MEETING AN OLD LOVER.

An October morning had opened with blue sky, golden light, and an atmosphere all alive with radiance and perfume. There was a draught of vigor for every hour of out door life. Nature had brewed the autumnal vintage and poured it out with a lavish hand.

A carriage filled with ladies left the city for a long ride into the country. A young girl held the reins as if driving were part of the enjoyment. They had started off with a basket of luncheon stowed away under the seat, uncertain as to where they were going or what the day might bring. One of the party looked around with eager delight, animated by a recognition of old familiar places.

"Twenty-five years, and it seems but yesterday since I travelled this road. The maples have grown, but there's the same ivy running over the wall, and that must be our old hush of wild roses, Emma, do you see?"

"Change isn't the order of creation in this town," replied another lady, evidently the sister of the first speaker. "Alice, here, takes her drives and her picnics in our pleasant places. She literally follows in her mother's footsteps."

The young girl tightened the reins a little, and looked up with a smile. She was very pretty. Her hair and dress were brown, and she wore a broad brimmed hat of the same color.

"Where are we going to-day? Auntie must decide."

"Yes, Elizabeth," said her sister, "lead us where you like this morning."

"Then I want to go to the south side of the town and see the old schoolhouse where I taught, and the Howard place on the hill. I've been cherishing a bit of romance for to-day. I want to see an old lover once more."

The young girl dropped the reins. The horse, startled by the sudden shock, stood still.

"A romance! Oh, Aunt Elizabeth! and can I hear all about it?"

The two ladies on the back seat leaned eagerly forward. Mrs. Brenton laughed, and the color deepened on her cheek. She had the air of a well-bred, cultivated woman. Her hair was white, but soft and abundant, her eyes were blue, her complexion still fresh and fair, her ways were gracious, and her voice was sweet and pleasant.

"Look out for the horse, Alice. There isn't much to hear. Twenty-six years ago, at this very time, I expected to marry Foster Howard.

He was considered the most promising young man in town. I was twenty-five and he was past thirty. I taught school and boarded at his house one winter; we both sang in the choir, and we sang together a good deal at home. We were young, and life looked radiant to me."

"Go on, Elizabeth," said her sister, "a good part of this is new to us."

"That is all the romance. I went home, expecting him to follow in a few days, but he never came. He wrote, and several letters passed between us. In a couple of months my opportunity arose to go West and teach again."

The eyes of all the ladies were still fixed upon the speaker. She laughed merrily.

"Why you are actually sympathetic. See what lies between that time and this. My dear husband, my four boys, my beautiful home. Life had better things in store for me—yet somehow to-day I want to see that man who used to be an ideal."

"What has he done in these years, mamma?" asked Alice.

"He lived a bachelor for a long time. I used to hear of his waiting upon one and another of the girls. Finally he married, when he was forty-five, a lady about his own age—a neighbor—she only lived a few years. There were stories afloat of his unkindness to her. I've heard, too, that he was quite a miser, and that the great house had a tumble-down look."

They jogged along through the pleasant country roads. The sun grew warmer, but its touch was not unwelcome. From hill to hill the trees united in a carnival of glory. Now and then the wind scattered the leaves, where they lay a gleaming carpet beneath the trees. Heaps of apples were lying upon the ground in the orchards, while rows of barrels filled with hand-picked fruit stood near the friendly shelter of a bulk-head. Squirrels hurried over the stone walls, and the children stopped under the oak-trees to gather acorn cups for their tea-sets.

A veil of mist arose from the earth, and softened into a dreamy haze.

They rode through the center of the town.

"There isn't a sign of age anywhere," cried Mrs. Brenton. "I shall see Parson Lennox crossing the green again, sautly and white-haired as ever. There's the horse sheds—oh! to see Squire Thompson and hear him pitch the tune again. There's the store, and that's Mr. Gray behind the counter, isn't it?"

"No, it's his son."

"There's the hall, where I danced one night, and never told a soul at home about it. We had a sleigh ride and a supper—"

"Shall we stop here, Aunt Elizabeth? The horse likes this water to drink."

"No, go on, or the spell will be broken. I have forgotten my years, and some grandmother may recall them."

They left the main road and turned towards the south, merry with talk and laughter; a wide stretch of sandy plain, with pines on either side that were thick and dark, and then out into the open country once, where the fields were wide and beautiful. Now and then a farmer, with a wagon load of fresh vegetables, passed by and Elizabeth looked curiously at each face.

