Lawmakers 'just say yes' to teachers

The New Mexico Legislature increased taxes, restructured a state budget, provided modest pay raises for public employees and approved significant public school reform programs during a four-day special session which ended early Tuesday.

According to Associated Press reports, Governor Garrey Carruthers commended the Legislature for what he said was a great effort.

"I think all and all it was a good session," he said.

"All in all it went like the governor and the leadership had planned it," said State Representative Ben Hall on Wednesday. Hall said he and most legislators went to Santa Fe on Friday expecting to be home on Sunday.

Hall said the leadership, Democrats, had made an agreement with the governor, but the Senate got into an argument again and carried the special session on longer than expected.

The legislators rather reluctantly returned to Santa Fe a month after adjournment of the regular session to complete some unfinished business and rebuild a budget that Carruthers had stripped to basic essentials through line-item vetoes.

The agenda for the special session, developed in early March during conferences between the governor and legislative leaders, included 10 specific items of legislation. Nine of the issues specified in Carruthers' proclamation calling the special session were approved, some with modifications.

Most attention was focused during the session on tax bills and a compensation plan for state workers and public school and post-secondary education employees.

Senate Bill 1 substitute, a dual-purpose measure, increases the state gross-receipts and compensating tax by one-quarter percent, from 4 1/2 to 5 percent, and appropriates $59 million for salary increases for public employees.

The tax increase will go into effect July 1 and increase state general fund revenue by about $45 million during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

The bill allocates $35 million to finance an average 5 percent pay raise for public school employees, $8 million for an average 2.8 percent raise for higher education employees and $15.5 million to implement a new pay plan for state government workers. Money also is provided to increase pay of employees of the state's district attorneys and educators who work for the Youth Authority and the Health and Environment Department.

Hall was among the 24 representatives who voted against the tax.

Ding, ding, ding goes the trolley-if feds OK cash

by FRANKIE JARRELL
Ruidoso News Editor

It took two tie votes, but Mayor Victor Alonso set the stage Monday for a trolley system through the Ruidoso area.

Rick Simpson and Jim Streckof S&S Bus Lines asked the Ruidoso Village Council for support and money to help them acquire a federal grant to install and operate a transportation system here.

Simpson, who has owned and operated a bus company that has the Ruidoso school district bus contract for 17 years, provided Mayor Alonso and the six councilors with a detailed report of the proposed trolley service.

VICTOR ALONSO

In the end, Councilor Ron Andrews made a motion to deny Simpson's request for a village guarantee of $37,550 for the local share on operating funds. He offered to help Simpson come up with those funds through private sources, including the Lincoln County Hospitality Association and other groups.

Councilos Al Junge and Barbara Duff agreed with Andrews that the trolley service is a good idea, but all three voiced concerns over voting on funds until they can review the budget.

Councilors Bill Karn, J.D. James and Jess Stinson voted to guarantee the local share, and the mayor got his first chance to break a tie.

"Welcome to the big game," said Andrews to the mayor before Alonso cast the deciding vote.

Since Simpson had to submit his application for the Chapter 18 federal funds on Tuesday, attorney John Underwood recommended the council also make a motion to approve the request, so that a letter could be submitted with the application.

And that led to another tie vote, with councilors Karn, James and Stinson voting "yes" and councilors Junge, Duff and Andrews voting "no."

"I can't in good conscience tonight buy a pencil," said Junge, noting that the council will be faced, going into the 1990-91 budget, with looking for $1 million.

Alonso said it was good to have the amount of discussion that prefaced Monday's decision.

"We're asking some tough questions," said Alonso.

The council, before approving Simpson's request, listened to his description of the old-fashioned, closed trolleys he intends to purchase and operate.

"It's a real nice, nostalgic-looking trolley," said Simpson, who went on to describe the many benefits of his plan to tourists, locals and businesses.

Simpson said he's seen a trolley service like the one he plans in Laughlin, Nevada.

The Chapter 18 federal grant he's seeking is for $199,891. The capital outlay portion, $187,750, is at 80 percent federal and 20 percent local share. That local share, about $37,550, is what Simpson was asking the village to guarantee.

He provided figures for administrative costs of $61,900, with 65 percent, $40,235, federal and 35 percent, $21,665, local. Simpson said his company can bear the local administrative costs.

Simpson projected operating expenses would end the first year in a deficit of $18,912, with the federal government asked to cover that on a 50-50 match. That would leave the feds putting up $9,456 for operations and S&S Bus Lines providing the other half.

Simpson said the projections were easy to figure since he has been in the bus business so long. He said he bought his first bus in 1972, and now owns 21. Besides the school bus contract, Simpson, also through S&S, operates a ski shuttle to Ski Apache and a tour bus that has been to Laughlin, Nevada, and to Dallas, Texas.

P&Z approves just one variance request

The Ruidoso Planning and Zoning Commission met in a regularly scheduled meeting on Monday and approved the only item on the agenda.

The commission approved a request by Leo Martinez for a variance at lots 17, 18, and 19 of Block F, Ruidoso Pine Lodge Subdivision.

The variance request was tabled at P&Z's last meeting of March 5, because a neighbor of Martinez had objected to the variance because it would cause additional flooding on his property.

In his report to the commission, planning administrator Cleatus Richards said that the variance should be approved with the understanding that an existing retaining wall on the property be raised in height so it would divert drainage from the neighboring properties and the subject property.

The commission approved the request with the condition the retaining wall be raised two courses above street grade to divert flood or drainage water.

In his staff report Richards told the commissioners the village council had set April 10 as the date for a public hearing on the Flood Hazard Amendments and the Building, Zoning, Subdivision Code Amendments. He also said there will be a joint commission and council workshop on the amendments at 3:30 p.m. on April 2, following the regular commission meeting.

Norm Armundsen speaks the universal language of racing

Special to The News
from Sunland Park Racing

The job of racing secretary at Ruidoso Downs is one of the toughest, most pressure packed positions in the horse racing world.

Because Ruidoso Downs is one of the premier Quarter Horse tracks in the nation, the importance and integrity of the racing secretary's job is emphasized just that much more as the needs of horsemen, management and fans must be delicately balanced.

Norm Amundson handles the job with the efficiency of a grizzled veteran and the enthusiasm of a two-year-old colt on the track for the first time.

"It's a challenge," Amundson said. "Every day and every race is different, that's what makes this business so fascinating."

To get to the pinnacle of any chosen profession involves hard work, luck and a few career twists and Amundson is no exception. But, he never dreamed his small beginnings would turn into a career that would lead him to the racing secretary's job for a track that is recognized as having the richest and finest Quarter Horse programs in the world.

Racing came calling for Amundson early in his life. When Lloyd Shelhamer built Beaumont Race Track near Belgrade, Montana, in 1954, Amundson was only 11 years old. He began his career in horse racing the following year by selling and hawking programs at the track.

His father, Norm Sr., was heavily involved in the operation of the track and his son showed enough talent and desire to become the track announcer at age 15, one of if not the youngest, in the country.

"There is a universal language among racetracks ... horsemen are basically the same wherever you go."

Since then Amundson estimates he has called some 15,000 races in six different states and has amassed 30 years of experience behind the microphone.

Most people would see that as a career in itself, but for most of those years Amundson had to wear another hat and serve a dual role as racing secretary.

"My first experience as a racing secretary was in 1964 at the Western Montana Fair, he said. "The buck stops at the racing secretary's desk. You have to be organized and know all your horses and trainers on the grounds, so you can fill the races with a limited number of horses."

That stint in Missoula began a trip on the fair circuit that included the Northwest Montana Fair in Kalispell, the Ravalli County Fair in Hamilton, and the Southern Idaho Fair circuit.

Horse racing wasn't a full time job for Amundson, though, as he was attending the University of Montana majoring in journalism with hopes of becoming a sports broadcaster. He served as Sports Information Director for the university's athletic department and as Publicity Director for the boys high school track meets in the state.

Then in 1967 Amundson's career took on an entirely different twist as he entered the U.S. Army. He served in the Vietnam conflict and earned the Army Commendation Medal in 1969.

Upon his return to civilian life Amundson entered Eastern Montana College in Billings with the idea of becoming a teacher.

I still didn't think racing could become a year-round profession so I was going to become a teacher to carry me through the winter months," he said.

In the summer months he was very much in demand. He started back on the racing circuit from 1969 through 1972 and went to Capital City Racing in Helena, the Marias Fair in Shelby, Central Wyoming Fair in Casper, Wyoming, the Montana State Fair in Great Falls, and the Yellowstone Exhibition in Billings.

"Probably one of my proudest moments in horse racing was helping to develop Billings as the premier meet in Montana," he said.

At Great Falls and Billings, Amundson's past journalism experience gave him the opportunity to wear another hat, publicity director, one that he would wear for eight consecutive meets.

Amundson excelled in both his summer and winter vocations. He was named Man of the Year in the horse racing industry for the Rocky Mountain Association of Fairs in 1971 and earned Outstanding Service Medal in Physical Education at Eastern Montana.

By 1975 racing began to take up more and more of his time.

Then in 1979 horse racing came into Amundson's life full blast as he was named racing secretary at Playfair Race Course in Spokane, Washington, a position that carried year round duties.

That association would last 10 years as Amundson helped Playfair enjoy some of its best years on record.

Everyone's job was terminated at Playfair on December 31, 1988.

When you're good at what you do, the offers line up and the next to call for his services was Ruidoso Downs.

After the Ruidoso season, Sunland Park was the recipient of Amundson's talents as he was loaned to the track for the winter months to help out in the publicity department where he writes stories and rotates as handicapper, host for the satellite uplink show, and the track's cable replay show.

Is there any difference between Montana and Ruidoso?

"There is a universal language among racetracks, and horsemen are basically the same wherever you go," he said.

Norm Amundson's 30-plus years in the racing business have made him very fluent in that language.

In his application, Simpson described plans to use the capital outlay to purchase two trolleys that he'll run from the Ruidoso Downs Race Track to the Inn of the Mountain Gods and to Swiss Chalet with stops all through town. One trolley will start at the track and the other at Swiss Chalet, and the two will continue back and forth all day.

