New building inspector on duty in Ruidoso Downs

by BARBY GRANT
Staff Writer

Ruidoso Downs now has its own building inspector. A. A. "Junior" Behringer was added to the village payroll February 1 as building inspector. He was licensed by the state in January.

Behringer worked as a licensed contractor in Ruidoso for the past seven years, before which he was involved in various fields, including farming, truck driving and the oil fields. He moved to this area from Waco, Texas, about eight years ago. Behringer said he has always been involved in construction, however, having grown up in a family that was involved in that field. That is where he received his training, he reported.

"I've grown up doing it," Behringer has been hired as building inspector for Ruidoso Downs on a part-time, as needed basis, but he said it has been a full-time job thus far.

"There are all kinds of things to catch up on now because there has been no inspector for so long," he pointed out.

In the past, Ruidoso Downs had a joint powers agreement with Ruidoso whereby Ruidoso's building inspector would issue permits for the Downs, and the two villages would split the fees. Ruidoso terminated the agreement as of January 1, and the Downs was left without an inspector.

If a village does not have its own building inspector, the state will supply one, but the village does not get to keep any part of the permit fees.

So Ruidoso Downs officials contacted Behringer about the job and arranged for the state to administer the test for an inspector's license.

Behringer said he is being kept busy trying to correct problems on buildings now under construction.

"People in this area have been more or less lax on getting permits, and in some cases they don't know the law, and it hasn't been called to their attention," he stated.

The building inspector said he has no intention of inspecting buildings that are already completed unless he is called to do so. But now that he has been hired to issue permits and conduct inspections of construction in Ruidoso Downs, builders will be required to follow regulations.

"It's been let go so long, it will take time," Behringer noted. But he agreed that the quality of construction in the village should improve now that a local building inspector is available to enforce regulations.

"I feel it's bound to affect the quality of buildings," he remarked. "It's worked everywhere else."

Survey will measure local interest in higher education

Response of the community to a "needs assessment" survey will play a large part in determining whether higher education programs will be offered in Ruidoso.

The Community Development Committee of Rotary Club has been pursuing the possibility of establishing a "learning center" to offer college level courses here.

Orlo A. Sundre, Dean of Continuing Education at Eastern New Mexico University (ENMU), explained the survey at a meeting of Rotary last week. He also handed out draft copies of the survey and asked for suggestions for improving it.

Sundre said three groups will be targeted in the survey, which consists in draft form of about a dozen questions. The first is students at Ruidoso High School. The second is the parents of those students, and the third is business and professional people affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce.

The survey will be launched February 21, Sundre announced. The forms will be mailed out starting that date, and it is hoped results will be in by March 4.

Data from the surveys will be analyzed and a draft copy of a report based on the data will be prepared, Sundre said. Input will be sought from local educators and other interested parties at that point, and a final report should be ready by May 10.

Sundre said if the report reveals "significant interest" in higher education for Ruidoso and the surrounding area, the next step will be to go before the Board of Educational Finance and then the Legislature for funding.

If all goes according to plan, he noted,

Ruidoso could have an educational center offering freshman and sophomore level courses by the fall of 1984.

The state's only present educational center (a facility offering college classes using existing classrooms) is at Taos, Sundre said. An allocation of $100,000 for that center has been recommended to the Legislature, he added.

He pointed out that local educators have shown interest in the project and the possibility of using Ruidoso school classrooms. Sundre said a Ruidoso center would employ local instructors as much as possible.

A 50 percent response from the community to the survey would indicate interest, he commented. Sundre concluded that the chances of the project will depend on how the survey goes.

Lee introduces bill to help Downs

by BARBY GRANT
Staff Writer

Ruidoso Downs may be $50,000 richer by the time the current legislative session is over. State Senator Charlie Lee told The News last week that he has introduced a bill which would provide the municipality $50,000 in revenue from Ruidoso Downs Race Track.

Lee began working on the measure last year when Ruidoso Downs Mayor J. C. Day complained that the village is being "shafted" because it is not receiving any gross receipts revenue from the racetrack.

The senator said the bill, which he introduced Thursday, will be reviewed by the Legislative Finance Committee and other subcommittees before being voted on in the Senate. Lee said he will invite Day and village trustees to Santa Fe to meet with the finance committee when the bill is brought before it.

The legislation Lee has introduced provides for the first $250,000 in handle revenues from the racetrack to be available to the track for capital improvements. The next $50,000 would be returned to the municipality.

Lee said he feels that is the largest amount the village can ask for, due to the critical financial situation of the state.

The senator said he is unable to determine how much support he has been able to raise for the bill until after it is presented to the finance committee. One problem sure to be encountered, Lee indicated, is that Ruidoso Downs will be the only municipality to benefit from the legislation, as it is the only municipality with a racetrack within its village limits.

Lee said he feels justified in supporting the bill to benefit only this particular municipality, however, because the village needs the additional revenue "to get by."

Whether the village actually receives the funds from the state, though, will probably depend on how many other legislators are convinced of that.

whether to pursue the acquisition of Site A or Site B—the two sites at Fort Stanton Mesa which have been chosen as appropriate for construction of a regional airport. Site B is the preferred location, but a study conducted by a team of scientists determined that an airport could not coexist with research being done in the area by New Mexico State University (NMSU).

Heckman pointed out that after talking with Anaya, SBAC must "decide whether to fight the battle with Site B or look to Site A."

He said a meeting with the governor and other involved parties will be set up after the current legislative session is over.

Heckman also referred to letters which have been received from the NMSU Board of Regents and from the director of the Airports Regional Office of the Federal Aviation Administration in Dallas, Texas. The Board of Regents has adopted a resolution offering cooperation to SBAC in pursuing Site A for the airport.

The letter from the Dallas airports office requests a copy of the scientists' report so airport officials could meet with appropriate Bureau of Land Management

(BLM) officials "to see if some compromise solutions can be achieved to permit both the proposed airport and the research to be accommodated."

NMSU is conducting its agricultural research on land leased from BLM.

"We are extremely interested in assisting the local people at Ruidoso, New Mexico, to replace their existing marginal airport facilities," the letter states.

Heckman listed four major problems to locating an airport on Site A.

There would be "a terrible problem of swapping lands," he said, as Site A consists of federal, state and private-owned land. The commission chairman pointed out that all those involved seem agreeable to the swaps, but he indicated the legalities involved in such land exchanges would still create problems.

Cost would be another factor working against Site A. Heckman said the costs of Site A and Site B would be about the same over a 30-year period, but Site A costs would be higher in the earlier stages of development due to earth-moving expenses.

A third problem to be encountered with Site A would be its proximity to the Sacramento Mountains, which would cut down on instrument capability. This would be a problem 30 or 40 years down the road, Heckman predicted.

Site A is also on the edge of a developing subdivision, Heckman pointed out. Problems could arise from planes having to fly directly over a populated area. Site B, on the other hand, is isolated in the midst of federal land, where a plane crash would not endanger any human lives.

Heckman indicated that Governor Anaya's stance on the issue of which site to pursue will have great weight with SBAC's decision.

He noted that the commission's efforts have been hurt in the past because "we went through a couple of terms with a governor who was not really interested in this proposal." It was pointed out that Anaya has said he is in favor of a new regional airport here, but the question of which angle he wishes to pursue it from is still unknown.

Heckman said he will notify SBAC members when the meeting with Anaya is arranged. Until the decision is made about which site to pursue, the commission will meet only on call.

Motorcycle Festival looking good for '83

by BILLY ALLSTETTER
Staff Writer

Nationwide recognition—and cancellation of a competing motorcycle festival—has encouraged Ruidoso Business Association (RBA) members to believe their 1983 Ruidoso Motorcycle Festival will be even more of a success than it was in 1982.

The motorcycle festival and RBA have been receiving laudatory notices in national and regional magazines since the fall festival.

The Texas Motorcycle Roadriders Association (TMRA), the biggest motorcycle association in that state, has included two notices in its newsletter. This is especially helpful, noted RBA vice-president Connie Brown, since the largest part of the festival participants come from Texas.

Bruce Groves, president of TMRA, wrote about the festival, calling it "a great rally with which to end the season." He devoted over half his column to outlining the efforts of RBA and other community clubs in organizing the festival in its first year.