They came in sight of the schoolhouse, but that was new, and other buildings had arisen around it. There was a saw mill near the brook, and a noise of machinery. Time had intruded his inventions here.

A quarter of a mile beyond, a large white house stood upon a hill, a front door opened to the south with a view of wide sunny orchards and woodland beyond. On the east side was a long piazza, over which a grape-vine had grown old and twisted and gnarled. The place looked desolate; the paint was well worn, and the shingles had outstood many a storm. A dog lay at the foot of the steps. Opposite was the barn, with half of the large door standing open. A farm wagon was outside, and straw lay scattered about. A couple of milk cans, an old harness, and a barrel of potatoes were on a platform. A hen cackled; the wind blew the great cobwebs from an upper window. But Mrs. Brenton's face grew radiant with delight.

"It's just the same. I'll get out in a moment. There's the spot where we placed the settee. If the melodeon is in the sitting-room I can play the old tunes. This is better than I expected. Why, it is the identical place. Not a bad home if one knew how to improve it. What an horizon for sunsets! I wish my boys were here." The horse had lowered his head and gone to eating grass. Alice leaned back, and watched the scene with beaming eyes. The other ladies were curiously interested, for were they not right in the heart of a story?

Mrs. Brenton left the carriage, ran lightly up the long flight of steps, and stopped upon the piazza to gaze about her once more, before she rapped at the side door. In a few moments she returned.

At the Needles they feed the hens cracked ice to keep them from laying hard-boiled eggs.

From a thorough canvass of the Deming school district, it is ascertained that there are 313 children of school age residing therein.—Headlight.

For the year ending June 30th, 1910, the Land Office at Las Cruces received $17,181.45 and about 50,000 acres of government land passed into individual ownership.

Four more convicts escaped from the territorial penitentiary, during the absence of Warden Chavez on a political fence building and financial engineering in Valencia county.

W. H. Hudgins, well known here, has secured a good lease from the Silver Mining Co., Lake Valley, and will break ground on it next week.—San Marcial Reporter.

The Territorial supreme court will convene at Santa Fe on the last Monday in July and will run throughout August. A good deal of important business is to be disposed of.

"Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire." The Cerrillos Beacon says: It is reported from good authority that the Santa Fe Southern is sold to the D & R. G. and that the road will, in a short time, be extended via Cerrillos and White Oaks.

Mrs. O'Neill sold her leasehold, furniture, etc., in the Hotel Pauly to J. P. Church on Saturday last, and Mr. Church took possession Sunday morning. Mrs. O'Neill has gone to Fort Stanton for a short vacation.—Roswell Register.

The floods in the lower Rio Grande have been a blessing in disguise. People who lost their crops corn, wheat and oats, turned in after the waters subsided and planted thousands of acres to beans. Sheriff Luna, of Los Lunas, says the bean crop will pay bigger profits than their first crop.

John Hogge, the former porter of the Montezuma, who married the daughter of the rich Chicago butcher, returned last night, and went out to the Montezuma, as a guest. He says that he is a capitalist now, and after staying at the springs for a few days, he will go to White Oaks to look into the mining business.—Optic.

In the Vermejo valley in Colfax county, M. A. Dane devotes thirty acres of his 19,000-acre farm to orchard products. His fruit plantation, is in heavy bearing and a sure producer. He grows peaches, pears, apricots, apples, grapes etc., to perfection, and this year the trees and vines are weighed down with fruit in a wonderful manner.—Field and Farm.

The A. T. & S. F. railway company has made a round trip rate from all points on its line to the territorial fair at Albuquerque of one cent a mile. The executive committee of the fair association deserve eminent praise for having presented the plea on which so liberal a rate has been secured, but it is to the great "Atheison" and its public spirited management that the real credit of this most generous arrangement belongs. The A. & P. road will also make a one cent rate from the Needles.

Work on the University building is being pushed as speedily as possible and this slightly edifice will soon be under cover. The location of the University means much to Albuquerque, as several hundred pupils will attend who will leave $400 apiece per year in this city, the sum total of which will run up into the thousands. It is expected to have the building ready to receive pupils by October 1st.—Democrat.

One of the finest and most productive orchards in New Mexico is the thirty-acre plantation of J. B. Dawson, near Cimilario. The trees are heavy bearers, and consist of apples, pear, peach and other varieties. Many of his older trees yield ten barrels a tree, and the fruit readily sold on the place at $5 a barrel. These trees therefore returned $50 each to the owner.—Field and Farm.