Simpson said the route should take about an hour and 15 minutes. He also indicated he'll be willing to add to the route, and might even provide service to the Sierra Blanca Regional Airport. But Simpson said he has plans to apply for another grant next year to purchase a van that would be more suitable for hauling airline passengers between the regional airfield and other destinations.

"This is like our ski bus shuttle we run. That's as flexible as a rubber band," said Simpson.

"I think it would benefit Ruidoso and the whole area," said Simpson. He said the previous administration had endorsed the plan, but hadn't yet heard or acted on a request for funds.

Interim village manager Leon Eggleston explained that the village had considered applying for the Chapter 18 grant. If the village had been successful in such a request, the plan would have been to contract through a private operator, such as Simpson, to provide the transportation services.

Eggleston said the federal government encourages public/private partnerships in mass transportation. After meeting with Simpson and Streck, Eggleston said village staff believed it would be better to support that application than to go out for a municipal grant.

Although the village did guarantee the local share on capital outlay, it was understood that Simpson will repay the money if he comes up with enough other funds. He already has endorsements from MainStreet Ruidoso and a number of other businesses and organizations including the Convention and Visitors Bureau and the Ruidoso Downs Race Track.

"Mr (Wendell) Chino said he would write us a letter of support from the tribe. We already have a letter of support from the county," said Simpson.

"It couldn't be a reality this summer," said Simpson. The funding, if approved, will become available in November.

Simpson said he intends to charge passengers a $1 fee each time they ride the trolley, whether it's from one end to the other and back, or from place to place along the way.

Andrews said the Armadillo buslines in Austin, Texas, charges 25 cents a ride and makes up the difference through businesses and advertising.

"Have you actually asked if anybody would be willing to kick in?" he asked.

Simpson said he figures each trolley will travel about 256,000 miles a year. He said the trolleys, built much like school busses, can travel about 400,000 miles without overhauls if they are properly maintained. The trolleys he wants to buy have John Deere truck chassis and Cummins diesel engines.

Even though the route can be changed at any time, Simpson stressed that the operation cannot be seasonal. He said the federal government has set up the Chapter 18 program for year-round public transportation, and doesn't like seasonal operations.

"If I had to operate full steam year-round, I can guarantee I wouldn't make it," said Alonso.

"All we could do is kind of crystal ball it and make a semi-educated wild guess," said Simpson in describing what to expect from the year-round operation.

He said he figured 80 days maximum passenger loads declining down to 30 percent, 10 percent and even down to five percent. Simpson said his $1 fare is the same amount charged for a similar operation in the resort town of Taos.

"I like the idea that it's tourist-oriented, but it's also real transportation," said Alonso.

Andrews said businesses might be willing to purchase tokens to give to customers, noting he would consider doing that.

"Would you like to buy some right now?" asked Simpson.

On further discussions over advertising and ways to come up with the local match, Simpson said he intended to pursue the grant with or without village participation. He said the application would just look better with a village guarantee.

Junge asked Eggleston if the village had the money.

"Gentlemen, you are the finance board; you'll have to make that decision," said Eggleston.

Junge recalled that past attempts to implement transportation services had been unsuccessful, but this might be different.

Marvel Norton, one of just three audience members on hand for the meeting, questioned if the council has the authority to act as a banker for private enterprise.

"I'm just wondering if they council is opening a bag of worms," she said.

Eggleston explained that the council has the authority to go into partnership with businesses only on Chapter 18 funds.

"I would prefer that it be private enterprise," said Andrews, adding that it's not uncommon for government entities to subsidize transporation for the public.

Without public transportation, the concept of expanding the tourist area is a moot point, said Andrews, continuing to say that he needed to know more about the 1990-91 budget before providing funds.

Alonso reminded the council that the village is also being asked to subsidize an airline.

Village attorney John Underwood told the council that the village's maximum exposure on the guarantee is $37,550. It was further discussed if the village would have the first or second lien on the trolleys if the business should fail.

Underwood said the village could probably recover the $37,550 if the enterprise didn't continue.

But the council agreed the chances are good that the trolley business is needed and will be used by tourists and locals.

Councillor J.D. James said the trolley would also fit in well with attempts to attract retirees to Ruidoso.

"This would be ideal," said James.

Councillor Stinson told Simpson to be sure and ask for some funds from the Inn and the racetrack.

"I don't believe in sending transportation all the way out to the Inn for nothing," said Stinson.

At last, Mayor Alonso asked councillors to make a decision.

"This is a tough job fellows, let's earn our pay," he said.

But in the end, the mayor had the final say.

In discussions over the two tie votes, Councillor Junge recalled a time when he found himself alone on many five-to-one votes.

The first five-to-one vote on this new council was recorded in the first regular meeting, when Councillor Karn cast the only "no" vote on a motion that would have changed two village boards.

Karn said he didn't want to have to pay for publication again, and preferred to make amendments to the original proposal.

Councillors Ron Andrews and Barbara Duff check out some figures during Monday's special meeting. The council approved a $37,550 guarantee for S&S Bus Lines to use in its application for a federal transportation grant. The plan is for two trolleys to operate throughout the Ruidoso and Ruidoso Downs area.

LCMC offers scholarship

Lincoln County students interested in a health care career are eligible for up to $2,000 in scholarship money from the Lincoln County Medical Center.

The scholarship is for $500 each year, and is renewable for up to four years.

The deadline for applications for the scholarship is Sunday, April 15.

Applications are submitted to the scholarship committee of the Lincoln County Medical Center Board of Trustees.

Any student that is a graduate of a high school within Lincoln County and who plans to pursue a career in health care is eligible. Students do not have to seek a medical degree to be eligible. Any health care field, such as nursing, medical technology, respiratory therapy, physical therapy, occupational therapy, pharmacy, oncology, or any of the other, many health care related fields are appropriate.

The student need only choose a two- or four-year accredited institution for the schooling.

The applicant needs to submit a letter of application with three letters of recommendation; two from classroom teachers, and one from a school administrator.

When an applicant is chosen, his or her grades will be reviewed annually. The recipient must maintain a minimum grade point average of 2.8 to be eligible for renewal.

The recipient must also submit an annual letter during the summer months to show grades and the recipient's intentions to continue the scholarship for the next school year.

For more information, contact the administration department at the Lincoln County Medical Center, at 257-7381.

Birthing classes begin at local hospital for expectant families

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

A class for first time expectant mothers can help eliminate anxiety and ensure a positive birth experience.

The first childbirth class offered at the Lincoln County Medical Center (LCMC) by certified child birth instructor Jim Ann Rasco, is already under way, but another will be offered beginning May 16.

The goal of the class is to help new mothers develop realistic expectations of the birthing process, and to reduce anxiety, which ultimately reduces labor pain, said Rasco.

Most first-time expectant mothers do not have a clear idea of what goes on during birth, which contributes to fear of the experience, said Rasco.

The birthing class provides the expectant mother, and her partner, with the skills and information necessary for the couple to take an active role in the birth of a child.

The class meets once each week for six weeks and costs $25. The course is sponsored by LCMC and the LCMC Auxiliary.

Expectant mothers and their partners are encouraged to enroll during the sixth or seventh month of the pregnancy.

The class includes relaxation and breathing techniques to help facilitate labor. Materials include booklets and videos to help the expectant mother to develop a more realistic idea of what the birthing process is all about, said Rasco.

Partners are strongly encouraged, and can either be a spouse, friend, or relative.

To enroll or to obtain more information on the class, call LCMC at 257-7381.

Just say yes

package. The final vote was 42 for and 24 against, with four representatives absent. That breaks down to 38 Democrats and four Republicans favoring the package and 20 Republicans and four Democrats voting "no."

"I don't mind giving anybody a raise if we've got the money," said Hall. "I have a problem with voting a tax increase to increase somebody's salary."

"We had enough money over the past year to give the teachers a raise and cut out the pork barrel bill and not have to raise taxes," said Hall. "The people who have the votes, the Democrats, decided that 'no' we'll do the pork barrel bill and then raise taxes to give a raise."

"I don't have any problem with giving state employees a raise, so long as we have the money," stressed Hall, a Republican who represents Ruidoso and Artesia.

"When we're spending money we don't necessarily have to spend and then raise taxes for a salary increase it just goes against my grain. It boils down to the fact that you pay as you go or put another burden on the taxpayers."

Hall said legislators put $96.6 million back in the budget that the governor had vetoed.

Ruidoso got its $130,000 for the convention center restored, but it's still subject to the governor's veto.

"The governor promised the so-called liberal democrats of the Senate that he wouldn't touch any capital outlay programs if he got what he wanted," said Hall, predicting the Ruidoso allocation will make it past the governor's office.

"If you'll look at the capital outlay package, most of it stays in the Rio Grande and up north," said Hall.

The final measure passed during the special session was House Bill 6, which provides $17.07 million from the general fund and other sources for capital projects.

The capital outlay bill from the regular session provided $48 million for 195 projects throughout the state. Carruthers signed this bill but only after rejecting 135 projects costing $12 million.

HB6 restores most of the projects vetoed by the governor and adds other projects that were not included in the bill from the regular session.

But teacher pay was getting the most attention throughout the session, with picketers out in force on Friday, a school day. By Sunday, Hall said there was just one picketer at the Roundhouse.

Lots of Santa Fe area teachers got out of school early Friday, and while being paid by their school districts, picketed the Roundhouse.

"They were carrying those little signs and calling us every name you could think of," said Hall. "It got pretty nasty."

Hall said most of the demonstrations were instigated by the union in Albuquerque. He said he didn't see any teachers from his district taking part in the rowdy demonstrations.

Even after the pay hike was passed, some Albuquerque teachers were considering a strike.

"If they want to strike, just let them get after it. I sure won't stop them," said Hall.

Although the Legislature intends for the money allocated to go to five percent teach pay increases, each school board has local control over the money.

"It isn't mandated, it's totally up to the school board," said Hall. "When we mandated the $2,200 raise we caught all kinds of flack for meddling in local schools," he added.

School boards figure their own budgets.

Hall said Republicans came up with an alternate plan to provide for teacher pay raises, but that just didn't make it past the leadership.

"The governor told us two sessions ago that he would not ask for another tax increase during his administration," recalled Hall.

"He did; Republicans didn't like it; and we let him know we didn't like it."

The compensation plan initially was a part of House Bill 2, the supplemental Appropriations Act, but was removed and transferred to SB1.

