if that old bird would sing up there on that ridge this evening," said Steele.

"I got plenty shell ean de bag," added David. "I get fire waitin' to shoot dat little gun ov mine."

"You'll get your chance before we're done, don't worry. How would you like to draw a head on your friend Lafamme this evening?"

The Ojibway shook his head. "W'en I tak' Lafamme's trail I feex heem wild de han'. I use no gun on heem. Eef I got hol' dat Black Baptiste, too, I break sometin' more dan hees fing—" "Leesten!" interrupted Michel.

Out over the silent forest drifted a faint call like the voice of some furred night hunter. The four figures at the fire stiffened. Again the call, louder now, rose on the biting air.

"Where is it?" asked Steele, in doubt of the direction.

"On de beag ridge," replied Michel. "Dat not soun' like heem."

But the men at the fire sat with ears alert, hoping that at last their waiting was over.

Then, when they were convinced that yet another night they were to roll into their blankets, disappointed, baffled, a long wail from the ridge behind the camp brought them to their feet, every nerve alive.

There was a swift stepping into the frozen thongs of snow-shoes and drawing of rifles from skin cases, then taking the bloodhound on the leash, Steele started with his men for the ridge. The huskies, though savage fighters, were left chained to trees, as it might they would cut off on the first name trail and their bedlam of yelping would prevent David and Michel from making the still hunt decided on. Steele with the hound was to circle and pick up the trail of the beast if they missed him.

As they swung through the blue gloom of spruce and fir, the voice shifted from its wailing to the hunting screams of the great cats, then as swiftly dropped to the howling and howling of the mating season, climaxing, as at Walling River and Big Feather lake, in shrieks of agony, in moans of a creature tortured beyond endurance of blood and flesh and nerve.

Three of the men who hunted the voice on the ridge had tolled long and uttered much for this moment, but at their heels moved a short figure whose each was cold with the chill of fear. Little Jacques gripped his rifle grimly and followed, thinking of the wife and children back at Walling River.

At the foot of the ridge Michel and David left Steele to make their stalk from two directions while he worked to the rear with the dog and Little Jacques. Once on a fresh trail the hound would hang until he ran down his quarry. In the soft snow his pace would be slow, so the men on shoes in time would come up with him, and he would need them if the thing turned and waited at bay—how great would be his necessity the torn body at stooping river only too well indicated.

They had traveled for an hour when he found abruptly stopped, sniffed

That's all right with us. We'll help organize one if our neighbors will agree not to borrow our lawnmower more than twice a summer and not to keep their radio loud speaker turned on after midnight more than once a week. Otherwise—let the neighborhood squabbles continue.—St. Louis Times.

Permanent good is sure to come of the present co-operative investigations of the use of electricity on the farm, according to L. T. Taber, master of the National Grange. Mr. Taber, in an interview just published, says:

"A generation ago it would have been supposed that electrical development and the use of electrical energy was of little concern to the farmer; that those in cities and towns were more vitally interested in this mighty and mysterious power than those who till the soil.

"The last decade has seen a transformation along the lines of the use of electricity in farm homes and farm work. The farm electrical plant has been most valuable. The farmer in many sections will be vitally concerned in the development of high tension power lines and proper transmission of electrical current for rural uses.

Over a Cliff in this STEEL BODY without injuring the DRIVER!

A careless driver . . . A triple somersault over a cliff . . . and this is the car—a Dodge Brothers all steel safety car.

A triple somersault over a cliff with the car you see in this picture! Such was the experience of its owner, who came through the fall uninjured.

After an hour of repair work, he drove the car from Montana to Minneapolis—a more sensible driver and much wiser.

All steel construction saved his life, as it has saved many other lives in the past, and will save thousands more in the future . . . . .

Dodge Brothers print this advertisement because they believe motorists are entitled to all steel safety and should insist upon it.

That's why Dodge Brothers introduced all steel construction more than eleven years ago—and recently announced additional all steel safety features.

The streets are swarming with 20,000,000 motor cars—millions more are on the way. Safety is the issue. Armor yourself and your family with steel.

Dodge Brothers Motor Cars—both open and closed—are all steel in the strictest sense of the term. Steel reinforced by steel—framed, braced and buttressed by steel—with all seams solidly and permanently welded together by electricity.

Slim steel pillars replace the old bulky wooden corner posts—permitting unparalleled driving vision—a safety feature of the first importance.

Compare such bodies with the usual wood, or wood-and-metal body, and you will be astonished that every automobile builder has not adopted this advanced safety construction.