The Las Vegas and Albuquerque papers have of late been indulging in the questionable game of mul-slinging. Which city is getting the best of it no one can decide, but that they are both getting the worst of it is plain to a "man up a tree." What is said to the detriment of one portion of the Territory affects all other parts of it.—Raton Reporter.

The freight and express shipments of bullion, ore and concentrates from Silver City during the month of June amounted to $15,461 worth of gold, $1,184 of silver, 115,320 pounds of high grade sacked gold and silver ores; 442,600 pounds of concentrates, $60,000 pounds of lead ore; and 1,800,000 pounds of iron ore.

Burton and Williams, who are contracting on the 100-foot level of the Kleptomania, had 17½ tons of ore run through the Astez mill a few days ago. The result was more than satisfactory. From the plates they got 25 ounces of gold and 4 tons of concentrates which went $63 to the ton, making the ore average over $45.—Pinos Altos.

Grasshoppers are doing great damage in the northern and western counties of New Mexico. Some consider them the 17-year locust, such as ravaged the west in 1870. They are moving north and east in two vast armies, devouring everything green in their path.

UNEXAMPLED PROGRESS.

The business men of this country are too apt to forget the soundness of America's vast progress. The United States is to-day almost the only great country in the world whose future is brighter than its past. Great Britain has in many respects reached the limit of its greatness. It can no longer be the manufacturing center of the world, for we have taken the foremost position in that line. Its vast iron and steel business is yearly increasing in cost of production, while ours is decreasing. It cannot meet the world's ever growing demand for iron and steel, because it cannot increase its production to any great extent in competition with this country. It produced no more pig iron in 1890, notwithstanding the high prices prevailing, than in 1882, while we more than doubled our output. Much of its ore it imports from far distant regions. Its cotton is all imported. It spends about 375,000,000 a year for foreign foodstuffs. On the continent every Nation is burdened with debt, and none can ever hope to pay off its obligations. Measured by their natural resources and possibilities they are bankrupt. In all of them the cost of production and of living is steadily increasing. In the United States we have scarcely laid the foundation of our future greatness. In natural resources we are richer than all of Europe combined; we are paying our debts faster than they are due; we have barely scratched the ground in the development of our mineral wealth; we are rich enough to stand a decrease last year of 900,000,000 bushels of grain as compared with 1889 on account of bad weather; we are rich enough in addition to this to send $70,000,000, in gold, to Europe within a few months without creating any financial trouble, and that, too, after Europe had unloaded on us millions of dollars of our stocks, because our securities were the only ones in the world that found a cash market when the Barings and others were trying to save themselves. In ten years, from 1880 to 1890, we have added $2,000,000,000, to our capital invested in manufactures, an increase of nearly 75 per cent. In the same time the value of our manufactured products has risen from $5,300,000,000 to $8,600,000,000, a gain of $3,300,000,000; or, in other words, we are now producing manufactured goods at the rate of $3,300,000,000 a year more than we were ten years ago. The increase in capital invested in manufactures in ten years, from 1880 to 1890, was greater than the entire amount of capital invested in 1870, or only twenty years ago. In these ten years the growth of our manufacturing interests was greater than the growth from the settlement of America up to 1870. In these ten years we have built 75,000 miles of railroad, almost as much as our total mileage in 1880.

RESTLESS INDIANS.

For several days at the beginning of this week a restlessness was observable amongst the untutored savages of the Kiowa tribe, many of whom infest this vicinity, and whose indulgence in firewater causes the authorities much trouble at times. The frequent purchases of war paint led many to fear an outbreak, but the cause of all was explained by the arrival on the train on Thursday of a grizzled old warrior with an ore sack full of scalps and bunch of eagle feathers partly concealed beneath his blanket. He was received by the local braves with a huge grunt that sounded as if each had received a heavy punch unexpectedly in his bread basket. The new arrival was at once taken to the brush and we presume entertained to his heart's content, among pale-faces he is known as Rudolph Borchardt and his wigwam on the Platte is ornamented with an uncounted mass of scalps of white foes and the claws of many grizzlies slain by his own hand, amongst his red brethren he has attained the highest position in Colorado a sort of great sachem as it were and at his command all the young braves would take the warpath too quick for comfort of all except bald headed men or swift footed spinsters. Government officials keep a sharp watch upon the old fellow's trips to the mountains.—Breckenridge (Col) Journal.

From St. Louis Republic.
IOWA AND OHIO.