In the February issue of the TMRA newsletter, the minutes of the first organizational meeting for the 1983 festival were published in full, including telephone numbers of officers and committee heads.

Probably the biggest boost RBA received was a four-page feature article, complete with numerous photos and big headlines, in the March issue of Touring Bike. The magazine is a slick page, national magazine with an average circulation of 91,000 over the last 12 months.

Roger and Noraine Meng gave a day-by-day description of the whole event, and called Ruidoso "THE place to be at the end of the riding season" in their opening sentence.

They noted some of the organizational difficulties RBA experienced, but also wrote "those who came found that the Ruidoso Business Association had done a darn good job of putting together a Festival for motorcycleists."

The concluding sentence of the article stated, "The people of Ruidoso proved that this is still an exciting and colorful way to wind-up the motorcycle year."

Rider Magazine, another national slick magazine with a circulation of 150,000, published two letters to the editor and notice of the festival in their Rider Motorcycle Touring Club News.

One of the letters opened with the line, "I would like to express a very enthusiastic thank you and bravo to the fine people responsible for the Ruidoso Motorcycle Festival." The other letter discussed the origins of the name Aspencade.

Vice-president Brown said Road Rider magazine did not write up the 1982 festival, but that a staff member has called her asking for information about the '83 festival.

"They're very curious," said Brown. When asked to comment on the publicity the '82 festival has received, she said, "I can't find the words. It has been great!"

Nancy Radziewicz, member of the RBA board of directors, said the publicity has given the group and the festival legitimacy it lacked in its first year.

"There was a lot of skepticism. They didn't think we could do it," said Brown. Reports in magazines since the festival show that many in the motorcycle industry have changed their minds.

Organizers of a motorcycle festival in Durango, Colorado, have also changed their minds. The festival, which ran on the same weekend as the Ruidoso festival, has been cancelled for 1983, according to Brown.

"Durango has been cancelled, definitely," said Brown. She stated that she has talked to Joe Christian, promoter of last year's Durango festival. According to Brown, Christian has decided not to stage the event because of personal problems.

Since Durango is within a few hundred miles of Ruidoso and its festival occurred at the same time as the Ruidoso festival, it was generally believed that attendance here suffered. With the cancellation of the Durango festival, attendance here should be larger this year.

"It will make ours bigger and better this year," predicted Brown.

The cancellation of the Durango festival has also opened up the option of sanctioning by the American Motorcycle Association (AMA) for the Ruidoso festival. The AMA is one of the largest associations of motorcycleists in the United States, and sanctioning could possibly attract more people to the festival.

RBA members, however, believe the potential extra attendance is not worth the extra regulations and organizational difficulties AMA sanctioning would mean.

Brown said only 891 of the 4,700 registered motorcycleists at the 1981 Aspencade festival were members of AMA. She and Radziewicz both said they believe those motorcycleists will be coming to the festival regardless of AMA sanctioning.

"They're coming here anyway. It's a tradition," said Brown.

If the AMA does sanction the event, it will impose many of its regulations on the event and local organizers will lose some control of the event. RBA members seem to feel it is not worth the extra attendance to seek AMA sanctioning.

With the widespread publicity and the cancellation of the Durango festival, the 1983 Ruidoso Motorcycle Festival should be much larger than last year, AMA sanctioning or not.

ACCIDENT CLAIMS TWO LIVES. Margaret Turner, 54, of Roswell was pronounced dead at the scene of this accident that occurred about 2 p.m. Friday on Highway 70 near the Hondo Valley Kennels. Her son, Cody Turner, 20, died Sunday at St. Mary's Hospital in Roswell from injuries he received in the accident. The two were both passengers in this Chevrolet Suburban driven by Margaret's husband, John, which collided with a Pepsi Cola delivery truck driven by William Whitehead of Roswell. Whitehead and his passenger, Angel Gerardo, were treated and released from Ruidoso-Hondo Valley Hospital. John Turner was listed in stable condition Monday at St. Mary's. State Policeman Clayton Floyd said the Turner vehicle was traveling west and swerved into the eastbound lane where it collided with the delivery truck heading west. Floyd said Turner apparently fell asleep at the wheel. The delivery truck caught fire after the collision, Floyd said, but Whitehead and Gerardo were able to escape the flames. The fire did not spread to the Turner vehicle.

Tips for warmer, safer winter evenings

by BILLY ALLSTETTER
Staff Writer

It may have seemed warm during the crystal clear mountain day, but once the sun goes down, so does the temperature. Chill air nips at the nose and fingertips as clouds of breath appear in the early darkness of a winter's evening.

Once inside, however, the crackling wood fire keeps winter's chill at bay. Whether in a fireplace or a wood burning stove, the fire is often the central gathering place of a household on a cold night.

This scene is a common one in Ruidoso. The combination of mountain winters, abundant forests and high fuel prices make wood heat an attractive alternative to many people in the area. But more than just practical considerations are at work as well.

John Vivian, in his book, "Wood Heat," writes about the intangible benefits of an open fire.

"First to mind is the simple attractiveness of an open fire, the changing pattern of light in the firebox, reflected to dance on the walls and ceiling. The licks of flame, glow of coals and infinite variety of shapes and patterns," he writes. "Life in a wood heated home has more variety, more texture and novelty than living in one of your modern split levels with electric, gas or oil heat."

Life in a wood heated home, however, carries more responsibility and requires more attention than simply setting the thermostat and waiting for the heat to flow out the vents. Wood is an uncivilized fuel that can present a fire hazard if not tended properly. Heat output can also be altered considerably by simple steps taken during and before the burning of the wood.

Since time immemorial, wood burning has been a source of heat for man. The fireplace, equipped with a chimney to take smoke out of the house, is a relatively new invention, however.

The first fireplaces were simple stone circles with a hole in the roof to let the smoke out. Obviously much of the smoke wandered about all corners of the room before exiting through the hole.

By the 14th century, large inverted funnel-like hoods were built to guide more of the smoke directly out of the house. The mantel of today's fireplaces is a vestige of those original hoods.

During the 17th century, masons learned to support chimneys with side jacks and a side wall, and built fireplaces resembling those of today.

Those fireplaces consumed tremendous amounts of wood while providing limited heat. Smoke also still plagued most homes. The newly acquired art of metal forging provided for the invention of an enclosed metal stove that was much more efficient and less smoky than the fireplaces in use around the mid-17th century.

This invention created a division that exists today between the proponents of open fireplaces and enclosed wood stoves. To this day there are strong supporters of each style. The efficiency of a wood burning stove is proven, whereas the esthetic appeal of an open fireplace is indisputable.

Louis Savot improved the smoke drawing powers of fireplaces in 1620 by reducing the opening at the front of the fireplace. To increase heat production, he devised a system of metal ducts that took in cold air below the hearth, circulated it behind the back of the firebox and exhausted hot air out the top.

Count Rumford, an American turned Englishman, designed a shallower fireplace with a small opening at the top of the fireplace—the throat. The small throat drew smoke better and also provided for the invention of the damper by Benjamin Franklin a few years later.

The damper is probably the most important tool in controlling the heat efficiency of today's fireplaces. As a fire burns and smoke rises up the chimney, air from the room also rises along with the smoke.

The book, "Getting More Heat from Your Fireplace," states a typical three log fire in a masonry fireplace takes four times more air out of a room than the amount needed to keep the fire going. That heated room air is replaced by cold air rushing in from the outside through cracks and small openings.

Ben Casey, owner of The Fireplace Center in Ruidoso, said an open fireplace draws 250 to 400 cubic feet of air a minute up the flue and completely replaces the heated air in a house about once every hour-and-a-half.

But it doesn't have to be that way. Most people open the flue all the way when they start a fire and don't touch it all night, or even all winter. During different stages of a fire there are different amounts of combustion occurring and smoke being produced. Different damper settings can reduce that heated air disappearing up the flue.

During the early stages of a fire, when the fire is burning brightly but still creating a lot of smoke, it is best to have the damper completely open.

As the fire settles down, coals are created, flames are smaller and combustion is more complete. There is less smoke and the damper does not have to be open as wide. Later in the evening, as the fire wanes, the damper can be closed even more to prevent extra air escaping.