As passed by the Senate, SB1 authorized $33.2 million for an average 4) percent pay raise for public school teachers. The House boosted the appropriation to $35 million, the same amount that had been in HB2, to finance an average 5 percent increase.

The supplemental Appropriations Act as finally approved authorizes expenditures of $37 million, the amount stripped by the governor from the 1990 General Appropriations Act passed during the regular session.

With line-item vetoes Carruthers had cut $23 million in increased funding for a wide variety of social and human-services program, $10 million from public school funding and lesser amounts from other areas.

The supplemental Appropriations Act restores $18 million for the social programs and $8 million of the $10 million reduction in public school funding.

It also includes $4.1 million to finance three of Carruthers' 21st Century education initiatives-an extended school year, extended teacher contracts and a plan giving parents a choice in selecting the school that their children attend.

The $8 million restored for public school funding will implement the provisions of House Bill 3 of the special session. The bill amends the 1986 Public School Reform Act to provide for mandated class-size reductions to be phased in over a seven-year period beginning at the kindergarten level next school year.

It also increases funding for bilingual education programs and provides additional money to districts which expect an enrollment growth of at least 1 percent next fall.

It will cost $3.4 million to meet the required class-size reductions at the kindergarten level, with most of the money used to hire additional teachers and aides. If the bill had not passed, it would have cost an estimated $20 million next school years to implement the classsize reduction requirements for kindergarten and first grade. Under terms of the bill, the first-grade reductions will be implemented in 1991-92.

In his call of the special session, Carruthers proposed a gross-receipts tax increase and a 4-cent per package increase in the cigarette tax to generate $50 million needed to achieve a balanced budget. The cigarette tax increase was rejected, but as an alternative the Legislature increased the motor vehicle excise tax from 3 percent to 3 1/2 percent. The $4 million additional revenue will go to the general fund.

Carruthers also asked the Legislature to consider another tax proposal—a local option property tax levy to provide supplemental funds for public school programs. Rep. Dick Minzner, D-Albuquerque, sponsored the local option property tax bill which the House rejected by a vote of 37-29.

Most small schools opposed the local option property tax levy. During a meeting last week in Ruidoso, superintendent Sid Miller said that measure would "disequalize" school systems.

It was learned during a local meeting, that the local option property tax proposal could have cause differences of from $90 to $200 per student among different school districts.

The Legislature approved Carruthers' proposal for a minority doctoral assistance program, which will provide state financial aid for qualified minority students at state institutions to earn advanced degrees at out-of-state universities. In exchange, the students must agree to return to New Mexico to teach.

A bill establishing a Corrections Department building fund also was passed. The fund would consist of money appropriated by the Legislature from the state penitentiary's land and permanent fund income. The department would use the money to acquire, by lease or other means, buildings for an office complex, a training academy and a special incarceration facility.

Interim director takes on the leadership at LCMC

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The interim administrator at the Lincoln County Medical Center believes the county is fortunate to have the medical facilities it does, and it is very important for the community to support it.

Valerie Miller, a private medical consultant from Albuquerque, is under contract as the interim administrator at the Lincoln County Medical Center (LCMC) until a new administrator is hired.

Former administrator Steve Keller tendered his resignation during the February meeting of the LCMC board of trustees.

Until the new administrator is hired, Miller faces the challenge of improving LCMC's image in the community, tackling a more than $400,000 deficit, and continuing the vigorous physician recruitment already in place.

Miller came to LCMC highly recommended by Southwest Community Health Services (SCHS) the parent organization for LCMC.

She has an extensive background in nursing and hospital administration, and for two years was the director of quality management for SCHS.

Addressing rumors throughout the community that LCMC is about to close is a high priority for Miller, who believes it is very important for the facility to regain the confidence of the community.

Already 10 or 11 individuals have applied for the administrator position at LCMC, and the vacancy has not even been officially advertised. Such a response to the vacancy is indicative of the facility's viability, said Miller.

Although Miller couldn't say what departing physicians were telling their patients, she said it is important that people know that doctors leave for many reasons and also realize that not all the physicians left.

"It's very unsettling for someone to lose a physician," she said.

It is important for the community's viability as well that LCMC remain operating at its current level of service.

"When people look at a community, they want to know about the schools and the medical facilities," said Miller.

Lincoln County already has a very broadbased level of medical expertise that isn't found in many rural areas.

While the deficit of more than $400,000 is not unusual among rural facilities, it is not livable for the longrun, said Miller.

"The fixed costs need to spread over a greater volume," she said. "The people in the county need to use their local hospital."

Miller said she has already approached LCMC employees for their input on how to reduce costs to the facility without compromising the level of care.

"We will not close any departments," she said. "We need the community hospital health care system."

Local services are necessary because only a minority of individuals need high level acute care which generally is found only in large urban hospitals. Most people require the level of care already present in Lincoln County, said Miller.

"The way the hospital will survive is if the community uses it," she said.

Miller trained as a nurse at the Cherring Cross Hospital in London, England, and graduated as a registered nurse in 1966. She then went to Dallas, Texas, with plans to return to London, but liked the southwest so much she stayed.

She spent eight years at the Presbyterian hospital in Dallas. In 1974 she went to Trinity University in San Antonio, Texas, and earned a master's degree in hospital administration.

She interned at Albuquerque Presbyterian planning only to stay a year, but the experiences in acute care, her area of original nurse training, encouraged her to stay. In 1981 she went to Caseman Presbyterian and was there until 1987, when she went to work in the corporate offices of SCHS as the director of quality management.

She married in 1988 and continued working for SCHS until February 1989, when she resigned to begin her own consulting practice.

Miller is also contracted to help establish a quality assurance and quality management program at the Los Lunas hospital, which lost its Medicare/Medicaid certification.

Her husband operates a commercial property management firm in Albuquerque. While in Ruidoso, Miller is staying at a friend's home in Alto.

School Board seeks input in the district "super" selection

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Ruidoso Municipal School District employees have until Friday, March 30, to submit input on the selection of a new superintendent.

A superintendent search calendar was released by the superintendent's office, and input in the selection process will be accepted from district employees until the March 30 deadline.

Input regarding experience, qualifications, characteristics, or other information which employees feel is relevant to the selection process may be submitted.

The deadline for applications is Friday, April 13.

Superintendent Sid Miller, who will retire this June, said no applications have been received yet.

After the application deadline, the school board will meet for a special meeting for a closed session review of the applicants to select the semi-finalists.

The board interview content and format will be determined at that time as well.

Between April 17 and April 26, the board will investigate the chosen semi-finalists. On April 27, the board will conduct a closed session to select four or five finalists to be interviewed. The names of the finalists are expected to be announced to the public at this time.

The interviews will be conducted between April 30 and May 5, and the appointment of the new superintendent will be made May 8.

A consultant, Jim Miller, selected by the state school board was selected to develop the search calendar, establish salary ranges, and do the advertising. Miller was contracted for about $300 to set up those preliminary steps. He is no longer serving as a consultant to the district as he has fulfilled the requirements of his contract.

Warrior golf teams compete in Belen Invitational Tourney

The Ruidoso High School boys and girls golf teams made their 1990 debut on Monday at the Belen Invitational Golf Tournament.

The team finished fifth out of seven teams in the triple-A division.

Scores for the boys team included Brook Henderson, 105; Aaron Ford, 106; Sam Gumbert, 111; Marc Beatty, 122; and Matt Cantu, 135.

The girls team was led by Michelle Morris with a 106; Molly Long, 111; Valerie Rankin, 122; and Ashley Fryer, 122.

Since this week is spring break in the Ruidoso school system, most of the golf team members were out of town and unable to compete in Belen. Because of the large number of golfers gone for the Belen tournament, the Warrior coaches designated the event a scrimmage, so the squad will still have 10 tournaments to qualify for state.

"I thought we played OK considering that of the five boys that went to the tournament, only one had any varsity experience, and that was only one tournament," said Warrior coach Ridge Bowden.

"We shot 444 Monday and 315 last year, so we obviously have a long way to go.

"But these kids are so much farther along than the kids who graduated last year were as sophomores and freshmen, we should be in really good shape in a year or so," Bowden added.

The girls situation is very much like the boys with very little experience returning for 1990.

"Our girls did a great job considering that three of the four have played a total of three weeks," said Kent Beatty, the team's assistant coach. "We beat some teams so I have high hopes for late April and May."

The oldest players on the varsity boys team are sophomores. The girls squad has one junior, one sophomore and the rest freshmen. At the end of last week's practice there were 31 kids trying to make the varsity and junior varsity golf teams.

The Warriors official season opener will be March 31, at Artesia.

The Warriors hosted their first benefit scramble of the season last Sunday at Cree Meadows with more than 75 players participating in the 18-hole event for more than $600 in prizes.

The winning team of Tony Wilcoxson, Paul Kirkwood, Tom Garber, Dave Pfeffer, Jack Kannady and Molly Long fired a 14 under par, 57.

Finishing second, one stroke back, was Stormy Edwards, Lowell Neumayer, John Van Tussenbroek, Bill McCarty, Tim Morris and Ashley Fryer.

There was a three-way tie for third place at 59 between teams led by Jock Palmer, former Warrior Chris Long and current Warrior team captain, Nathan Baudo.

Palmer's teammates were Bob Chamberlain, Gene Barteet, Jim Snow, Carolyn Henson and Roswell High's Vanessa Padilla.

Long and Baudo's squad consisted of Paul Grayson, Dale Seidel, Kirk Ryan, Scott Goodrich and Glen Bowman.

The team's next benefit scramble will be Sunday, March 25, at the Alto Lakes Golf and Country Club. The public is invited to participate.

The entry fee is $25 (including green fee) plus cart fee. Proceeds go toward the golf team's travel and equipment expenses.

To sign up for Sunday's scramble, call the Alto pro shop at 336-4231.

Dorgan competes in Junior Olympics

Anne Dorgan of Alto is competing this week in Vail, Colorado, at the US Ski Association (USSA) Rocky Mountain Junior III Olympic Championship ski races.

The 15-year-old qualified for the Junior Olympics by placing among the top 25 in two of six qualifying races in New Mexico and Colorado. She qualified in Taos and Monarch, Colorado.