In the November elections last year the country surprised itself. The result was so unprecedented that its bearings on the immediate future of politics cannot be comprehended with any degree of certainty until it is interpreted by succeeding elections. Under such circumstances extraordinary interest attaches to the elections in Ohio and Iowa this fall. Both being valley States with very decided characteristics, their action will give a tangible hint of the present Central West. Consider the Central West as a block of States bounded on the west by Montana, Wyoming and Colorado, on the south by Indian Territory, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky, on the east by Pennsylvania and West Virginia and the north by the lakes and Canada, and we have a territory overwhelmingly Democrat on the Congressional returns of last November. The twelve States included returned Democratic, Republican and Independent Congressmen as follows:

	Dem.	Ind.	Rep.
Ohio.....	14	0	7
Indiana.....	11	0	2
Illinois.....	15	0	5
Michigan.....	8	0	3
Wisconsin.....	8	0	1
Minnesota.....	3	1	1
Iowa.....	6	0	5
Missouri.....	14	0	0
Kansas.....	0	5	2
Nebraska.....	1	2	0
South Dakota.....	0	2	0
North Dakota.....	0	0	1
Total Central West	80	10	27

For this territory comprising all the States of the Mississippi Valley north of the Ohio river and the south line of Kansas, the total representation in Congress is 117, and of this number of Congressmen the Democrats have 80, outnumbering the Republicans three to one. In the whole valley, adding in the States south of the Ohio, the Democratic Congressmen outnumber the Republicans still more strikingly.

If the Democrats hold the valley they will hold the Union. To hold the valley, they must not be driven from the position they have gained in it north of the Ohio river.

In this situation, both Iowa and Ohio demand consideration for something more than their voting weight in the Union. Iowa is one of the central States of the Central West; Ohio is one of its border States. Their geographical position makes the results of their November elections more than ordinarily significant. We may expect to see Ohio largely influenced by the East; but Iowa will speak the mind of the Central West, and will show how far, if at all, this great block of States has changed the mind it expressed so forcibly at the polls last November.

PLACING THE RESPONSIBILITY.

The following story is told about President Harrison, ex-senator Matt Quay, of Pennsylvania, and "Bob" Ingersoll. The tale was told apropos of Col Ingersoll's visit to the city on the occasion of his lecture before the Press club. The story was this:

Some time after President Harrison was inaugurated and postmasters' official heads had begun to flutter trunkless and gory through the wintry political air Senator Quay called on the President in the interest of a certain republican whom Mr. Quay desired to see appointed postmaster at Harrisburg. The President received the suggestion with but little evidence of approval. In fact he flatly refused to consider it.

"It can't be done, senator," he said at last. "I have a friend there whom I intend to appoint postmaster."

Then Quay "got hot." He recalled the hard work he did as chairman of the republican national campaign committee and he blurted out: "Mr. President, do you know who made you President?"

"Yes, senator I think I do," replied Mr. Harrison in his calmest tones.

"Well, who do you think made you President?" repeated Quay.

"God made me President," said Mr. Harrison. Senator Quay made no reply, but turned on his heel and left the White House. Going down Pennsylvania avenue on his way to the capitol, Quay met Col. "Bob" Ingersoll. "What's the matter, Quay? You look mad," said the eloquent agnostic, stopping his friend.

"So I am," replied Quay, and then he related the incident at the executive mansion. "I thought," continued Quay, "that he would give Clarkson and me and the rest of us a little credit, but to his idea of it I had nothing to say."

"That was pretty tough on you and Clarkson," laughed Bob, "but you are not the only one to kick about what Harrison said. I've said a good many hard things about God, but I never said anything as bad as that."—Toledo Bee.

A letter from a correspondent at Hachita prophesies great things for that camp as soon as the next democratic house meets and passes a free coinage bill. Our correspondent says that there are great quantities of low grade ore in that camp, which have been pretty well developed, which only need free coinage to enable them to be largely developed and made producing profitable.—Silver City Sentinel.

President Harrison's chief concern is that he shall not "be obliged to ride to the Capitol March 4th, 1893, with a Democrat." The good man would much rather ride alone, even with Quay as driver and Wanamaker as footman.—N. Y. World.

The increase in the size of fortunes and the corresponding advance in the standard of living in the United States are indicated by the fact that the estate of the late Secretary Windom foots up $200,000, though it was announced that he died "a poor man."—N. Y. World.

The pension elephant is the largest in Uncle Samuel's menagerie, and he is growing every day. No such Jumbo has ever before entertained the American public.—Courier Journal.