One of the biggest warm air losses up the flue occurs after you have gone to bed. People often go to bed with the flue wide open. As the fire dies down during the night, less and less heat is produced yet wind and natural convection are drawing heated air right up the chimney all night long.

To achieve minimum heat loss, close the damper to a point where smoke just begins to billow out. Then open it back up a little. As the evening is ending, let the fire die down to a small bed of coals and close the flue down as far as possible before going to bed.

Fire grates also can add to the inefficiency of a fireplace. Developed by Savot when he redesigned the fireplace, they were primarily intended to facilitate the burning of coal. In a fireplace they make it easier to start a fire, but they also keep it burning at a much higher rate than is efficient, sending much of the fire's heat right up the chimney.

A slower burning, smaller flamed, and more heavily coaled fire will radiate more heat into a room and less up the chimney. Some people advocate throwing away the grate. If you are not ready for such a drastic maneuver, a bed of ashes under the grate will hinder the flow of air through the fire and allow it to burn more efficiently.

The wood that you burn can also make a big difference in the heat you receive, as well as how often you have to venture out to the woodpile for more logs.

Around Ruidoso, there are several woods available with different heat values.

The junipers—one seed, Rocky Mountain, and alligator—are the most popular, according to U.S. Forest Service timber specialist Mike Funston. Alligator is the most popular, said Funston, because it is a large tree and burns and splits quite readily. One seed juniper, also called shaggy bark cedar, is popular but is hard on chain saws because of the dirt and dust that collects in the bark of the tree, he explained.

Oak has the highest heat value of locally available wood, delivering almost twice the heat of juniper, estimated Funston. It also grows in fairly large trees and splits easily. It is less abundant than the junipers and also costs more when bought from wood cutters.

Pinyon has almost as high a heat value as oak and is very popular in northern New Mexico, where it is more abundant. Around Ruidoso it is harder to find.

Funston also suggests Ponderosa pine and Douglas fir as good alternative firewoods. Douglas fir has a higher heat value than the juniper and the pine is about the same, said Funston.

Funston discounts the common belief that the resinous pine will cause a larger creosote buildup in chimneys. Citing studies by Dr. Jay Shelton, he states that the type of wood burned makes no difference in the creosote buildup. It is the condition of the wood—dry or green—that makes the difference.

Casey, however, notes that much of the Douglas fir and Ponderosa pine burned around here is scrap from construction sites. Most of that wood has not been dried and will burn with a cold, creosote-forming smoke. Creosote is the major cause of chimney fires. The pine, with its abundance of resin, takes longer to dry out, he noted.

Casey also warns people not to use their fires or wood burning stoves as incinerators. Many synthetic materials, such as glue in cardboard boxes, can collect on the inside of the chimney or emit gases into the room.

He especially warns against burning pressure-treated wood that is resistant to termites. The green-colored wood will emit deadly poisonous gas when burned, said Casey.

Funston also mentioned aspen, cottonwood, white fir, corkbark fir and Engelmann spruce as available firewood. They do not have nearly the heat value the other woods have, he said, but "If they're close and abundant, burn them." He reasons that the gasoline and time spent obtaining better wood from less accessible areas makes them less valuable than their heat value would indicate.

There are a number of products on the market that can greatly increase the efficiency of your fireplace. Hollow tubular grates take the cold air from the bottom of the fire, circulate it around the burning logs and release heated air out the top. One has to be careful that the tubes are made of heavy gauge metal to prevent burning through in a couple of winters.

Fireplace inserts of either cast iron or brass and glass can make a fireplace a truly efficient heat producer by closely controlling the air intake and combustion rate of the fires. The heavier cast iron inserts are more efficient, with better air control and more radiating mass. The brass and glass inserts are less efficient, but allow the fire to be seen.

The most efficient wood burning devices are free standing, airtight stoves that control combustion rates and radiate heat from all sides. The inserts and free standing stoves are a substantial investment, costing anywhere from $350 to $850.

For no cost, one can adjust the placement of a fire screen to change the heat production of a fire. A screen can reduce the heat into the room by as much as 30 percent, according to one study. By setting the screen as far away as safely possible from the fire, heat can circulate over the screen and into the room.

While it may be warmer to have an unscreened fire, one should never leave the room without a screen securely in place. If the wood is still green and throwing cinders, it is a good idea to have the screen on at all times.

One should never leave the house with a flaming fire in the fireplace. If the fire has only a few glowing timbers, and is well banked and securely screened, it is safer.

Of all the fires the Ruidoso Fire Department is called to, 35 percent are a result of fireplace or wood burning stove fires, states fire prevention officer Ollie Cuddy.

When disposing of fire ashes, one should be especially careful. A glowing ember can stay alive in a bank of ashes for days, only to start a new fire after being dropped in a dumpster. Close to one quarter of the fires in Ruidoso are the result of hot ashes being dropped in dumpsters, Cuddy said.

The residential fires caused by fireplaces or wood burning stoves can start in a variety of ways. Unattended, unscreened fires can shoot a spark onto a carpet or roll a whole log onto the floor. Improperly maintained or assembled stoves and chimneys are often the cause of residential fires.

Casey claims that 80 percent of the fires attributed to wood burning stoves are caused by improper assembly or maintenance. The fires can be started by improper placement of a wood burning stove, but more often begin in the chimney.

Chimneys and stovepipes are very important but often neglected parts of the wood heating system. Improper assembly of a chimney was given as the cause of the December fire in the Racquet Court Condominiums. Sections of a metal chimney should securely interlock and should be placed at least two feet from any burnable material. The chimney should also be double- or triple-walled.

If someone comes into his store with a limited amount to spend on a wood burning system, Casey recommends purchasing a high quality chimney first and a good stove next.

Once a good chimney is installed properly, it is very important to regularly maintain it. One of the most fearsome things that can happen in a home is a chimney fire.

As a fire burns, the smoke going up the flue contains incompletely oxidized wood gases. Those gases condense on the sides of the flue as soot and creosote. Creosote is a flammable tar-like substance.

When a substantial amount of creosote builds up inside a flue, a good hot fire can ignite it, creating a chimney fire. A chimney fire can burn very hot—over 3000° Fahrenheit. At that temperature the metal chimneys often melt, as does mortar in a brick chimney. Flaming balls of the molten mortar are caught up in the tremendous updraft of a chimney fire and fly out the chimney and onto the roof.

One can fight a chimney fire with a fire extinguisher or sand while waiting for the fire department, but it is much safer and easier on the nerves to keep the creosote off the flue walls.

The colder the smoke or the chimney, the quicker creosote collects. A number of factors can affect this process. The water in wet wood has to be vaporized before the wood can burn. This cools a fire considerably, causing creosote buildup. It is best to burn dry wood.

Airtight stoves keep wood burning at a very slow rate and release cool smoke that can lead to rapid creosote formation. Laura Casey at The Fireplace Center recommends opening airtight stoves and burning hot fires at least 30 minutes a day to burn creosote off the flue walls.

A chimney on the outside of the house is cooler than one in the center of the house and can collect creosote more quickly.

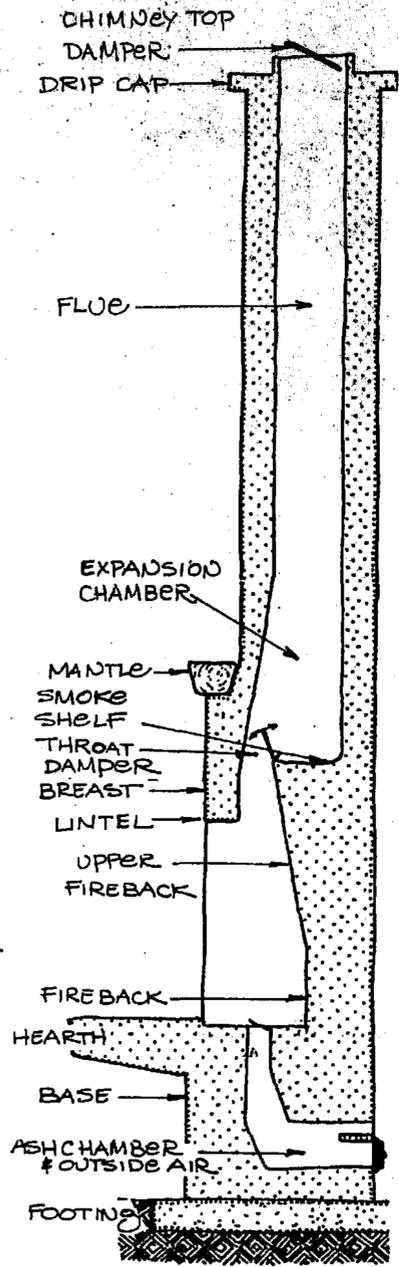

Any fireplace or wood burning stove will collect creosote on its flue walls. One should inspect the flue often and clean it or have it cleaned once a year if the fireplace is used regularly.