A USSA licensed racer, Dorgan competes as an independent and is not affiliated with a recognized ski team.

Junior Olympics offers four events: the downhill, Super G, giant slalom and slalom. Dorgan competes in the giant slalom and slalom.

Every year, the US Ski Team selects 50 junior racers from the Junior Olympians for its developmental team. More than 18,000 hopefuls in race programs throughout the United States vie for these positions.

This year, in addition to USSA races, she won Ski Apache's Cross Your Heart Cup.

Dorgan competes as a J-III, a class for 12- to 15-year-olds. Next year, as a 16-year-old, she will advance to the Ability Women's Series.

Last week at Angel Fire, she competed in this group and placed fifth among 44 college age racers.

Anne Dorgan of Alto competes in a qualifying race for the Junior Olympics at Monarch, Colorado. Dorgan qualified and is competing this week in the Junior Olympics at Vail, Colorado.

BRENDA SERNA

Serna wins state!

Ruidoso resident Brenda Serna keeps on winning arm wrestling competition.

The 17-year-old recently won the New Mexico State Championship, sponsored by the International Arm Wrestling Association, in Albuquerque.

Serna competed in both the lightweight and open classification of the competition, and won both classes.

She said she had to defeat six women in the lightweight class and about that many in the open class. For her victories, Serna won a cash prize and two satin jackets.

Her next competition will be the World Championships in Las Vegas, Nevada, in June.

"I'm already nervous," Serna said.

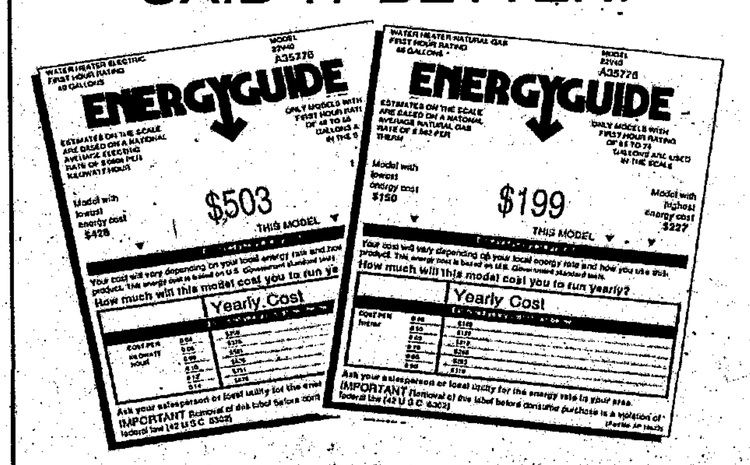
WE COULDN'T HAVE SAID IT BETTER!



To compare the cost of heating water with natural gas versus electricity, use the energy guide labels like the one shown above. They are required on most major appliances. Fact is, the average family saves more than $200 a year by choosing natural gas water heating rather than electricity. The savings are even more when you add in natural gas heating, cooking and clothes drying. Check out these energy guide labels at a near by appliance store . . . and let the facts speak for themselves.

Stroshine does it again, two medals in US Championship

Imagine running the All-American Futurity on a stable horse, or driving the Indianapolis 500 in a rented car.

Imagine racing in a national ski championship on demonstrator skis. Robert Stroshine did, and won.

Stroshine returned home this week with two medals from the US Disabled Ski Championships, which were March 11 through 16 at Mount Stratton, Vermont.

His skis, however, spent the week in Chicago's O'Hare Airport.

Stroshine competed in three events, the slalom, giant slalom and Super G. He won a gold medal in the giant slalom and a silver in a Super G substitute, all on demo skis.

A world-class racer skiing on demos is like Bobby Unser racing a Hertz Rent-A-Car. It completes the course, but it's not a precision tool.

Stroshine's first event, the slalom, was run on Monday in a heavy rainstorm.

"Skiing the course was like driving without windshield wipers," Stroshine said. "The gates were so wet, when you hit them water sprayed in your face."

Fog then set in. Stroshine couldn't see the gates and disqualified.

Never one to sweat the small stuff, he took off his borrowed slalom skis and soaking wet jacket, resigned to losing a combined overall medal.

"That's the first area I ever skied with streams running down the slope," he said.

Tuesday's race, the giant slalom, was canceled due to fog. Stroshine used the day getting used to another pair of demo skis. Repeated calls to the airline had yielded only promises, not skis.

The giant slalom was run on Wednesday in 65 degree weather on a salted course.

After inspecting the course, Stroshine focused on the tricky parts as he waited in the starting gate. He skied his first run well and held a three-second lead over his nearest competitor.

On the second run he skied another strong run and the second place skier couldn't make up the difference. Stroshine had his gold, but still no skis.

Thursday was to have been the Super G, but warm weather left no snow on the course. The giant slalom course had snow, but it wasn't wide enough for a safe Super G. Officials debated whether to cancel the race or not, then they decided to run a second giant slalom in its place.

Perhaps the officials' indecision affected his concentration, because on his first run Stroshine couldn't focus on the run and couldn't remember where the line was. As a result, he skied a delay gate wrong.

Realizing his error, he stopped in mid-course, took the gate correctly, completed the rest of the course and still managed to finish in second place, only three seconds behind first.

Suddenly galvanized into action, Stroshine slipped the course for the second run, memorizing every turn.

"I sprang out of the start and nailed every gate," he said. "I was a little low on one gate, but when I finished I was pleased."

When his combined times were flashed on the board, he was only 14 hundredths of a second behind first place. He'd made up nearly three seconds, an eternity in ski racing.

"Being low on that one gate cost me the gold," he said. "But considering everything, I'm not displeased."

Recent adversities have matured the young racer. Winning medals in world and United States competitions this year have given him a new sense of quiet self-confidence.

"Before, I used to race and think, maybe I'll do OK, maybe I won't" he said.

He even laughs at his misplaced skis and shrugs off the airline's mistake.

"The skis made it home OK, a half an hour before I did," he said.

"But after winning a silver at World's and beating an A-racer by 10 seconds, now I look at a course and know I can do it," he said simply, matter of factly, without a trace of cockiness.

ROBERT STROSHINE

Joe Skier says...

Ever wonder how they take those pictures in the slick ski magazines? Even the best ski photographers had to learn some place, and the techniques they use are those useful in most any type of photography. But the one thing the pros can do that many amateurs haven't figured out yet is stage a photograph and make it look natural.

Some simple guidelines and important basic knowledge about photography will help improve your photos at the ski slope. Do not fret. Your photo albums no longer need to be filled with posed smiling groups holding their skis in front of a chair lift. You too can get the powder clouds, the skier's expression through the gates, or the hot-dogger in mid air.

LOCATION: No matter what type of camera you use, you need to be in the right place. A general rule of thumb is to keep the sun behind you. If the sun is in front of you, you will get glare and a poor exposure of the skier. If the sun is at the side, you can still get side glare off your lens. The sun doesn't have to be all the way behind you, but it has to be out of the picture.

To test, look through your view finder, then place your open palm against the side of the camera near the lens as a sun block. If you see a noticeable change in the viewfinder when your hand goes in place, you may be getting glare off the lens.

Stand downhill looking up. No one wants to see a picture of a skier's behind. Find a position for yourself, set up, then wave the skier on when you are ready. While setting up, anticipate where the skier is going to be when you take the picture. Once you've figured that out, check and see if the sun is in the right place. If it's not, then move.

And don't take the picture until the skier gets within 25 or so yards. Any further, they will be too small in your pciture. Any closer than five yards and they will be moving too fast.

Take pictures with the skier travelling toward you. Focus on a spot ahead of time and wait until the skier gets to that spot before clicking the shutter.

LIGHTING: When the sun is bright, the snow makes it brighter. If your camera has a built-in light meter, such as most SLR cameras, you must realize the meter is taking its reading from the bright light reflected off the snow. To get a good exposure you have to compensate for this. And this is where things get tricky.

If your camera has adjustable f-stops, you must automatically overexpose for the brightness of the snow. The easiest way to determine the correct f-stop is to take your camera right up to the skier's face at the top of the run in the same light they would be on the slope, then read what the meters says. And I mean have that camera within inches of the skier's face. Then set your camera manually to that f-stop, keeping the shutter speed the same.

When you go down the slope to prepare for the skier's descent, your camera meter will say you are exposing incorrectly. Ignore it. You are doing it right.

If your camera is the type that has no choice for shutter speed or aperture, but has a built in flash, turn on the flash. Most automatic cameras shoot at a slower shutter speed and with a wider aperture when the flash is on. This will provide, even on bright sunny days, that extra overexposure you need to get the skier and not the snow.

CONTRAST: What the heck is that? Contrast is the difference between the light and dark tones in a photograph. The greater the difference, the greater or sharper the contrast. Good photographs have good contrast.

But snow, especially on both bright and cloudy days, has hardly any contrast at all. Filters help out if your camera is adaptable to accept filters.

For black-and-white film, use a yellow or light green filter. Both increase contrast with snow backgrounds, and both will darken the sky, showing a noticeable difference between it and the snow.

For color film, make sure your camera has a sky 1A filter. This is a must anyway, no matter what kind of pictures. The sky filter protects the lens and helps reduce haze. But on very bright days, the snow can polarize the light, making an awful glare. Using a polarizing filter will greatly reduce this glare, deepen the colors and improve contrast. It will also make you skies a beautiful, deep, dark blue and your clouds fluffy white.

ANTICIPATION: You must anticipate what will happen next. Between the time your brain has decided to tell your finger to depress the shutter and the picture is actually taken, a whole second can go by. In that much time, a skier can travel fifteen feet even at slow speeds. So you have to be ready.

Don't take the picture when you see the powder fly around the skier in the beautiful cloud of white fluff; take the picture before it happens. Don't take the picture after the hot-dogger is already in the air; take it just as they leave the ground. Don't take the picture of the racer when he's at the gate; take it just before he's at the gate.

Snow flies when the skier is completing a turn; take the picture when they initiate the turn, or at the point where they are at the peak of their un-weighting.

Choose a fast shutter speed, at least 1/250 second or faster. I believe 1/500 is about the best. Any faster and the snow freezes in position and doesn't always look right.