Honest John Wanamaker should be transferred to the Treasury Department. He knows where to put a surplus where it will do the most good and how to hide a deficit.—Atlanta Journal.

A PERFECT SUCCESS.

The Rev. A. Anton, of Refugio, Tex., writes: "As far as I am able to judge, I think Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic is a perfect success for any one who suffered from a most painful nervousness as I did. I feel now like myself again after taking the Tonic."

A STRONG PROOF.

ORILLIA, ONT., CANADA, June '88. I was first attacked by epilepsy in November, 1878; residing in New York, I consulted the best physic ans, but they could only arrest the disease; the honest ones told me then there was no cure for it. I was compelled to give up my occupation and return to Canada in 1878; since then I tried innumerable remedies and consulted some of the best physicians, but nothing benefited me until I began to use Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic in September '88; since then I had not a single attack. $300 REWARD

FOR ORE THIEVES!

The common experience of this camp shows that much is lost by the mine operators by the stealing of gold in specimens, if not in amalgam and bullion. Therefore the "Old Abe" Co. offers a standing reward of Three Hundred Dollars for the arrest and conviction, or for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person guilty of stealing any of the property of the Old Abe Co., even the smallest specimen of ore. The rule of this company is to mill all specimens. Therefore none of the ore from this mine can be honestly held as specimens. And as the receiver, with guilty knowledge, is as guilty in law as the thief, this offer applies to the holders of Old Abe specimens.

"He is not in, and the old woman, who seems to be his housekeeper, does not think he is in the barn, but I'm going to see."

An indignant protest from every member in the carriage.

"Going off by yourself, and are we to miss it all?"

"I'll bring him back with me if I find."

"But we want to see the meeting."

"Then drive down to the barn, if you like."

They followed her at once. She passed through, and into the granaries, and came slowly back.

"I cannot find him anywhere. At least I'll leave a note." She took out a visiting card and rested it upon the wheel.

"What are you going to write. Elizabeth?" asked her sister.

"An old saying of his I think he will remember."

She folded up the paper and got into the carriage. "Come it's all over. Fate denies us a meeting. Drive up once more to the door, Alice, and let me leave this for a keepsake."

"Wait, said her sister, "let me try. I can't bear to give it up. I think I see some one in the field."

"What excuse will you make, mamma, if you find him?"

"I'll ask for some oats for our horse."

Just then a young man walked up the road.

"There," exclaimed Mrs. Brenton, "perhaps that is he!"

"Oh! Auntie, no older than that," cried Alice.

She had forgotten the flight of years, and the gentleman passed the carriage, with only a passing glance at the young lady.

Mrs. Ames had gone through the barn, and out into a pasture, and was now returning with a man at her side. As they came near, Mrs. Brenton shrank back as if she had received a blow.

"Not that old man! it cannot be. Emma has found some one else."

But the two came up to the carriage.

"I have found Mr. Howard. He says it will be quite convenient to let us have the oats."

The man was evidently past sixty, round-shoulders and bent. He was in his shirts sleeve. An old straw hat, pushed back, revealed a few straggling locks of gray hair. His teeth were nearly gone, but the face was keen, and the eyes blue and bright. Mrs. Brenton leaned forward from her seat in the carriage and held out a soft ungloved hand. Her diamonds glittered in the sunlight.

"Don't you remember me?" she asked.

The two gazed steadily at each other. "No," he said, "I don't know you."

"But try and think, years ago."

"No," he persisted, "I remember no one like you."

She handed him the note she had written. "See if this will help you."

He read it, looked up; the blue eyes flashed. "Now I know you," he said.

He was awkwardly embarrassed. Mrs. Brenton had recovered herself, but sat waiting for him to speak.

"We have grown old these times," and glancing again with something of admiration at the graceful woman. "At least I have."

"Yes," she replied, "years do not beautify."

"And you married out West. I heard that. Have you any children?"

"Four boys. My oldest is twenty-three. You live here at the old place, I see."

"Yes, I guess I've got enough to take me through; that's all I want. By this time the oats had been transferred to the carriage. "How much shall we pay you?" Mrs. Ames asked.

"Well, I guess a quarter will do."

The money was handed out. The fair white hand was not proffered for good-bye.

"It is time we were off, Emma." She gave him a slight bow as the horse started.

Mrs. Ames looked back. The quarter had dropped from his hand. He stood watching the carriage until it was out of sight.

"To think I ever loved that man!" exclaimed Mrs. Brenton.