To inspect the flue, use a strong flashlight and a mirror to look up past the damper into the flue. Chimney sweep J. Roy Prospers recommends the flue be cleaned if there is a quarter inch or more of creosote deposited on the walls.

There are methods for cleaning a flue yourself, such as using chains attached to a rope or a burlap sack wired to a long pole. Ben Casey believes that unless you use the proper size brushes you cannot get the chimney truly clean. They can be purchased, but Casey believes a professional sweep will do the job quicker, with less difficulty and much less loose soot flying out of your fireplace and onto everything inside.

In addition, having a chimney sweep clean your chimney can bring you good luck, according to English tradition. It is supposedly good luck to touch a sweep, kiss a sweep or have your chimney swept. A bride will have a long and happy marriage if she sees a sweep walking toward her on her wedding day.

And you will have long and happy nights by the fire if you operate your wood burning units safely and efficiently.

DARNELL TOO MUCH FOR RUIDOSO

Warrior boys fall to strong Indians

by Gary Brown
Sports Writer

It was just a case of too much height and talent as the Ruidoso High School boys varsity basketball team dropped a 50-22 decision to district-leading Cobre High School on the Indians' court Saturday night.

The Warriors, now 0-6 in district 3-AAA action and 0-15 overall, went up against a Cobre squad that has lost only one game all season and has one of the state's best players in 6-6 Brad Darnell.

"We just couldn't stop Darnell," Warrior head coach Ron Geyer remarked. "He's definitely the best inside player we've gone up against all season, and they're the best team we've played all season."

Darnell scored 25 points and missed just one shot from the field as the Indians only trailed once in the contest. That came in the opening minute of action when Warrior freshman Dan Ullmann hit a bucket for a brief 2-0 Ruidoso advantage.

Cobre quickly tied the game at 2-2, went ahead 4-2 and then went into a four-corner offense hoping to draw Ruidoso out of its zone defense.

When that didn't work, the Indians went back to their usual offense the final three quarters.

Cobre held a 10-4 edge at the end of the first quarter and gradually increased it in the second period, taking a 27-11 advantage into the locker room at halftime.

"We tried to stop them," Geyer said. "However, they run their disciplined offense really well and our guys just couldn't stop Darnell."

Curtis (Palmer) did a good job guarding Darnell but he still scored. We stopped Jerry Herd as he didn't really hurt us but it was Darnell that killed us."

The second half was a replay of the first as Cobre continued its disciplined offense, setting up for the good shot and not getting many transition baskets.

The 6-3 Ullmann led the Warrior scoring with eight points and added two rebounds. Palmer only scored two points but grabbed five rebounds and battled Darnell under the basket.

Senior Grady Williamson added six points and four rebounds. Junior guards Gilbert Rivera and Cyrus Simmons added four and two points.

Besides Darnell's 25 points, the only other Indian player in double figures was Ben Trujillo with 10.

Despite the loss, Geyer was pleased with the play of his young players.

"Even though we're losing, it doesn't seem so bad because we're so young and our players are improving," he said. "Other coaches have commented on how our young players are so poised and mature."

"Curtis has done a great job the past two games. He's a lot more aggressive on the boards now. Ullmann played his best game of the season against Cobre and he's not making the freshman-type mistakes he made earlier in the season. He's playing more like a sophomore or junior now."

The Warriors will return to action Friday night with a home game against Truth or Consequences (T or C), Saturday Ruidoso will travel to Deming High School.

In the previous district game against T or C, the Warriors lost a 61-39 decision. Ruidoso lost a 75-48 decision to Deming in the first encounter between the two teams February 5, but played probably its best basketball of the season against the Wildcats.

The Ruidoso News SPORTS

Around Sports

with Gary Brown

Well, it looks like Norm Ellenberger is back in the basketball coaching business.

The former University of New Mexico (UNM) head basketball coach has been named mentor of the Albuquerque Silvers of the Continental Basketball Association (CBA).

Who are the Albuquerque Silvers? Well, they used to be the Las Vegas Silvers, but the CBA board of directors voted to expel Las Vegas from the league last week. Pat McKernan, general manager of the Albuquerque Dukes baseball team, has agreed to take control of the Silvers for the rest of this season.

The Silvers will play the rest of their games this season in Albuquerque's Civic Auditorium, with Ellenberger at the helm. If the Silvers draw well, Albuquerque will probably have a complete CBA franchise for next season.

But the big news is Ellenberger himself. The former Lobo coach is almost a legend in the Duke City because he consistently put out a winning product in "The Pit." When he was fired as head coach three years ago as a result of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) investigations, a part of UNM basketball history went down with him.

Despite the Lobo scandal, Ellenberger is still a popular figure in Albuquerque. His return to coaching should draw a large number of fans to Civic Auditorium.

Albuquerque is a big basketball town, perhaps the most basketball-oriented city in the entire country.

The annual high school state championships usually draw better than any other state in the country except Kentucky and Indiana. The Lobos always draw well, averaging over 15,000 fans a game even when they have a losing team.

If a CBA franchise has a chance of making it anywhere, it would be in Albuquerque with Norm Ellenberger coaching the team.

Here's hoping the Albuquerque Silvers (or whatever name they plan to eventually use) will make it big in the Duke City.

Staying on the subject of Albuquerque basketball, Lobo head coach Gary Colson has undergone some criticism from a sportswriter and other people in the Duke City area for the team's disappointing play this season.

This criticism is mostly unfair. Colson is in his third year as UNM coach and he's had to rebuild the program almost from start.

Last season the team finished with a 14-14 record and many people were expecting big things from the Lobos this year.

However, the Lobos suffered a near-fatal blow when guard Phil Smith was injured against the University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP) and lost for the season.

Smith was the Lobos' leading scorer and playmaker. When UNM lost his services, a major part of its offense went down with him.

It wasn't Colson's fault Smith was injured. A good coach is supposed to have enough backup talent to make up for injuries. When a team's top player is injured, however, its record will inevitably suffer.

Let's give Gary Colson some more time to prove he can produce a winner. When he took the job, he had an almost impossible task ahead of him.

Brave cagers end season

The White Mountain Middle School boys and girls basketball teams are concluding their season with makeup games at Tularosa today.

The girls A game started at 10:55 a.m., with the boys B and A games following.

White Mountain is 11-4 in boys A play and 8-4 in girls A action.

The Brave boys are paced by 5-5 Jeff Willingham and 5-9 Brian Davis, both "Junior Warrior of the Week" winners. Other top Brave players are Kirk Ryan, Kirk Taylor, Mike Grant and Justin Shaw.

White Mountain's last boys victory was a 46-41 decision over a powerful Holloman squad.

The White Mountain girls are sparked by Veralyn Platta and Kerry Gladden.

Ruidoso girls drop 52-39 tilt to Cobre

The Ruidoso High School girls varsity basketball team lost a chance to move into the thick of the district 3-AAA race when it dropped a 52-39 decision to Cobre High School on the winners' court Saturday night.

Ruidoso is now 4-4 in district action with just two games remaining. Three teams are ahead of the Warriors in the standings.

The Warriors, 9-9 overall, will play Artesia High School in a 7 p.m. non-district contest in the Ruidoso gymnasium Tuesday.

"We just didn't play good team ball," moaned Warrior head coach Sergio Castanon. "We made a lot of mental errors, threw the ball away too many times, didn't rebound and took bad shots. We did hustle a lot out there but didn't show any teamwork or leadership."