FOCAL LENGTH: What lens you use is a matter of personal preference in most cases, but your best shots for most general subject ski shots will be with an 80 to 100 mm lens. With a 50 mm, the skier often is too small in the picture, and unless you are able to enlarge your own prints to your own liking, you'll have too much mountain and not enough skier.

Long lenses, such as 200 or 300 mm, are too long for most purposes unless your subject is at least 50 to 100 yards away. Long lenses are great for racing shots because they condense perception.

Wide angle lenses can be a lot of fun if you're daring. For example, lie on the ground below a headwall, aim a 35 mm straight into the air, and when you just see the tips of the skis of the skier above you, click! Don't forget to overexpose!

PLANNING: Make the good shot happen. Even on a run that has so many tracks it looks like it was groomed, you can get that untracked powder shot if you look. At the sides of trails you often find trees with snow still on the branches. Looking through your camera, find the spot where only half of two trees, one on each side, can be seen with the untracked powder behind. Have your skier go between the two tree, only fast enough they make the powder fly. Voila! You have the great shot.

As with any photograph, don't only look at the center of your viewfinder. You must look through the entire area seen through the viewfinder and make sure you can't see things you don't want in your picture.

And finally, don't be shy. If you see a good skier, ask to take their picture. And if they say yes, take control. It's your picture, tell them what you want them to do.

With a little imagination, you can even get great shots on level ground in a snowy parking lot.

Dashing Lion lets out a winning roar

Dashing Lion overcame an early bump and flew up in the final yards to narrowly win the $192,267 West Texas Futurity.

Timed in :16.63 for 330 yards, Dashing Lion captured the first grade one event of the year for two-year-olds and earned the lion's share of the purse.

It was rider Joe Martinez's 29th birthday and Dashing Lion gave the Sunland leading rider his first grade one stakes win as a present. Dashing Lion also gave her backers a surprise gift by paying off $17.20, $9.20, $3.80.

The Texas-bred daughter of Man In The Money out of a Jody Oh mare, Lion Oh Ness, Dashing Lion's time was good for a 103 speed index. Racing in only her fourth career tilt, the bay-colored freshman had the most experience of anyone else in the field and it showed as she overcame the rough start to rally and win by a head.

The winner is owned by Clifford Pohler of New Braunfels, Texas.

Pohler has had prior success in the game having owned the stakes winning Barbs Bounce and Sez Who. But, he may have scored his biggest victory off the track when he purchased Dashing Lion for $2,900 in the Alamo Select Sale at San Antonio, Texas, last August.

"She'll have a tough schedule ahead, but she is sound," said Pohler after the race. The miss is next headed to Goliad, Texas to compete in the Graham Farms Futurity trials in April. Following that, the Kansas and the All American Futurity trials at Ruidoso are also in the plans according to Pohler.

When asked to describe his runner Pohler didn't come up with the usual superlatives.

"She's short, stocky and has great appetite," he said. Well, Dashing Lion showed that her appetite for winning is also great. She had to come up with two gutty performances in a row as she also had a rocky trip in the trials.

By the way, she came from behind to close in the final yards, and she appears to have plenty of stamina to go farther.

The winner was trained by Jim Brock.

See Me Gone and rider Don Sandoval was close to the winner, falling just short.

The runner was supplemented into the trials and paid off handsomely to earn $35,197 for lessee Catherine Collins and lessor Jean Chavera. See Me Gone paid well through the mutuel windows with $14.00, $7.40.

Richard Parrish's One Slick One was in contention the whole way finishing a head behind See Me Gone. One Slick One was the fastest qualifier going into the 32nd running of the event and paid $3.60 to show as the beaten favorite.

Rider Gary Sumpter got Hes Springin Easy out first in the sprint and the pair finished just a nose off of One Slick One to get fourth.

The complete order of finish and money won: Dashing Lion, $76,995; See Me Gone, $35,197; One Slick One, $19,138; Hes Springin Easy, $9,889; Six Gun Sage, $9,239; Straight To The Bank, $8,799; Champus, $8,579; Casadaquick, $8,359; Piebyeu, $8,139; and Let Em Eat Cake, $7,919.

Looking for a pet? Adopt a horse!

If you have always dreamed of owning a horse and have a lot of love and patience, the Bureau of Land Management's (BLM's) "Adopt a Horse" program may be for you.

Because of an innovative cooperative program between BLM and the New Mexico Department of Corrections, wild horses are available to adopt for just $125 and a few other simple requirements.

The wild horses are gathered off public land throughout the West and are "halter broke" by inmates at the correctional facility. The program helps the horses get used to being around people and it also helps rehabilitate inmates.

By fulfilling a few simple requirements you could be the proud owner of one of these fine animals. Basically, all you need is to be 18 years of age, have no convictions for inhumane treatment of animals, and have adequate facilities and means of transportation to provide humane care and proper treatment of the animal.

Parents and legal guardians may adopt a wild horse and allow their children to assist in caring for and training the animal. Adopters must provide their own means of transporting the animal from the adoption center to their home. Vehicles may include horse trailers and commercial livestock trailers as long as they meet minimum standards for the maintenance and feeding of the horses required by the Bureau.

Adoption hours at the horse facility are 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of each week. To reach the Southern New Mexico Correctional Facility follow the sign to Interstate 10 west of Las Cruces.

TURN SIGNAL, HAZARD WARNING FLASHER LOCATIONS

Replacing a turn signal or hazard warning flasher is a job that anyone can do. Just pull the old flasher out and buy a new one just like it. Then plug the new flasher in where the old flasher was.

The job sounds easy and it is once you find the flasher. Every year make and model vehicle has the flasher units located in a different location. Sometimes they are almost impossible to find as they are located behind the dash panel.

If you can't find the flasher in a few minutes, you are better off to consult a manual for your specific vehicle.

Q: I intend to pull a medium size camper out west with my "83 Oldsmobile Delta 88 which has an automatic transmission. The trailer weighs 1200 lbs. so I am wondering if I should have a transmission cooler installed. Do you think a cooler will be beneficial?

A: Not only will the transmission cooler be beneficial, I feel it is mandatory. Heat is the transmission's worst enemy and pulling a 1200 lb. trailer is going to generate plenty of heat. The cooler will keep heat under control for the transmission and as a plus it will help the engine run cooler.

Ruidoso High School art teacher heads back to New York City for fun and study

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

A Ruidoso art teacher will spend this summer at one of the world's most distinguished art schools as part of her continuing education.

It will be Karen Emerald Reeder's second summer at the Parsons School of Design in New York City, an institution that attracts students from all over the country and the world.

Reeder will be enrolled in the Bank Street College of Education's Master of Science in Education Program, one specifically designed for artists and art educators.

"The art courses I took at Parsons School of Design, and the education courses at Bank Street, were wonderful," said Reeder. "What I bring back to my own students will be seen in practical teaching methods, direct art work, and subtle touches of New York life."

Parsons' location in New York City provides the student with a multitude of visual experiences, both in areas of fine art and industrial art, which Frank Alvah Parsons described as the "cornerstone of our national art."

But the hustle and bustle, as well as the many experiences, in "the city that never sleeps" can also be overwhelming.

"I had never gone anywhere alone in the city, nor even ridden the subway," said Reeder recapturing her first experience in New York City. "The culture shock was exhilarating and frightening. Street life taught me to toughen up, wise up, and move quickly."

Reeder found the fast-paced life of New York facinating, and the many restaurants and museums a delight.

"However, after four weeks, I did begin to long for the clean smell of New Mexico air, our vivid colors, and real earth under my feet instead of concrete and garbage," said Reeder.

During her first summer session, Reeder stayed on campus and, with her classmates, toured the city snapping photos for work on their projects.

Their tours took them from Mystic Seaport, to Wall Street, Soho, the Village, and through the cultural neighborhoods of China Town, Spanish Harlem and Harlem.

"One pair of Reeboks and ten rolls of film later, we began our art projects, selected individually based on our photos," said Parsons.

Reeder's program is for three summers, and she is already looking forward to her second summer with nervous anticipation, she said.

Attending these distinguished schools can put a pinch on the pocketbook, and Reeder is researching funds from various foundations. Any type of sponsorship will be helpful, said Reeder.

The Parsons School of Design was founded in 1896 by William Merritt Chase, a leading painter and art teacher at the turn of the century.

The school was later led by Parsons, who saw the importance of graphic and industrial art in our emerging industrial society.

In 1970, the institution became part of the New School for Social Research.

Staff cuts expected in 90-91, school says not enough cops

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The Capitan Board of Education approved personnel cuts proposed by the superintendent for next school because of continued projected enrollment declines.

"In terms of staffing, one person will lose their job, two people will go from a full time position to a half time position, and one person will go from the operational budget to the Region IX budget," said Capitan superintendent Scott Childress.

The enrollment projection for the 89-90 school year was 504 students, but actual enrollment is currently 461 students. Next year's projection offered by Childress was 464 students.

This could present a 15 percent overall cut in the district's budget, from the $1,818,000 budget for the school year 89-90, to $1,646,203 for the school year 90-91.

"Well gentlemen, I believe the drought has finally hit us," said board president Preston Stone. "We have no cushion."

The board accepted the personnel cuts suggested by Childress which include:

—Elimination of a half-time high school Spanish instructor.

—Elimination of a teacher in the basic program at the high school.

—One position cut in the special education program.

—Three special education aides cuts..

—Return of the cafeteria clerk to half-time from its recent upgrade to full time to compensate for the anticipated increased work load of school secretaries.

—A half-time custodial position cut.

The cuts appear drastic in the special education program, but a decline in enrollment of the C and D level special education students is anticipated as well as in general enrollment, said Childress.

The C and D level special education student units receive the largest per unit funding from the state.

"I don't think it will hurt the quality of our curriculum," said Childress.

A special session of the state legislature approved a five percent pay increase for teachers through a one-quarter cent increase in gross receipts taxes, but the legislature allows the final use of the monies to be at the discretion of local school boards.

The Capitan district is "out of balance" because there are more programs than can be afforded, said Childress.

By using the monies from the new gross receipts for teacher salaries, programs can be cut while still attracting high quality personnel, said Childress.

Or the monies intended for salaries can be used to bring the district back into balance, he said.

Childress noted that any budget will have approximately 85 percent of its monies slated for personnel salaries and benefits.