"To think there ever was the possibility that I might have continued to love him! To think of his taking that quarter! Whip the horse, Alice. Let us go fast."

"And I thought of your husband in his office," said her sister, "and wondered how a contrast could be greater."

"And did you wonder if, by any chance, I could have grown or changed into a mate for him? What is it, Alice?"

For Alice had bent her head to hide the tears.

"I don't know what makes me cry, Aunt Elizabeth, but I can't help it."

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE MIND OF A MAN?

One of the most interesting and valuable of the human faculties is the mind. It is the seat of all our thoughts, feelings, and actions. It is the power that enables us to reason, to judge, and to act. It is the power that makes us what we are. It is the power that makes us great or small, noble or base, happy or miserable. It is the power that makes us the masters of our fate, or the slaves of our passions. It is the power that makes us the creators of our world, or the destroyers of our world. It is the power that makes us the saviors of our race, or the enemies of our race. It is the power that makes us the heroes of our age, or the villains of our age. It is the power that makes us the kings of our world, or the beggars of our world. It is the power that makes us the gods of our world, or the devils of our world. It is the power that makes us the angels of our world, or the demons of our world. It is the power that makes us the saints of our world, or the sinners of our world. It is the power that makes us the just of our world, or the unjust of our world. It is the power that makes us the merciful of our world, or the merciless of our world. It is the power that makes us the kind of our world, or the unkind of our world. It is the power that makes us the gentle of our world, or the harsh of our world. It is the power that makes us the soft of our world, or the hard of our world. It is the power that makes us the sweet of our world, or the bitter of our world. It is the power that makes us the light of our world, or the dark of our world. It is the power that makes us the life of our world, or the death of our world. It is the power that makes us the hope of our world, or the despair of our world. It is the power that makes us the love of our world, or the hate of our world. It is the power that makes us the peace of our world, or the war of our world. It is the power that makes us the good of our world, or the evil of our world. It is the power that makes us the beauty of our world, or the ugliness of our world. It is the power that makes us the truth of our world, or the falsehood of our world. It is the power that makes us the justice of our world, or the injustice of our world. It is the power that makes us the wisdom of our world, or the foolishness of our world. It is the power that makes us the strength of our world, or the weakness of our world. It is the power that makes us the courage of our world, or the cowardice of our world. It is the power that makes us the honor of our world, or the dishonor of our world. It is the power that makes us the glory of our world, or the shame of our world. It is the power that makes us the fame of our world, or the obscurity of our world. It is the power that makes us the riches of our world, or the poverty of our world. It is the power that makes us the power of our world, or the impotence of our world. It is the power that makes us the greatness of our world, or the smallness of our world. It is the power that makes us the nobility of our world, or the baseness of our world. It is the power that makes us the magnificence of our world, or the meanness of our world. It is the power that makes us the exaltedness of our world, or the lowness of our world.

Mr. Lee. "Why, Addie, you needn't cry about it! I only said Mrs. Allen was a very well-informed woman, and I wished you would follow her example."

Mrs. Lee. "Yes, and last week you said you wished I could manage to look as stylish as Mrs. Allen, and she makes all her own clothes. But she has what I haven't."

Mr. Lee. "What is that?"

Mrs. Lee. "Well, she gets all of her information from the Magazine they take. I admit that she knows all that is going on, and is bright and entertaining in conversation; but I could do as well as she does if I had the same source of information. She lent me the last number of her Magazine lately, and I learned more in one hour's reading, about various social matters and the topics of the day, than I would pick up in a month by my occasional chats with friends. It certainly covers every topic of interest, from the news of the day down to the details of housekeeping; and everything is so beautifully illustrated, too. Every time Miss goes over to the Allen's she comes back and teases me to let you take Demorest's Family Magazine, as the stories are so good. Even the boys watch for it every month, as a place is found for them all in its pages; and Mr. Allen swears by it. It is really wonderful how it suits every member of the family!"

Mr. Lee. "Well, perhaps I had better send for a Specimen Copy; for, if it is anything like what you say it is, it will amuse and instruct the whole of us."

Mrs. Lee. "I see that W. Jennings Demorest, the publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York, is offering to send a Specimen Copy for 10 cents, so we can't lose anything, as each number contains a 'Pattern Order' entitling the holder to any Pattern she may choose, and in any size—which alone makes each copy worth 30 cents; and I just want a jacket pattern like Mrs. Allen's. The subscription price is only $3.00 a year; and I must say I can't see how they can publish so elegant a Magazine for so little money."