Remember, also, that safety is the watchword of Dodge Brothers construction throughout, as witnessed by Dodge Brothers exceptionally large, quick-action brakes, and the exceptional ruggedness and dependability of Dodge Brothers axles, frames, steering parts, and other vital units.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued

"I have nothing to say," she answered, sitting with chin cupped in hand, face averted.

"Oh, do you mean to say that you prefer selling yourself to that storekeeper, Lascelles, to living in luxury in Montreal, Winnipeg—?"

"You may insult me, monsieur. I have no means of defending myself," she broke in, coldly.

Then Lafamme lost all self-control, and stormed:

"Insult you? Oh, yes! But that is the truth, is it not? You do not love this man, do you? To save your father's future you have agreed to marry him—this man you despise! Oh, I know! He's not fit to look at you—your beauty!"

White-faced, the girl sat with eyes on the floor—silent, as if she did not hear.

"True, you think you hate me now, but you would change," he ran on, talking as if to himself. "You may have heard hard things said of me, but I swear to you, if you will marry me, Denise St. Onge, I'll show you what love is. I'll make your father independent—make you, his voice broke with emotion, "yes, make you happy! I've loved you ever since you played for us that night at Albany—years ago."

Lafamme stopped and looked down with a gesture of helplessness at the woman of stone in the chair. Then he heard the low words: "You forget, monsieur, someone who is still at Ogoke."

"I know how that looks to you," he defended, "but that was over, years ago—years. I've given her a home—couldn't turn her out. But she hates me, tried to knife me, wanted to run away with that American, Steele, this October! She put on black the day she heard he had been drowned on the way home."

There was a long silence, then: "Why were you afraid to have him reach Nepigon?"

Lafamme started, then laughed. "Afraid to have him reach Nepigon? That's funny! He got some supplies and went on. What do you mean?"

Then the girl countered: "Your Indians are not faithful to their master, monsieur. We learned that you had Monsieur Steele ambushed after stealing his ammunition, and forced him to go to his death."

"Do you believe that?" demanded Lafamme, puzzled.

"Is it true?"

"No!"

The room was again silent while the man, fumed for a moment, his resource, bit his lips in impotency before the icy calm of this strange girl who so obsessed him. Then he played his trump card.

"So you insist on casting your lot with that rat at Albany? Then it is for me to save you from yourself. I have brought an extra sled. Pack your clothes at once!"

The girl rose to her full height and met his cynical look with resolute eyes, but in her heart was fear.

"You do not dare!" she cried. "They would hunt you from Fort Hope, from Albany, from Nepigon House. In three weeks the police would be at Ogoke. But before the police teams arrived, do you know what they would do to you? They would burn you in your trade-house! You do not dare!"

With open admiration Lafamme watched the play of color and emotion in the face of the frightened girl who confronted him.

"If you'd flush that way when I say I love you," he cried, "I'd give all I have in the world. Why, girl, I'd sell my soul, if you'd look at me, just once, and say you loved me!"

"I despise you!"

The sting of the words cut like the lash of a whip. His self-control, already at the breaking point, crumbled.

"Despise me, do you?" he snarled.

"Dare me to do my worst? Suppose I take you at your word? Mon Dieu! I'm mad enough about you to do anything! Who is it, then, you love?"

He thrust his passionate face close to hers. "You hate me—you don't want Lascelles! It must be that dead American you're mooning about! Well, he's at the bottom of the Jackson, and he forgot you before he had been at Ogoke two hours—forgot even your name when he saw Rose!"

She faced his anger proudly, contempt in her bloodless face, until he mentioned Steele, then slowly her knees gave way and she sank in a chair.

"It was that American!" he stormed. "Pity I didn't finish him myself!"

"Then something on the table caught his eye—held it! His face went dark with his sinister purpose when, with a quick movement, he seized the violin, raised it above his head, and brought it down with a crash on the table, then dropped it to the floor and trampled it under his feet."

With a groan the girl fell to her knees and, gathering the splintered shell of the violin to her breast, moaned over it as a mother over a stricken child.

At last he had reached her.

At the sound there was a guttural exclamation from the floor, and with lifted knife, a wild-eyed Ojibway woman threw herself upon the surprised Lafamme. Leaping back, he caught and parried the thrust with his forearm, then, with his uninjured hand, wrenched the knife from the maddened squaw and hurled her across the room to the floor."

Seizing his coat, he stood for an instant over the kneeling girl, clasping her beloved violin, and touched her hair—then left the room.