The board approved the motion to accept the proposed cuts presented by Childress with the Spanish program given priority reinstatement should enrollment increase beyond projections.

Capitan police chief Randy Spear was present to request greater cooperation and communication from the school regarding truant activity by students, and the use of alcohol and drugs by minors.

Spear said rumors were coming into law enforcement officials of student activities that the police were unaware of. Examples cited by Spear were a poster distributed in the high school advertising a beer party, rumors of kids sniffing liquid paper in the locker rooms, and drinking and smoking marijuana on school grounds during lunch hour.

"If it's going on, let us know," said Spear.

High school principal said some drinking activity by students has occurred during school hours and some on school grounds.

However, it is only a handful of students engaging in this activity, said Spear.

Board member Kenneth Cox expressed his concern that Spear was accusing the school of withholding information.

Spear said teachers at the high school were aware of the poster advertising a beer party, but did not inform law enforcement officials. He also said he heard that superintendent Childress had a copy of the poster as well.

"That's a lie, Randy," said Childress.

The issue goes back to when the village trustees eliminated the second police position in November, said Childress.

Information at that time claimed adequate police protection could still be provided because there were several sheriff deputies who lived in the area, and a state policeman, he said.

Childress went on to say it looked as though the police were trying to elicit the assistance of the school because the police staffing currently available was not enough.

"Now we're attacking the school because you don't have manpower," said Childress to Spear.

Board member Hollis Fuchs said Spear was police chief for the 11 years he's lived in Capitan and the problem has continued.

"We have a problem in law enforcement," said Fuchs.

Spear reiterated to the board all he wanted was to be informed of any illegal or suspicious activity area juveniles may be engaged in.

A program for the school is being planned which parents will be invited to that will discuss alcohol and drugs.

Stone also repeated that it is only a handful of students causing trouble, that the majority were not drinking or doing drugs and were doing very well.

He complained of an article in The Ruidoso News because he believed it portrayed Capitan students in an unfavorable light.

"I wish that our children not be dragged through the mud in the media," he said.

Spear mentioned to the board that a drug sniffing dog had been run through the school twice and each time discovered nothing.

The school board conducted two closed sessions, one on the expulsion of two students, the other on personnel. Both closed sessions were voted on without a roll call vote as required by the Open Meetings Act.

After the closed session on the expulsions, Childress recommended the two students be expelled. The motion passed unanimously.

The was no action taken after the closed session on personnel.

In other business the board:

—Accepted the minutes from the February 13 regular meeting.

—Approved the monthly financial reports.

—Approved a debt service increase of $1,608 and inter-budget transfers.

—Approved line item transfers.

—Accepted the resignation for retirement of Luella Roberts and Mary Lou Cozzens.

-Accepted a presentation of a piece of the Berlin wall sent to the school board and the district by two former teachers who now teach in West Berlin.

The next regular meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday, April 12.

"Now we're attacking the school because you don't have manpower." Superintendent Scott Childress to police chief Randy Spear

Wright wrong as new mayor pro-tem, say other trustees

"I know I've done a good job. There's more money in the bank now than when I took office." Janet Keel.

by RICHARD A. HARROLD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The new mayor in Capitan will not re-appoint the village clerk/treasurer, and she will be relieved of her duties at the next regular meeting of the trustees, Monday, April 9.

The new mayor also tried to change the mayor pro-tem, but the council would not budge on this issue.

Within five days of his swearing-in, Capitan Mayor Frank Warth called an organizational meeting to review village appointments and personnel.

Village attorney Don Dutton, cautioned Warth during the regular meeting of the council Monday, March 12, that the new mayor had plenty of time to call his organizational meeting. But Warth insisted on the meeting Friday.

The trustees voted to keep Norman Renfro as mayor pro-tem, against the wishes of Warth, who recommended new trustee Jimmy D. Wright, and elevated village employee, Terry Cox, to the position of public works supervisor.

Warth initially said he would not re-appoint Janet Keel as village clerk/treasurer, a position she's held for four years and was certified for in November 1989, but wished to keep her on to train a new clerk.

Renfro objected, stating this was not fair to Keel, who needed the opportunity to seek other employment. Either the mayor re-appoints her, or she is relieved of her duties at the next trustee meeting, said Renfro.

Tuesday, Warth told The News there was no particular reason for letting Keel go.

"That's just the way it worked out," said Warth. "I did not re-appoint her."

The position will be advertised, and regardless of it being filled or not, Keel will be relieved April 9.

"I know I've done a good job," said Keel. "There's more money in the bank now than when I took office."

The meeting, which lasted only 25 minutes, began one trustee short because Alfred Leroy Montes was under the impression the meeting began at 7 p.m., the same time regular meetings are scheduled.

However, the organizational meeting was scheduled for 6 p.m. and a telephone call was made to Montes to see if he would be present. Montes responded he would and was on his way, but rather than wait for his arrival, Warth called the meeting to order shortly after the call was made.

The first item on the agenda was Warth's suggestion that Jimmy D. Wright be the new mayor pro-tem. Renfro opened the issue for discussion only, which stalled a vote until Montes arrived.

Because new appointments must be passed by a majority vote of the trustees, because only three were present at the time the agenda item was brought up, the votes had to be unanimous.

When Montes was present, trustees made comments that they felt more comfortable retaining Renfro as the mayor pro-tem, because he was the only experienced trustee on the council.

Warth responded that he wanted Wright because he thought the same way, and Warth felt in his absence things would be done to his liking.

"What about Gilbert and I?" asked Montes.

The issue went to a roll call vote with the motion being Renfro be retained as mayor pro-tem. Wright cast the only dissenting vote.

Prior to Montes' arrival, the trustees approved by 3-0 votes Randy Spear to remain as village chief of police, and approved to retain the contract for legal services with Underwood, Dutton, and Griffin.

Dorothy Smith was re-appointed to represent the village on the Economic Development Corporation of Lincoln County board, and Dr. Bernhard E. Reimann was appointed as chair of the planning and zoning commission and was retained as the chair of the solid waste committee.

Frances Shaw was re-appointed as president of the cemetery board with the same board membership, and former trustee Jack Pogue was re-appointed as chair of the water board, with the same board membership.

The same members were also re-appointed to the gas company board, a public board under the jurisdiction of the state corporation commission and which must abide by the Public Meetings Act and follow the state procurement code.

The three trustees present approved Warth as the village representative to the Southern New Mexico Economic Development Division with trustee Wright as the alternate. Former mayor Benny Coker was the village representative, and the alternate was Keel.

The trustees also voted to keep Debra Cummins as acting deputy clerk, and Prennetta Nolen as a village employee in the motor vehicle department.

These items were covered in about 15 to 20 minutes, and then Montes arrived for the meeting.

By unanimous votes, Guy Henley was retained as the village street supervisor and Dan Davenport was retained as the water supervisor,

Terry Cox, who was a supervisor in the water department, was elevated to public works supervisor, a change in job description because he now oversees both the water and the road departments.

The trustees accepted and approved Warth's recommendations that Montes be the trustee police commissioner, mayor pro-tem Renfro be the waste water and sewer commissioner, Gilbert Montoya be the public works commissioner, and Wright be the personnel and the planning and zoning commissioner.

The group then returned to the first agenda item, Warth's suggestion of a new mayor-pro tem.

The meeting adjourned at 6:25 p.m.

New season comin' up!

This little guy is eager for the new season to begin at Bonito Lake, April 1. So eager, he can't wait for the equipment sales at the local sporting goods shops. His stick-to-it-iveness may just land him a whopper. After all, it's not the equipment, but the fisherman that catches the fish, as everyone knows. By the way, April 1 is also the day new licenses will be required, so be sure you're completely ready when the warden comes by. Fishing is also good in Alto Lake and along the banks of the Rio Ruidoso.

State Democrats bring campaigns to Ruidoso

by BRIAN BLALOCK
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Lincoln County Democrats had the opportunity Tuesday night to listen to and rally behind Democratic candidates on both the county and state level.

More than 100 area Democrats were joined by the state chairman and 17 candidates for county and state offices during a no-host dinner at Cree Meadows.

County Chairman Cece Griffin, host for the evening, introduced both the statewide and county candidates.

State Democratic Chairman Ray Powell told the crowd that Lincoln County will be a tough county to turn around.

"This is a county we can turn back Democratic where it belongs," he said.

He went on to say the Democratic Party, not the Republican, is the conservative party. He said if it hadn't been for the Democratic majority in the Legislature, the state would have been in big trouble.

He said the Democrats in New Mexico are on a righteous cause to bring people back to the Democratic Party. Powell said the three goals this year for the state's Democrats are to regain the four top statewide offices: governor, lieutenant governor, land commissioner and attorney general; to increase the Democratic majority in the house to two-thirds; and to increase the Democratic majority in the Senate to two-thirds.

Powell said the Democratic candidates need to keep positive and they would come out with a well balance ticket following the primary.

Even though county candidates can't officially declare their candidacy until Tuesday, April 3, five men who will be running for office spoke at the meeting.

Former county commissioner Bill Elliott said he is running for the county commission in District III. Elliott said he will do his very best for Lincoln County and he asked for the audience's vote and support.

Another former county commissioner, Ralph Dunlap, said he is a candidate for the county commission in District I. Dunlap said he is retired and can work full time as a commissioner. He said he is concerned that people in the county were working against one another and he would try and work with everyone.

Mike Morris said he is best known as the owner of Mountain Pest Control, but his experience in banking would be an asset as county treasurer. He said he is qualified and will do his very best in the job. He asked for the audience support in his campaign.

Wayne Townsend said he is a candidate for the Lincoln County assessor's position. Townsend said he is a small business owner and has served on a number of village committees. He said he feels qualified to lead the assessor's office into the '90s.

Townsend said he believes he can run the office better than it is being run now.

Bill Butts said he is a candidate for sheriff of Lincoln County. Butts retired from the State Police after 23 years of service.

He said he has completed the criminal justice program at the New Mexico Military Institute and holds all the certificates available at the State Police Academy. Butts said as the sheriff he will review current policies and personnel.

Griffin said probate judge candidate Peg Wash was unable to attend the meeting because of an illness in the family.

County commissioner candidate Charles "Chuck" Rominger was also unable to attend the meeting due to being called as a witness in a trial.