The game was close until the final quarter, when the hosts outscored the Warriors 18-8. Cobre led by a 34-31 score at the third period break and was ahead 22-18 at halftime. Ruidoso held a slight 8-6 advantage at the end of the first quarter.

"The Cobre edge was usually three or four points most of the third period," Castanon said. "In the final period, they cashed in on their free throw shooting, scoring about 10 points from the line."

Senior Claudia Branum continued her fine play for the Warriors, scoring 15 points. Senior Kody Taylor added 10 points while junior Lillian Lopez and sophomore Gia Rose each scored six points.

When the Warriors take on Artesia, they'll be trying to revenge a 68-42 defeat the Bulldogs pinned on them last month.

"Four Artesia players scored in double figures as the Warriors suffered their most one-sided loss of the season."

Castanon knows the Bulldogs are a tough team.

"If our girls play the way they did Saturday night, we won't really have a chance," he said. "We have to play more team ball. We were really just like five individuals out there against Cobre."

The Ruidoso and Artesia junior varsity squads will play at 5:30 p.m. with the varsity game following.

Ruidoso will conclude the district round-robin season next weekend with a home game against Truth or Consequences (Friday) and a contest at Deming High School (Saturday).

Junior varsity tops Cobre

A strong second-half spurt gave the Ruidoso High School girls junior varsity basketball team a 40-32 victory over Cobre High School Saturday night in the losers' gymnasium.

Ruidoso, now 6-10 on the season, will host the Artesia High School junior varsity at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday in the regular season finale. A junior varsity district tournament will probably be held at Silver City High School in the near future.

The Warriors trailed Cobre by a 14-13 score at halftime but outscored the Indians 18-12 in the second half, taking the lead for good.

Keri Thomas led the Ruidoso scoring with 12 points. Jackie Jefferson added 10 points. Tahnee Doak had six and Yelena Seelbach five.

"This was one of our best efforts," said Ruidoso coach Nancy Holland. "Every girl gave an all-out effort in the second half. We used a full-court press on them."

Warrior wrestlers finish third in tournament

by Gary Brown
Sports Writer

The Ruidoso High School wrestling team warmed up for next Friday's district 3-AAA tournament by taking third place in the New Mexico Military Institute (NMMI) Tournament Saturday in Roswell.

Friday the Warriors lost a 42-24 decision to visiting Silver City High School in a dual meet.

At the NMMI tournament, three Warrior wrestlers took second and three finished third as Ruidoso scored 89 points.

Carlsbad High School won the tournament with 234 points while Silver City was second with 123½. Roswell High School scored 83 points, NMMI 81, the Carlsbad junior varsity 55½ and Goddard High School 40½.

"I think we have a good shot at third place, although Cobre has a lot of wrestlers and has looked pretty good."

in a dual match while the Warriors have defeated NMMI twice and Cobre once.

Capitan wins twice, stays undefeated

The Capitan High School boys varsity basketball team raised its undefeated district record to 5-0 with a couple of victories over the weekend.

Friday night the Tigers toppled visiting Weed High School by a 68-59 decision. Saturday Capitan traveled to Magdalena High School and rolled over the hosts 87-72.

The Tigers had great scoring balance with five men in double figures. Parker led the way with 18 points while Davis and Sammy Castillo each tallied 13 points. Cummins added 12 points and Jon Todd Aguilar had 10.

Against Weed, the Tigers were held to a 15-15 deadlock at the end of the first quarter, and trailed by three points, 31-28, at halftime.

Parker also pulled down 11 rebounds to lead Capitan in that category. Davis, Cummins and Tim McElhannon each grabbed nine rebounds for the winners.

Robert Parker led the Tiger scoring with 20 points. Eddie Davis added 18 points and Todd Proctor 12 for the winners.

Tiger head coach Kendall Lawlis was pleased with the way his team performed against Weed and Magdalena.

However, the Tigers took command in the third period, outscoring the visitors 16-10 for a 44-41 quarter-break advantage. Capitan's offense rolled into high gear in the final quarter, outscoring Weed 24-18.

"The team hadn't played that well in the previous two games," he said. "They came back and played well this weekend, however."

Against Magdalena, the Tiger offense took charge of the contest in the first quarter, outscoring the losers by a 30-14 score.

"Parker has recovered from his leg injury, although he still isn't in 100 percent condition. Eddie Davis has played really well in recent games. I was satisfied with the way the team played."

Magdalena came back in the second period to narrow Capitan's edge to 41-35 at halftime. The game remained close in the third quarter as the Tigers held a four point lead, 59-55, at the period break.

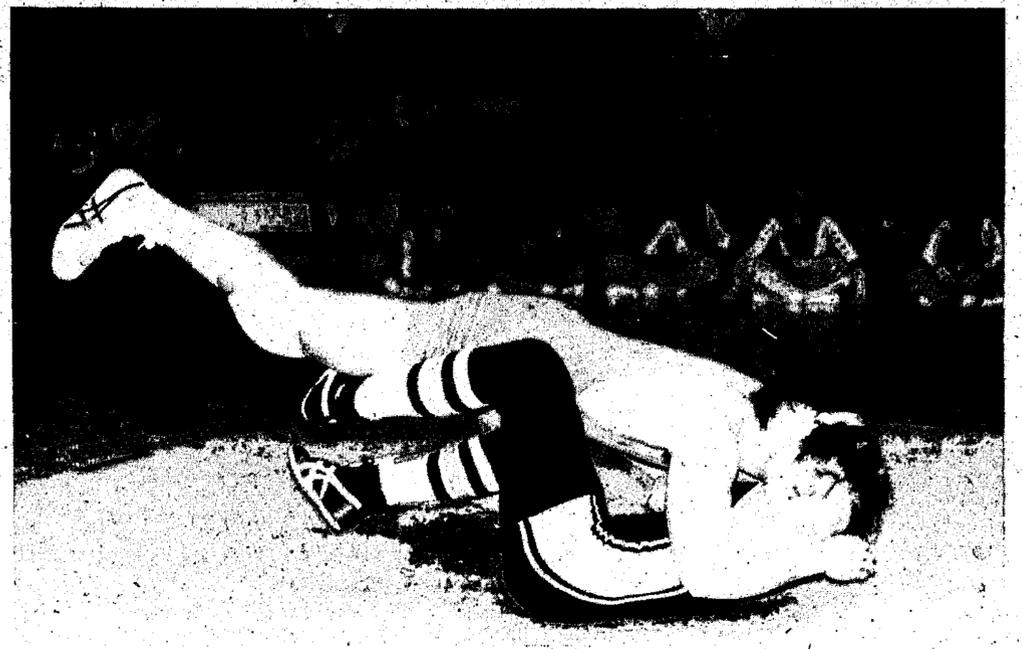

Capitan, now 14-3 on the overall season, will host Hondo School in a makeup district game Tuesday night. The Tigers will meet Estancia High School in the Capitan gymnasium Friday night and travel to Tatium High School Saturday night.

Capitan's depth and talent again took the story in the final period. The Tigers dominated the boards and pulled away for the victory. Capitan scored 23 points to 17 for Magdalena.

NOTES: The Capitan girls varsity team begins tournament action tomorrow at Weed. The Tigers will play at 6 p.m. against the winner of today's Hagerman-Hondo game. Capitan split a pair of games over the weekend, losing to Weed by a 47-39 score and beating Magdalena 32-8.

Little League cagers learn basic fundamentals

by Gary Brown
Sports Writer

Some of them may be the future Julius Erving or Larry Birds of the National Basketball Association (NBA), but for now the youths involved in the Ruidoso-Sertoma Little League basketball program are just content to learn the basic fundamentals of the sport.

The opening day of the Little League's three-week clinic was held Friday night in the White Mountain Middle School gymnasium and about 100 youths participated. "We're going to have the clinic for three weeks before starting our regular season," said Roy Seay, a coordinator for the Little League program. "Our regular season will probably consist of seven or eight games for each team. We're not sure yet if we're going to have a tournament like we did last season."

There will probably be at least 10 teams in the league. Youths from Hondo and Mescalero will also compete in the program, and they will bring the total number of kids involved to well over 100.

The clinic will be held each Monday,

Tuesday and Friday for the three weeks from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. at the middle school gymnasium. Some of the local high school and middle school coaches will give instruction at the clinic.