The dazed Ojibway crawled to the pitiful figure on the floor, and circled her with her arms.

"De music gone—all gone," she crooned. "Poor m'p'selle!"

While they huddled there on the floor—the girl, the light of whose life had been ruthlessly snuffed out, and the woman of the dark skin, who understood—dog-bells jingled in the clearing as two sleds took up the river trail.

Late that afternoon, St. Onge reached the fork of the Stopping river, but the spruce, already blue with shadow, gave back his call, unanswered. He turned into the mouth of the stream and took the Portage lake trail, searching the silent shores for the camp of Michel, but the headman was not there.

"This is very strange," he said, and cut his wood to camp alone.

Deep in the night, St. Onge waked in his blankets, as his dogs gave back the husky challenge to creatures whose scent the freezing air had carried to their nostrils. But the drowsy man did not know that two sled teams were passing below him on the Walling River trail.

CHAPTER XIV

On the night of Little Jacques' return to Portage lake the four men sat by the fire planning their future movements. It had been a week since the beast had howled or visited the traplines in the district, for David had arranged with the uplake hunters to relay the news of his appearance immediately.

"I'd give ten years of my life if that old bird would sing up there on that ridge this evening," said Steele.

"I got plenty shell and bag," added David. "I get fire waitin' to shoot dat little gun of mine."

"You'll get your chance before we're done, don't worry. How would you like to draw a bead on your friend Lafamme this evening?"

The Ojibway shook his head. "W'en I tak' Lafamme's trail I feel heem wid de han'. I use no gun on heem. Eef I got hol' dat Black Baptiste, too, I break sometin' more dan hees fing—"

"Leesten!" interrupted Michel.

Out over the silent forest drifted a faint call like the voice of some furred night hunter. The four figures at the fire stiffened. Again the call, louder now, rose on the biting air.

"Where is it?" asked Steele, in doubt of the direction.

"On de beeg ridge," replied Michel. "Dat not sou'n like heem."

But the men at the fire sat with ears alert, hoping that at last their waiting was over.

Then, when they were convinced that yet another night they were to roll into their blankets, disappointed, baffled, a long wail from the ridge behind the camp brought them to their feet, every nerve alive.

There was a swift stepping into the frozen thongs of snow-shoes and drawing of rifles from skin cases, then taking the bloodhound on the leash, Steele started with his men for the ridge. The huskies, though savage fighters, were left chained to trees, as at night they would cut off on the first game trail and their bedlam of yelping would prevent David and Michel from making the still hunt decided on. Steele with the hound was to circle and pick up the trail of the beast if they missed him.

As they swung through the blue gloom of spruce and fir, the voice shifted from its wailing to the hunting screams of the great cats, then as swiftly dropped to the yowling and mewling of the mating season, climaxing, as at Walling River and Big Feather lake, in shrieks of agony, in moans of a creature tortured beyond endurance of blood and flesh and nerve.

Three of the men who hunted the voice on the ridge had tolled long and suffered much for this moment, but at their heels moved a short figure whose flesh was cold with the chill of fear. Little Jacques gripped his rifle grimly and followed, thinking of the wife and children back at Walling River.

At the foot of the ridge Michel and David left Steele to make their stalk from two directions while he worked to the year with the dog and Little Jacques. Once on a fresh trail the hound would hang until he ran down his quarry. In the soft snow his pace would be slow, so the men on snows in time would come up with him. And he would need them if the thing turned and waited at bay—how great would be his necessity the torn body at Stopping river only too well indicated.

They had traveled for an hour when the hound, abruptly stopped, ruffled the snow at his feet, and excitedly strained at his leash. To Steele's eyes the flat floor of the snow lay unbroken in the darkness, but the Indian on his knees whispered in terror: "Eet ees beeg trail!"

"Good!" And the hound free, plunged ahead into the murk. Shortly, his deep voice boomed through the forest and the hunt was on.

As they swung through, the blue gloom of spruce was less deep, the great dog left them. Again, as they followed, the voice on the shoulder of the hill defied the night. As it rose in crescendo, a rifle shot sliced it short off. Far above, the hound gave voice. Then silence fell on the forest.

"They've seen him!" said Steele. "He may back track; keep a lookout. Don't shoot too quick or we'll turn him!"

There was no reply. He looked for his companion, but Little Jacques had gone.

Throwing the bolt of his Mannlicher to clear it of frost and ease the action, Steele kept on up the ridge. For minutes now, he had not heard the voice of the hound, when again the resonant bass boomed through the silence above him. The dog had turned. The thing was headed back. Loosing his skinning-knife in its sheath, the man cocked his rifle and waited, kneeling on a shoe, his eyes boring into the blackness.