Woody Schelegal of Carrizozo did represent Rominger at the meeting and urged people to support his candidacy.

Ruidoso attorney H. John Underwood told the audience he is a candidate for the District 56 state representatives position.

"I feel the people of this district are entitled to fair, equal and honest representation, and I don't feel that is what the people of this district are getting from the current incumbent," he said.

Underwood said his special interests would be the opinions of each and every person in the district. He said another interest in his campaign is education. He said we are missing the priority if we fail to pay our teachers enough money for teaching our children.

He said another interest is economic development in New Mexico. He said New Mexico has as much potential for growth and development as any other state, but we cannot let it become the "wastepaper basket" for the rest of the nation. He said New Mexico needs a program of recycling.

Underwood also said he wants to do everything he can to help society, the state and this district rid itself of the scourge of alcohol and drug abuse that is tearing the heart out of our society.

Neither gubernatorial candidates Bruce King nor Bob Gold could be at the meeting. King was represented by Inez Marrs and Gold by Tracey Moran.

Marrs reviewed King's record as governor, listing sound fiscal management and tax cuts in his first administration and his major advancements of prison reform, education and economic development in his second term.

She summarized King's plan for education if he is elected governor. She said the plan calls for an increase in teacher salaries; a reduction in class size, particularly at the elementary level; a scholarship programs for students who go into teaching, the student would repay the scholarship by working in the state for a specified number of years; free teachers up from non-instructive type duties; offer a start development program; and encourage teacher to further their education.

Moran told the audience Gold has been a supporter of the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce, the Village of Ruidoso and Lincoln County in the past. She read to the audience from a statement sent by Gold.

In the statement, Gold said it is unfair for a governor candidate to make sweeping statements and pledges to every group and special interest in the state. He said a governor has to make priorities and tough decisions. "Lincoln County is a priority to Bob Gold." He called Lincoln County a world class destination point. He said he would listen, not just talk, to Lincoln County and that the county would always have an open door to him.

Lieutenant governor candidate Richard Rocco said there are five issues he feels are important in his campaign. Rocco said he wants to expand and use currently existing structured programs, like Boy Scouts and 4-H, to work with youth who are at risk.

He said he wants to work with small business which are important to New Mexico, but are over burdened with regulations and, high worker's compensation rates. They have not received the nurturing they should.

"Every time a small business dies, we all lose," he said.

Rocco said the senior citizens need affordable housing, health care and insurance. He said we need to take care of our veterans and make sure they receive the benefits they have earned.

He said as lieutenant governor he will form a task force of people who are interested in bringing businesses or light industries to a resort area, instead of trying to compete with each other for the same dollars.

Lieutenant governor candidate Carol Cloer told the crowd she is working hard in the small communities because two-thirds of New Mexico's population lives outside Albuquerque.

Cloer, who is the assistant superintendent for the Bloomfield School District, naturally said education is one of her main issues.

She said she uses fact, information, research and her energy and commitment to turn education problems around. Cloer said we need to empower our teachers to work with youth who are at risk.

"In my opinion when you empower the teachers, you will be successful," she said. "Teachers know what to do. All we need to do is turn them loose and let them do it."

Cloer said as lieutenant governor she would like to see year-long high school and advanced courses for students who want to graduate early.

Cloer, who is a former New Mexico State Police Commissioner, said she is straight forward and unafraid. She said she believes in strong law enforcement and paying law enforcement personnel well.

Ron Curry said he is running for the Secretary of State position on the ACTION agenda.

His ACTION agenda is: "A" for his desire to reform the absentee voting laws in this state and make them easier for people to understand and vote absentee.

"C" for campaign ethics and financial reform. Curry said he would like to see a code of ethics established for all public office holders.

"T" means to educate young people about voting. He said the age group 18-24 had fewer than 20 percent of the eligible voters voting in the last state election.

"I" stood for inter-governmental cooperation not just at the state level, but cooperation with the state's county clerks.

"O" stood for the opportunity for voting. Curry said he wanted to increase people's opportunity to vote by removing barriers which may exist in the voter registration and voting process.

"N" stood for new methodology in government. Curry said he would like to see a statewide voting list generated by the Secretary of State office.

McKinley McTeigue spoke to the group about former Secretary of State Shirley Hooper, who is again running for the position.

Local attorney Gary Mitchell told the audience about current Supreme Court Justice Seth Montgomery, who is running unopposed.

Former Albuquerque District Court Judge Gene Franchini told the group that he is a former trial lawyer and trial judge. He said the one issue in this campaign is the qualification for the job.

He said the experience as a trial judge will allow him to know what the problems of the small courts are.

Dick Apadoca spoke to the crowd about his son, Patrick, who is running for attorney general. Apadoca said Patrick had been an associate counsel to former President Jimmy Carter. He said his son would work for the interests of all of New Mexico.

Patricia Madrid said the upcoming election will be important to New Mexicans because the elected officials will be the first in New Mexico history to be able to seek re-election. She urged the audience to get involved and be interested in the races.

Madrid said the attorney general sets the initiatives for the state. She said she has the most legal qualifications of any of the candidates for attorney general.

Madrid was the first woman in New Mexico to be elected a district judge. She said she felt like she opened the door for other women to serve as judges, and she would like to do the same on statewide elected offices.

She said the attorney general is the chief law enforcement office of the state and she had the most experience in criminal law of any of the candidates.

Madrid also said the environment and water are two other issues important in her campaign.

Eric Serna said he is a candidate for re-election to the State Corporation Commission. Serna said a lot of people don't have any idea what the State Corporation Commission does.

"We deal with issues that impact your life on a daily basis," he said.

Serna said the commission deals with telephone and insurance rates as well as things like fire codes. He said the commission recently put together a package to reduce rates for US West customers. He also said Contel will not slip by the scrutiny of the commission.

He said because the commission deals with these complex issues, voters need to look at and compare candidates, and they will realize the importance of have an experience candidate.

Robert E. Vigil said he is a candidate for state auditor because of serious issues about the accountability of public funds. He said he wants to see the larger state agencies have mandatory accountability, not voluntary. Vigil thinks the state auditor should be more innovative in his duties.

"I strongly advocate the creation and implementation of a uniform statewide accounting system," Vigil said.

He said a uniform statewide accounting system would allow the auditor's office to prepare a statewide financial statement, which the state has never had.

Land commissioner candidate Glen Briscoe told the group that he had just returned from the legislature and he was proud of his and the Democrats support of education in New Mexico. Briscoe is a two-term state representative from Quay County.

"The land office is the office that generates much of the money for education," he said.

Briscoe said the land commissioner is charged with maximizing income and protecting the state assets, which also means the environment. He said through paying closer attention to the managing of oil and gas royalty revenues, modernizing the office and establishing proper accounting practices, the Land Commission office could generate millions of dollars.

"This office merits your attention," Brisco said.

Steve Anaya, who is also a candidate for land commissioner, said the land office is a business that makes money for people and education.

Anaya said he was in charge for four years of the one state agency which had to make a profit, the State Fair. He said he is a businessman in both Moriarty and Estancia.

"The bottom line is the land commission makes money, you pay less taxes," Anaya said.

Former Lieutenant Governor Mike Runnels was the final speaker of the night. He thanked the people who had kept the Democratic spirit alive in Lincoln County.

He said he may have moved most of his law practice to Albuquerque, but his home will always be Ruidoso. He announced his resignation as vice-chairman of the Lincoln County Democratic Party, and announced Don Dutton would take his place as vice-chairman.

Local attorney H. John Underwood, who is a Democratic candidate for the District 56 State Representative position, speaks to a crowd of Lincoln County Democrats at their regular monthly meeting. Underwood was among a number of county and state Democratic candidates who spoke to the audience of more than 100 people.

The Silver Lining By Daniel Agnew Storm

On Saint Patrick's Day

After February, the Birthday month, with so many great days, comes March with only Saint Patrick's Day all by itself away down past the middle of the month on the seventeenth, with the eyes of the wide world upon it, being the main show of the month, opening the door the second glorious day of March, the entrance into the world of Queen Spring.

So here I am in mid afternoon of the patron Saint of the Green Island. The little Apricot tree which has been holding back most of its buds, is out in all stages of full bloom and just barely opening buds -- of snow white amongst half open buds trimmed in crimson and the pink round buds not yet open.

The little bees shining in their golden striped coats, are singing their joyful humming work songs as they ride the snowy blossoms as they toss and wave and sway in the light breeze.

All the sunny breeze is fragrant with the first fruit bloom fragrance of the year which each year brings a rapture to your heart and a lightness to your step. These little messengers bring hope to the world while all the other trees are in their winter sleep.

The giant apricot tree out by the Blue Bird tree is full of round crimson fruit buds as close as they can huddle together, with just a few showing white, and not a single one out in full bloom.

The tree is waiting to present its first blooms of silvery white to the vale—in celebration of the first day of Spring, later on to become a giant bouquet all by itself glorifying the first days of Springtime.

Down by the riverside the buds of the spring daisy are swelling, right near the leaves of the oxalis, American brother of the Shamrock of Ireland.

And so Saint Patrick's Day prepares the world for The Queen of Seasons.

The Eve Of Spring

Now here we are just afternoon over here across the shining, singing river, on March nineteen, the day before the first day of Spring. The large Apricot tree, harking to a message from Mother Nature whispered on the balmy breeze, has opened a host of its blooms although its high and wide-spreading branches, displaying a tree picture of sparkling silvery white blossoms among the soft crimson fruit buds.

This pink and crimson tree dotted with specks of white, is shining beacon of welcome, all by itself in the golden field at the foot of the evergreen mountain, like a land mark easy to sight, by Spring, as it approaches just over the hill to the East.

March Birthdays

This will reach you on the fourth birthday of Benjamin Coe Sanchez, who was born March twenty-two, 1986, in Ruidoso to Sonny Sanchez and Debbie Jones Sanchez.

Last Sunday Ben, his little sister Jo Marie and his father and mother were at the services at Saint Anne Chapel in Glencoe.

The Reverend Ann Gaddy, in charge of services in the prayers of the people thanked God for the birthday of Ben a faithful little member of the church.