Ruidoso High School head boys varsity basketball coach Ron Geyer and junior varsity boys coach Elmer Chavez spoke to the youths at Friday night's clinic. White Mountain Middle School coaches Dean Hood, Jean Wright and Terry Wharton will also give instruction at the clinic.

"The coaches feel the most important thing for the kids to learn is how to shoot properly," Seay said. "That's one of the main things we're going to teach them."

The program currently has 14 volunteer coaches and four referees for the upcoming season.

"I think we're set as far as coaches go, and we plan to pay the referees this season," Seay remarked. "Last season we asked people to sponsor the teams for $100. Now we're going to ask businesses in the area to pay $200 and we'll pay the referees out of the difference."

Most of the youths are 11 to 12 years old and haven't had any competitive experience in basketball. Thus, the fundamentals the coaches will be stressing are extremely important to the youths' basketball development.

"We're going to teach the kids how to shoot properly, dribble the right way and other basic fundamentals," Chavez said. "We're going to do the things which will further their development."

Out of the youths who have signed up so far, 24 are girls, according to Seay.

The experience these youths will gain from the Little League program will help the girls and boys programs at White Mountain Middle School and Ruidoso High School in future years.

And who knows? Maybe the knowledge these youths will gain from the Little League program will guide them to a collegiate and professional career.

GETTING A LECTURE. Youths at the Ruidoso-Sertoma Little League basketball clinic Friday night at White Mountain Middle School get a lecture on basketball fundamentals from league coordinator Roy Seay (right). Over 100 youths have signed up for the league this year. The clinic will last three weeks and a short regular season will follow it. Coaches from Ruidoso High School and the middle school will give instructions during the clinic.

RHS annual blood drive Thursday

The Ruidoso High School student council will be conducting its annual blood drive this Thursday, February 17, from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the high school library.

Donor cards will be available at various locations around town as of today for those who wish to make an appointment for giving blood. Walk-ins are also welcome, but those who have been scheduled at a certain time will be able to get through faster.

United Blood Services of El Paso, Texas, will provide the technicians and medical supplies. The student council will supply refreshments for donors.

Blood donors must be 17 to 65 years of age and weigh at least 110 pounds. Consent of a parent or guardian must be provided for any 17-year-old donor.

Persons who have given blood in the previous eight weeks will not be permitted to donate again. Also, those who have had hepatitis; major surgery or transfusions within six months; dental extractions or oral surgery within 72 hours; or women who have been pregnant within six weeks should not give blood.

Donors should not fast prior to giving blood.

The student council is hoping to get about 150 donors this year. A contest between classes will be held, with the class bringing in the most donors to be awarded a prize.

Blood donor buttons will be handed out to all those participating in the blood drive.

The Dreamer

BY DANNIE STORM

Little Bret Meyer Celebrates Birthday

We come now to the celebration of the birthday of one of the younger of the February Birthday people, little Bret Meyer, son of Buck and Dianna Meyer — born February fifteen 1961 in Ruidoso.

Both his father and mother are lay readers in the Episcopal Church, and Bret has been a familiar sight in The Church of the Holy Mount since earliest infancy. From his parents he has inherited a devout Christian nature, always well behaved in church, and wonderfully kind to the other very young children.

His interest in the world around him is exceedingly keen, and he wants to help out in any way going on.

Surely Bret will follow the pattern of February people and be president some day. And we wish our little friend many happy returns of the day and all God's blessings.

Saint Anne Chapel Has A New Look

The historic little chapel of Saint Anne in Glencoe, founded by the pioneers of Lincoln County, has had its share of ups and downs.

When it was built in 1934 this stone building stood on a hill, overlooking the historic Bonnell Ranch, at the front door of which the highway passed by.

When the new highway was built, the church found itself in a bowl; and then in 1965, when Earle Creek came down, the church was filled to the windows solid with quick sand. Later on another cloudburst on the highway brought about a foot of mud into the church.

Adjustments were made to take some care of flooding; and still a big rain would bring water under the door.

How to solve this problem caused the scratching of the wisest heads.

A specialist in raising buildings to a new height was brought in, and he shook his head. The stone structure would come apart.

Finally Paul Jones thought of raising the floor about four inches. This would take care of all but a terrible flood.

So two Fridays ago, I think it was, Paul, Joe Gutierrez, John Cooper and his Man Friday, Silvestre Lopez; and an over-the-hill ridge runner, all fell to and put in the new floor.

And now today, February eleven; the pews are back in place on the new floor; and a remarkable transformation has taken place in safety from rain, more room in the church, and a great improvement in the looks of the interior.

Saint Anne's Chapel, was named after Anne Tully, grandmother of James Jr., Gerald and Geraldine Tully.

The church has become a landmark from coast to coast. People have stopped for a moment of prayer from all over the world.

The Farmers' Almanac

Just now I looked at the Farmers' Almanac to see what time of the moon it is, and to check on the weather forecasts. The little book is filled with all kinds of small features among which are humorous sayings.

I just happened to stumble on one little jingle which said:

"If you are over the hill, why not enjoy the new view?" (I liked the old view well enough.)

I don't want my brother Lynn to take offense at this one:

"An inventor is a crackpot who hits the jackpot."

Lynn Willard might look this one over:

"A veterinarian quit his practice and successfully ran for the legislature. One day, in the midst of a bitter debate, an opponent asked with a sneer: "Isn't it true that you are an animal doctor?"

"Indeed it is," he replied. "Are you ill?" Be sure to remember Valentine's Day. A word of love, like a smile, will go a long, long way."

Inside The Capitol

by Fred McCaffrey

SANTA FE—Leo asked them to settle up. They would have saved a lot of money if they had listened to him.

Back in 1961 Leo Murphy of Santa Fe was president of the state's Municipal League.

He went to Washington to call on Whizzer White, with whom he had worked successfully in the Viva Kennedy portion of the last presidential election campaign.

White at that time was Assistant Attorney General of the United States; it was only later that he became a member of the Supreme Court.

Murphy, who was planning a run for Democratic nomination for governor the next year, admits now he would have been glad to pull off a notable coup which would have advanced his career.

He was pushing the United States to settle that matter of whether or not contractors doing business with the feds were required to pay our state's gross receipts tax.

"My appeal to them," Murphy says, "was to point out that New Mexico schools were losing between fifty and sixty thousand dollars a month because places such as Los Alamos and Sandia were claiming to be exempt from such payments."

The contractors had put into escrow some $2 million at that time Murphy points out, in case they had to pay up.

They never did pay, however; and now in the early 80's, after the suit over the matter went all the way up to Whizzer White's Supreme Court, they're eventually going to have to pay off.

How much will that come to?

Well, Pete Domenici at a meeting in Albuquerque last week was talking in terms of something like $258 million to $287 million.

They should have listened to Leo and paid off back in 1961. It would have saved them a lot of dough.

Land Commissioner Jim Baca has a burr under his saddle.

He thinks elected officials, not excepting himself, should get a big salary raise.

He makes his argument very strangely. In a letter to the editor of an Albuquerque newspaper, he puts it like this:

"At the current level of pay, only two kinds of people might be interested in running for public office—those who feel that salary is not important because they are wealthy, or those who feel that salary is not important because they can make money by being corrupt."

To appreciate the irony of all that, you have to understand two things clearly:

—Baca has just run for public office—successfully, of course, which is how he got to be Land Commissioner.

—Baca is not independently wealthy.

Take his words from his own letter, therefore, and it would appear that the only logical conclusion you could come to is that he ran because he plans to enrich himself at our expense.

Undoubtedly Baca, who is as honest as the day is long, didn't really mean that.

Still, it seems to follow from what he himself said.

Maybe he should have reread his own letter before he put it into the mail.

After all, he's a former newsman, who should be able to write with precision.

Letters to the Editor

DEAR EDITOR:

Our mobile home was damaged in a fire the afternoon of January 13.

I wanted to thank the Ruidoso Fire Department for their prompt response to the call. I especially want to commend policeman Danny Stewart, who arrived quickly and put the fire out with a garden hose.

I also want to thank the EMTs, especially Rita Esquivel. My husband required hospitalization, and the work of EMTs Keith Stearnes and Jack Miller in transporting him was commendable also.