Near him, and below, was an opening in the timber. Again, the hound bayed—closer now. The beast was taking his back tracks. Then Steele saw it.

Bounding from the cover of the scrub on the edge of the opening, a dark shape stopped, and reared upright, as if listening—when the Mannlicher spat.

The beast leaped back into the black wall of spruce. Again, the rifle flamed into the murk.

Still crouched on a knee, the man listened, rifle rigid. Sights useless, he had fired by instinct. There had been no thud of bullet in flesh. Could he have missed?

Slipping two shells into the magazine, he circled in the timber, lifting his shoes to avoid the click. Beyond now, for the moon was masked, he listened for heavy breathing in the scrub he faced—then the hound plunged past and he knew he had missed.

Following the dog, Steele turned down the ridge, but in an hour was distanced. So he stopped in a cedar swamp, cut wood with his belt ax, and scooping out the snow with his shoe, lighted a fire.

In the cover of the thick cedar the hot fire soon warmed him and with back against a trunk he dozed, only to waken with a start as a hand touched his shoulder. He blinked into the faces of David and Michel.

"Fooled us again!" growled the disheartened Steele.

"At daylight we take de trail and see heem soon. De dog weel tree heem."

Heaping up the fire the three men dozed until daylight, then took the trail of the beast and his pursuer through the snow.

Somewhere ahead, Steele felt that the pursuit was over. Somewhere, miles away, the beast had lived in the black hours and turned at bay to battle in the snow with his relentless foe; or else in terror of the voice of the thunder which he could not shake from his heels, had treed.

Up over ridges and into creek bottoms traveled the anxious men, stopping to listen for the voice of the dog. But the cold silence of sunrise gripped the forest.

At last the tracks led into a heavy stand of young spruce. The men separated, and cautiously made their way through the close growth.

Suddenly the blood of Steele chilled as he heard the voice of Michel. "By gar! Poor ol' Pete!"

Forcing his way through the saplings, he found the Iroquois bending over a blood-smear, shape, stiff in death. The hide of the dog hung in strips from the slashes of terrible claws, while a torn throat marked the death snap of the fangs of the Wigo.

Novel Nest

At the last meeting of the British Ornithologists' club, Mr. A. L. Butler exhibited a "nest" from Trinidad, which was merely a hollow formed by the rolling out of the soft pith of the top of a broken-off sapling. The "breadth" of the top of the stump was only just sufficient to contain the single egg, and the egg on the cup-and-ball principle, fitted the cavity so neatly that it could not be lifted out with the fingers. The bird incubates in a perfectly erect position with its head and neck stretched stiffly upwards, and its tail pressed to the side of the stump, of which its upright figure seems to form a part. The species have adopted the habit of sitting bolt upright on similar stumps, whether incubating or not.

The Association of American Bank Women, organized only three years ago, has members in 130 cities.

THE LLAMA

"I had a cousin once," said Mr. Llama.

"That's nothing," interrupted the Alpaca. "I suppose all of us have had cousins."

"In fact I don't believe there is a creature in existence who hasn't had a cousin, or an uncle, or a mother, or a father, or some sort of relative."

"In fact creatures have a good many relatives, I think."

"I was going to tell you about a special cousin," said Mr. Llama.

"Did he invent something wonderful, or discover a new country?" asked the Alpaca.

"If not, he was no more wonderful than anyone else could be."

"I can produce a cousin—that is in my speech for I cannot bring one right here at this moment—who was white."

"As you know I am a very dark brown and so are most of my family."

"They say we are appreciated because of our long fleece, of wool."

"We are very useful."

"Yes, your wool is supposed to be very useful. Even though you are smaller than I am you have more fleece and hair," agreed the Alpaca.

"Tell me about your cousin," said the Alpaca.

"I suppose he was rascally to your mind, anyway."

"Of course, here in the zoo," said the Llama, "I am simply gazed at or upon or on."

"My beautiful long wavy hair of such wondrous brown and white colors is greatly admired."

"They say how fine I am and how nice my hair is, and how useful it would be."

"But it won't be useful to them—for I belong to the zoo, and the zoo won't get rid of me, no indeed."

"When I am not in the zoo I am used as a regular carry-all."

"I always have been used to carrying things—everything from silver to rags."

"But I was going to tell you about my cousin."

The Alpaca nodded.

"That is what you were going to do, I'm all ready to hear about your cousin."

"In fact now I am curious to hear about your cousin."

"Tell me about him without delay."

"At once," said the Llama.

"You know how pleasant most of us are?"

The Alpaca nodded again.

"We are gentle and mild and possess very excellent dispositions."

"We are like camels without humps, only we are far more pleasant."

"But when a Llama is cross."

"When? He is a terror then. Oh yes, when he is cross, he is."

"There is no animal who can beat him. He is beyond all words—he is so wild and dangerous. And when I say beyond all words I mean he is so wild that words couldn't follow him where he goes—not even the wildest ones."

"Now my cousin was like that—he was just as ugly in disposition as was possible."

"They said it was as though he were quite insane—so horrible was he."

"He tried biting and every other bad act of which he could think."

"Yes, I am the usual Llama with a good disposition, but my cousin was a terror," he ended, almost with a certain amount of pride and boastfulness.

"And the Alpaca grinned broadly at the way the Llama had told his story."

Daddy Was Dirty Pig

Walter, aged three, had been chastised and called a "dirty little pig" one day when he came into the house almost covered with mud. The following day his father, who had been doing some work on their automobile, came into the house much in the same condition.

"Why, papa, you dirty pig!" said Walter.

"Walter!" called his mother, "is that nice for you to call your father a dirty pig? Tell him you didn't mean it, and that you are sorry."

"Oh, daddy," sobbed the little fellow. "I didn't mean that you was a dirty pig, daddy; you is a nice clean pig!"

Giant Crystals in South Dakota Mine

Crystals forty feet long, three to six feet in diameter and weighing thirty-seven tons have been found in the Etta spodumene mine near Pennington, Keystone county, S. D., according to Prof. G. M. Schwartz of the University of Minnesota, who describes them in Economic Geology.

Spodumene is a mineral valuable to chemical plants as a source of lithium, for which the Etta mine is worked. The spodumene crystals of this Black Hills deposit are among the most remarkable in the world, Professor Schwartz believes.

"Huge crystals resembling logs lie about in every direction," he writes. "These vary in size from a foot or two in length to thirty and even forty two feet long. At places now well exposed on the south wall of the pit there are star-like aggregates radiating from a center. The crystals often cross, and one is cut and somewhat altered, indicating that a later crystal had grown through an earlier one."

Thousands of people who are suffering from constipation do not know the cause of it until they try out the cure of their frequent head-aches.

"Those bilious headaches can be prevented"

"I know how agonizing they are. For years I was a chronic sufferer."

"And the headaches were not the worst part of it. The strong drugs I used to take to relieve the pain upset my stomach and slowly but surely undermined my general health."

"Finally I found out that my headaches were due to constipation. My doctor advised Nujol. After taking it regularly a few weeks the trouble disappeared."

"Since then I have never had another headache. There is no reason why I should, for the cause has been corrected."

Nujol Corrects Constipation in Nature's Way

Learning by Practice

Perfectly good practice of golf swings is possible wherever there is room to swing a club. It is the perfection of the swing that counts and the preliminary practice really is better under conditions where it is impossible to hit a ball. Nor is it necessary that in hitting the ball you do it on a golf course. Distance will be the least of your troubles. Accuracy is the main element. Consequently, there is no need of practicing with a driver. It is better to begin learning with a masher. By the time your stroke with the masher is under control you will have but little trouble with the longer iron and wooden clubs.

Chick Evans was a good golfer for at least two years before he was allowed to play a round. He was a caddy and practiced with some one's discarded masher in the caddy yard and to end from his home. He continued the practice in the back yard and in winter used the garret. That back yard or vacant lot practice, if you pitch masher shots at varying distances at a bucket of sand, is as valuable as if you had the freedom of a million-dollar golf course.

Perhaps the best practice of all, until one knows the mechanics of his stroke are correct, is careful practice in a room in front of a mirror. One can alternately watch his reflection and the place where the ball would be and can at once check any error. This is much harder to do in the open, and impossible of accomplishment in playing the game. As a matter of fact, play is a decided detriment to the beginner. Inevitably he tries to do the impossible and the work of the teacher is wrecked before it has a chance to be of any use. One of the wisest things a beginner can do is to make an early determination of just how far he wishes to go in acquiring skill. He will not be satisfied if he ever arrives at his first mark, but it is the part of wisdom to decide, for instance, that he will learn to play in the 90's and then start a course of practicing that will accomplish that result. He can be absolutely certain of success by means of intelligent practice.