We also want to say a thank you to John and Judy Shaw and all our friends and neighbors for their help in this time.

Sincerely,

Robert and Helen Chambers

DEAR EDITOR:

It looks like this kid has let the cat out of the bag for a lot of old pilots like George Shoemaker.

The Co-Pilot and I always wondered how come the runway was always right there where it should be, when you couldn't see your hand before your face.

I'll admit the big words like "Airport Closed" threw him.

We probably opened more airports in twenty five years than all the Airport Managers and F.A.A. pit together.

He pulled this off good the never having "bent a fender" on air a piston banger or Jet.

Yours truly,
 Tom Williams

Editorial

The Ruidoso Planning and Zoning Commission should be commended for standing firm against the proposed conversion of a motel into condominiums.

Third time did not prove the charm for those requesting P&Z approval of the plan, which had been turned down twice before.

Reason for the denial has been the same each time—the motel units do not meet municipal fire codes for condominiums.

The latest effort of those seeking approval of the conversion was to suggest that a stipulation be written into the sale contract that buyers of the individual units bring them up to code.

P&Z didn't buy this argument, on the grounds that it depended on the actions of purchasers two transactions down the line.

The Planning and Zoning Commission is often referred to as "the front lines," and serving on it is acknowledged as a thankless task.

And though the present body sometimes leans toward overextending the scope of its duties, its members stick to their guns in following the book.

They are indeed the first line—against those who would just as soon do without "Mickey Mouse regulations" that protect the lives of citizens and the character of the community.—TP

On the Village beat with Tim Palmer

It is a 25-minute air hop from Guadalajara to Puerto Vallarta on the west coast of Mexico. The landing approach carried us out over the Pacific Ocean, and the blue water and white beaches sure looked good from the air.

Nothing like seeing the ocean again when it's been a year or two or three.

After landing, I struck up a conversation with the driver of the airport minibus that would take us to town. He gave me the disheartening news that all the beaches were covered with rocks because huge waves had been pounding the coast.

We had heard about the torrential rains in California, and I figured those waves were a result of the same weather. Fortunately, the condition of the beaches was fine—though some beachfront restaurants spent the week we were there shoveling sand off their floors.

Another concern for us as we rode into town was the availability of rooms. We did not have reservations, so it worried us a little to hear a fellow rider say Puerto Vallarta was 96 percent full.

We decided to try to find a room anywhere we could for that first night, then look around and see what else was available. The first downtown hotel we tried told us to come back at check-out time—2 p.m. (This was at about 12:30.)

So we set off on foot, overdressed and lugging our bags, wondering whether we would find a room. We trudged over the bridge across the Rio Cuale to a place our driver had mentioned—Hotel Molino de Agua.

We were relieved to learn from the desk clerk that a room was available for that night. The price—almost US$32—was higher than we had expected to pay, but we took it.

It was going to be a while before our room was ready, so we stashed our stuff in the office and strolled out to the beach.

The first people we met (Americans) said, "You're too white—you must have just got here." We admitted that was the case, and asked them how they liked the hotel.

They had nothing but good things to say about the Molino de Agua—the man said he has stayed there every year for the past 12. We ended up staying the week there, and enjoyed every minute.

We noticed that callers were always told the hotel was full. But walk-ins were usually accommodated. Quien sabe porque?

The hotel is a collection of buildings on spacious, nicely kept grounds. There are individual bungalows, and two-story buildings of eight units, facing the ocean. We had one of those.

Once checked in, we wasted no time putting on our bathing suits and heading for the beach. Cathy and I walked down the adjoining Playa del Sol and Los Muertos beaches to a small restaurant called the Barba Roja.

This open air eating place offered fish filets in garlic sauce, plus vegetables and bread, for 200 pesos (about US$1.35). I adjusted the position of my chair after Cathy pointed out I was sitting directly under a bunch of coconuts hanging from a palm tree.

The waiter said yes, sometimes they fall, and yes, sometimes they hit people, and yes, they hurt. So I moved. The fish was delicious.

After lunch, it was into the water. Though the waves were down from days previous, they were plenty high enough all week to make it a paradise for what I consider the greatest free sport in the world—body surfing.

What an exhilarating feeling to catch a wave just right, to look from the wave's crest through the spraying foam, to be dropped with a WHUMPF! as the wave breaks, to hydroplane forward until you feel the sand of the beach under your body.

What a scary feeling to realize you didn't catch it just right, to be hurled in a somersault, to be ground into the ocean floor, to be thankful once it passes to have only scratches and no broken bones.

And as you think about stopping, to think "one more good ride," then to have that ride deserve another, and another.

The end of our first day at Puerto Vallarta found us, along with a good many others, waiting for the sunset.

There was some cloud cover. At first, we saw only sunlight on the water far across the bay, where a mountainous point of land defines its southern end.

Then, as the sun broke through, the path of golden light on the ocean extended toward our vantage point on the seawall, until it reflected the descending golden red ball on the sands at our feet, as the waves washed over them and receded.

As a crowning touch, pelicans in flight were silhouetted against the brilliant sky.

That first day set the tone for the week. Our day went: get up when we felt like it; eat a leisurely breakfast (example: huevos rancheros with bacon and toasted bread, hotcakes, coffee, large glasses of fresh orange juice—about US$3.25 for two); sunbathe; body surf/swim; lunch; back in the ocean.

Dinner prices are commensurate with those of other meals (i.e., cheap), and we found the hotel restaurant and the other restaurants we dined at to be very good. For nightlife, there are several discos.

A couple of words of advice for travelers to that part of Mexico. First, a light sweater would be handy to have along. It was a little cool some evenings with a light breeze.

Second, respect the sun. We thought we were okay goofing on the standard suntan oils. But the amount of time spent in the sun necessitates something stronger, like a sunscreen—at least until you get a base tan.

My sunning routine consisted of putting a tape in my cassette player; cooking one side of me through one side of the tape; then flipping me and the tape. Nice.

I had insisted that we take along the music, and I bought a new tape for the trip (ABBA), because I think it helps make memories to have a soundtrack of such times.

So it was sad to read on the plane coming home that a person who sang many songs from the best years of our life was dead.

There won't be any more sunsets over any more beaches for Karen Carpenter in this life. But I guess you just gotta believe that somewhere, every sha-la-la-la, every wo-o-wo-o still shines.

Clipped comment

WONDROUS MACHINE

Five weeks after he became the first person with a permanently implanted artificial heart, Dr. Barney B. Clark remained in what the Utah Medical Center called serious but stable conditions.

The surgeons mainly responsible for the patient's care said they were concerned about his slow rate of recovery. It was reported that, in addition to previously noted periods of mental confusion, Dr. Clark also had had some degree of kidney and lung insufficiency.

None of this comes as a surprise. It would have been surprising, though, had things proceeded much differently.

This view is not founded in skepticism about the mechanical heart. Nor does it spring from any of the concerns that have been expressed as to the worth of this procedure.

The ongoing experience with the heart implant, and the patient's difficult recovery, emphasize a point sometimes taken for granted. This is that the human body, though stunningly complex, also is marvellously functional.

Though things go wrong, this is mechanism hard to match, let alone improve on. That is an important message of the implant case.—Alamogordo Daily News

READ AND WRITE

From a Taos municipal schools' promotion for the Tuesday election, defining the academic program:

"The goals are to provide a sequentially coordinated academic curriculum grades K-12 that will meet state educational standards and provide learning content which will enable district graduates to compete for admittance at any accredited institution for higher education in the country..."

Translation: teach children to read and write so they can go to any college. — The Taos News.

NEED SOUGHT

Whether it is because of financial deficits or the promise of a new revenue source, it seems states are being propelled into the gambling business.

A proposal exists for New Mexico to follow what could be a trend, with the introduction of a bill (SB11) into the Senate that calls for the establishment of a state lottery.

At first glance, it has an exciting appeal. Although New Mexico is not a Las Vegas nor an Atlantic City, gambling in one form or another is a big business here. And by adding another game of chance to our repertoire of legalized gambling, dollar signs would register in the eyes of many.

While there may be many proponents encouraging passage of the proposed lottery bill, there are also many individuals who feel gambling is a moral detriment to society.

But before opposing sides begin their moralistic arguments, the state must first determine if a lottery is even necessary. If the genuine need for extra revenue—generated by any means—doesn't exist, the state should drop the entire issue, saving itself from the trouble of a no-win moralistic argument.

Our state lawmakers must use prudent judgement in consideration of this bill. Before passing SB11, they must be assured of a true need for a lottery and must have a specific earmarked destination for its revenues.

For the state to get into the gaming business just for the sake of saying New Mexico has a lottery is wrong. To do so because there is an opportunity to strengthen the state deserves consideration by all.—WILSON KOEPPPEL, RATON RANGE

What do you know about microwave ovens?

The use of microwaves has really grown in the past 10 years. In industry, they are used to dry and cure plywood. Bakers use them to raise bread and to cook potato chips. They are used to speed the curing of rubber and resins, but the most common consumer use of microwave energy is in microwave ovens. But what are microwaves except something to heat a cup of coffee in two minutes flat? They are waves of electric and magnetic energy moving through space. They are a form of radiation, but so is the sun or a fireplace. They are a different form of radiation from X-rays. They do not have as much energy and do not have the same effects on the body. In an oven they are generated by an electron tube inside the cabinet called a magnetron. Since the metal interior of the oven reflects rather than absorbs these microwaves, they bounce back and fourth and are absorbed by the food or liquid you place in the oven. Microwaves cause the water molecules in the food to vibrate, producing heat, which cooks the food. That is why foods high in water content cook more quickly, but the degree of heating depends on shape, size, mass, and other physical features as well. Microwave energy only heats food. It does not make it radioactive.

A TRIP TO BIG T for ice cream on the house was the prize for these students in Chris Farrington's class at Nob Hill for reading the most books. DACHSHUND
If there's any dog in America that everyone would recognize, it's the Dachshund. There's no mistaking this little hound who's "two dogs long and half a dog high." The Dachshund is an original.

Dachshunds owe their distinctive shape to the German farmers' need for a tough, fearless dog that could slither into holes after the destructive badger. So they bred a dog that was long and low, with strong jaws and powerful forelegs. The Dachshund ("badger dog" in German) either chased the badger out of the hole or held it at bay till the hunter dug to his quarry. Sometimes, though, it just latched onto the badger with its powerful teeth, and the hunter removed badger-plus-dog by pulling on the Dachsy's tail! Happily, badger hunting with Dachsies was given up after a while, and the little hound took to the tamer sport of chasing rabbits.

Dachshunds appear in paintings of the 15th and 16th centuries, but the modern purebred dates to about 1860. Considered the national dog of Germany, the Dachshund was introduced to the U.S. in the 1880s, and it didn't take long to win a fanatic following. The breed hit hard times during World War I when anti-German feeling ran so high that everything German, even the beloved Dachsy, was boycotted. The dogs made a quick comeback after the war, however, and for many years they've ranked among the top five breeds.

It's not hard to figure out why. The Dachshund's size, its exceptionally clean and easily cared-for coat, and its amiable and clownish personality all combine to give it terrific appeal as a house pet. There are three varieties of Dachsies: smooth, longhaired, and wire-haired, smooth by far the most popular. There are also two sizes—standard and miniature (under nine pounds).

Happy, alert little dogs who very-much want to please, Dachshunds love to learn tricks, and anything that involves retrieving will absorb them endlessly. Trouble is, they often don't know when to stop. They bear a little watching in any kind of physical activity that might injure their backs. The Dachshund's elongated back weakens easily, and slipped discs and other painful spinal ailments are common to the breed.

Dachshunds still have some of the old badger-hunting instincts. They love to dig, especially in lawns and gardens. They really should have a section of the backyard to call their own, where they can dig to their heart's content. Dachshunds enjoy digging so much they often try to get other dogs in on the act, showing them just how it's done.

Some of the old tenacious courage is still there, too. Though a dachshund rarely weighs more than 25 pounds, these little dogs don't back down easily. One Dachsy fought and killed a rabid skunk that was attempting to attack an elderly neighbor. Bitten during the fierce battle, the brave little dog had to be put to sleep but he had saved a human life.

But fighting is not really the Dachshund's nature. These are happy-go-lucky, friendly dogs, one of the most even-tempered of all breeds. They love children, they love old people, they love everybody. And everybody loves them.

Miscellaneous U.S. Travel Tips
If you're going to be traveling within the U.S., some lesser-known facts can make the difference between a good vacation and a great one. Here are some examples.
Boston tourists should forget their cars and use "The Shuttle," a circular bus route that takes in all the city's major sights without the hassle of parking or traffic. You can get on or off as many times as you like.
In Savannah, Georgia many charming old homes have recently been converted into small inns. This gives a lot more of the "real South" feel than would a stay in a big motel, and prices are similar.
Monument Valley, Utah is one of the country's great national wonders, but it's hard to get around—you really need a jeep. Best bet is to stay at Goulding's Monument Valley Lodge, right near the park entrance; they arrange day tours of the park by jeep, including lunch.
In Washington, D.C. there are cave-like foundations underneath the Lincoln Memorial, complete with stalactites, and graffiti left by the original workmen. Free tours are given throughout winter and spring; bring a flashlight, and reserve in advance.
Whether you're going near or far, your travel specialists are here to help. Call Ruidoso Travel.

MEDIA MONITOR

Jaclyn Smith is again an 'angel'

Jaclyn Smith is returning to prime-time TV following her maternity leave. Looking as radiant as ever, Miss Smith will be seen this Sunday and Monday as lawyer Jennifer Parker in NBC's "Rage of Angels," adapted from Sidney Sheldon's best-selling novel.

"I read the book and loved the character because she is a survivor who accomplishes quite a bit," the former "Charlie's Angel" recently told a news conference.

"It's much different than doing a biography of Jackie Kennedy," Miss Smith said, referring to her role as the former First Lady in an 1981 ABC-TV movie. "Rage of Angels" goes behind closed doors and gets inside the character's head. I dreamed of doing this character."

When asked whether she'll ever do a series again, the 35-year-old actress said, "I don't see myself going back to that kind of hectic pace."

"My son Gaston is at an age that he can be with me all the time, which he was when we did 'Rage of Angels' in New York."

"Actually, if I was to do a series again, now would be the ideal time to do it, before he goes to school. I have no definite plans to do a series now, but it's not out of the question.

"But once he's of school age, I want to take him to class and pick him up. You see, more than anything, I wanted to be a mother and to me he is a miracle."

Miss Smith also said she had to turn down film roles ("Moonraker") because of her commitment to her "Charlie's Angels" contract. She said she did not want to break her contract as did Farrah Fawcett and Kate Jackson.

Miss Smith, who is finally getting an opportunity to stretch her acting capabilities, added that the "Angels" were treated rather superficially by film and TV producers.

BETTY THOMAS

WILD WEST

Kirk Douglas is sitting at the dinner table on his multiacre ranch, which looks like it might be the Ponderosa. He's wearing the standard Western garb that reinforces that idea, with a six-gun and Winchester rifle always handy nearby. One might almost expect a group of Indians to come riding through the background.

But the only thing that might pass through this background would be a hopping kangaroo. This ranch is in Australia, even though the time setting is 1888, vintage Wild West days. Douglas says to his dinner guests, "They said 'Go West, young man,' so I did — all the way to Australia!"

Although the film is titled "The Man from Snowy River" this motion picture is another import made "down under" and released here. It's a Western in the sense of cattle drives and wild horses, but done in a manner unlike the domestic variety of Western.

"The Man from Snowy River" might better be titled "The Boy Who Becomes the Man from Snowy River." This is a rite-of-passage film where the boy must learn to fend for himself. He faces his obstacles, overcomes his fears and triumphs in the end. He even manages to find love along the way.

This is a harmless, hokey bit of Australian adolescent fiction, playing as simply as a Golden Book for young readers. The story is as predictable and simplistic as such a book might be, but it's just as easy and untaxing to take.

THE MAN FROM SNOWY RIVER from 20th Century-Fox. Directed by George Miller. Screenplay by John Dixon. Starring Kirk Douglas, Tom Burlinson, Sigrid Thornton. Rated 'PG'