Thanks were also offered for the birthdays of Sheila Gordon, Karen Thompson, Jan Davey, Dennis Nosker, Mary Baucum, Bill Hostetter, and Bill Shoemaker.

We wish all these folks many happy returns of the day and all God's blessing.

Mother Earth is Ready

Here in early afternoon you can see the Children of Mother Earth preparing to welcome the first season of the year before your very eyes. The grass beside the river is growing in the warm sun, the pinons are showing new color and the bright beginnings of new growth. The Cedars are turning orange with pollen ready to start flying down the valley. Out to the south high on the hillsides among the evergreens the oak brush is awakening, turning that dull pink shade of the latest days of its winter sleep.

The snow birds are gathering among the apricot blooms and the branches of the cedar tree, singing their little songs of the last day of Winter, telling us thanks for the winter feed and farewell till next year.

All through the Mountain World, Mother Earth is singing hymns of thankfulness, echoing from high on the mountains to low in the valleys; and our hearts join in these joyful voices of gratefulness to God.

PAUL WERSICH

Wersch seeks the magistrate bench

Paul Wersich has announced his candidacy for magistrate judge in District II, Ruidoso.

Wersich has been a deputy with the Lincoln County Sheriff Department since 1987. He also served with the El Paso, Texas, police department until 1983 when he retired.

Wersich will be a candidate for the Republican nomination in the June primary election.

He moved to Ruidoso in 1983 and opened a small business, which he operated for five years. He then decided to return to law enforcement.

Wersich was born August 3, 1939, in Medford, Wisconsin. He moved to El Paso where he attended high school and the Texas Western College, now known as UTEP.

He joined the Navy in 1956 and was honorably discharged after four years. Wersich joined the El Paso police force in 1961 and served for 23 years, attaining the rank of captain in the Criminal Investigation Bureau.

Curry announces for state office

Ron Curry wants to be New Mexico's next secretary of state.

Curry, an Albuquerque business consultant, is a candidate in the Democratic primary for the office that is third in line to the governor.

"You need a working secretary of state with some executive experience," said Curry in an interview at The News on Tuesday. The University of New Mexico graduate said he made the decision to seek the office about a year ago.

Curry, who ran a close race for the legislature from the Heights in Albuquerque in 1972, said he chose the secretary of state's race after seeing the problems that happened in the Albuquerque elections four years ago.

While completing his degree in political science at UNM, Curry served as president of the student body. After graduating, he owned two Radio Shack stores for 10 years and then sold those stores to go into the manufacturing business.

Curry, who was born in Hobbs but went through the Albuquerque public school system, says his business background is just what the secretary of state's office needs.

"Our theme is the action agenda," said Curry Tuesday.

That action agenda lays out specific actions Curry said he will take to improve the performance in the secretary of state's office. Curry says "A" is for absentee voting reform, "C" is for campaign ethics and finance reform, "T" is for teaching and education new voters, "T" stands for intergovernmental cooperation, "O" is for opportunities for voter participation and "N" is for new management techniques.

Curry is convinced he can implement that agenda.

"The only time most citizens access the democratic process is when they vote," said Curry. "The job of secretary of state is to make this as easy as possible."

That's why Curry said he'll place such a high priority on working with county clerks to carry out voter registration education beginning with the youngest school children.

"Our goal must be making our young citizens as excited about voting at age 18 as they are about driving at age 16," said Curry.

Curry said he favors postcard voter registration and other such opportunities to make voter registration as easy as possible. Curry said voter registration took a big jump in Nevada when voter registration was added as a service at the Department of Motor Vehicles.

The candidate made the news last week when he questioned why the voter rolls close on changing parties from the time the governor issues the election proclamation until the June primaries. Curry said that sets New Mexico voters in a class by themselves, since voters can move in from other states and register to vote, but registered voters are barred from changing parties.

"Many people weren't even aware of that rule," said Curry, who claims it is unfair.

Curry is concerned that some voters may have the mistaken belief that the secretary of state's job is a woman's job.

"If we have a man secretary of state people will start to decide all offices, not on gender, but qualifications and goals," said Curry.

The candidate has two children in the Albuquerque schools—a 17-year-old son, Sean, who attends La Cueva High School, and a 14-year-old daughter, Shannon, who attends Madison Middle School.

Curry is a member of Faith Lutheran Church. His community activities include the New Mexico March of Dimes, the American Cancer Society, Mothers Against Drunk Driving and the Lobo Club.

He pilots the KOB AM/FM hot air balloon in the Albuquerque Balloon Fiesta.

Check out the fun at the senior center

The Senior Citizens Center, located behind the library, offers a variety of activities and services.

It is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Many of the center regulars take advantage of weekly blood-pressure and weight checks, Social Security and tax help, as well as occasional health services.

Bette Romans, director of the center for 14 years, is a very valuable source of information on these matters, according to a news release provided by the Parks and Recreation Department.

On the entertainment side, the center offers games, including bridge, forty-two, dominoes, and bowling on Thursdays. For those with time on their hands, there is an exercise bike, pool table, croquet and a comfortable reading room.

"Stop by any time to pick up a copy of the monthly calendar," invites the news release.

EDITORIAL

Say what you mean.

Putting ideas, beliefs and feelings into words is sometimes difficult, but stating those things correctly is the only way you'll ever make people understand your beliefs. You might even sway someone to your thinking if you can communicate your stands clearly enough.

We sometimes receive letters to the editor that make some very good and valid points, but also miss the point by calling names and including unfounded accusations and unproven statistics. We take our stands on issues and records, and would encourage the people who write us letters to do the same.

If you want to talk about a garbage dump, a cemetery or a tax hike, stick to the issue. Don't get carried away by inserting irrelevant information that will only cloud your real concerns.

So, if you want people to know what you think on something important to you and this area, choose your words carefully. Who knows? You might even change somebody's mind.

At the very least, you'll make other people think.

Reporter's Round

By Brian Blalock

My how time flies when you're having fun or you're working for a living.

One year ago, Melodee and I came to Ruidoso on a vacation. We found out about the job at The News, and two weeks later we packed up our belongings and moved here.

I haven't seen a lot of major changes in Ruidoso like some of the old-timers have, but within the last year there have been a number of subtle changes.

At this time last year, there was very little snow on the mountains. People in the ski shops were admitting the skiing wasn't very good. This year, some late snowfalls have at least helped the ski conditions make it through Spring Break.

A year ago, the Ruidoso Downs Race Track was still in the process of remodeling. Now the racetrack can look forward to another prosperous season with the completed facilities.

Last year, when I first came to Ruidoso I thought everything in this town depended on either the racetrack or the ski resort. To a certain extent this is true, but over the year I've lived here, I've discovered there is more to it than that.

Businesses in Ruidoso live and die by the trade they get from the tourists who come to the racetrack in the summer and the ski resort in the winter. Since I've lived here, a number of places have gone out of business. But it seems every time a business goes under, another one is starting up to take its place.

As hard as a bad season is for the people who own the businesses, it's maybe harder on those of us who work in those businesses.

I've learned over the past year, while the economic success of Ruidoso may depend on the racetrack and ski resort, the economy runs on those of us who live and work here year-round.

Like it or not, Ruidoso's economy runs on the working man and woman, not the tourist.

The economy is driven by the policeman on patrol, the checker at the grocery store, the waitress in the restaurant, the teller at the bank and the people in this office who get The News out every Monday and Thursday.

This community is full of thousands of people who came here, not to capitalize on tourist dollars, but to live and work in a beautiful place. They are the people who pay the taxes, send their kids to school, attend church and support the local merchants year-round.

Recently, these same people sent out a very clear message.

Some of the people have interpreted this message as one of change. Some have said this is an indication village residents want a change in the direction the village is heading. They would like to see Ruidoso not grow as fast and settle down into the peaceful mountain resort it used to be.

I'd like to offer a different interpretation of that message.

I feel the people of Ruidoso are saying they would like to be thought of first, before thinking of our tourist and visitors.

This village always has been and always will be a tourist resort. Those of use who live here knew that before we moved here. But, it is also our town, where we chose to live and work. The people who live and work here call Ruidoso home.

If you want to see who these people are, look around during the month of April and you'll see who the locals are.

I feel the members of Ruidoso's work force would like to see the village improved, not for the tourist but for them.

I feel they would like to see the streets improved, not because it makes them smoother for the tourists to drive on, but because they are tired of having their car's front end realigned.

I feel the people want to see more parks in Ruidoso, not because they are beautiful places for the tourist, but because village residents might enjoy a place to have a picnic or a place to allow their children to play.

The resort hotel, golf course and civic center will be great for the tourist and convention business in Ruidoso. The Radisson Hotel, with the uniquely designed golf course and spacious convention facilities next door, will be an attractive drawing card for conventions and visitors alike.

The hotel and golf course will also benefit Ruidoso residents, the Radisson will offer another place in town to take the family for Sunday lunch. The golf course will offer Ruidoso residents another unique recreation opportunity.

One of the things which drew Melodee and me to Ruidoso was the people.

Despite all the political turmoil and controversy that has occurred in this village over the last year, the people remain the same.

We noticed, a year ago, how friendly everyone in this town was to each other. Everyone spoke to each other in the local restaurants. One gets the feeling that despite being in a resort community, you are still in a small hometown.

In the past year, I've learned why everyone speaks to one another. In a town where on a given summer weekend the tourists outnumber the locals, a familiar face in a restaurant or a crowd, stands out to you. You know that person, he or she is the one you see at church on Sunday or at the post office.

Ruidoso is full of caring residents who want to see this town improved and bettered, not for the tourist but for them.

Last year this town rallied behind a small boy who needed our help.

We need to rally together again and improve our town for those of us who live and work here. By improving it for ourselves, we will at the same time be improving it for the tourists and our visitors.

After all, we the work force of Ruidoso, are the people who make this community go.

On The Record

By Frankie Jarrell

My granddaughter's timing couldn't have been better.

Even though Taylor Love Hanna arrived a few days late, according to her mother's calculations, she was just in time for me. The plan was for me to spend a week with my new grandbaby and her family a week after she was born.

And, as it turned out, that week was the week before municipal elections.

Taylor Love, born Sunday, February 18, transported me from one of the most hectic times in this newsroom into one of the most peaceful times of my life.

While politicians did their last-minute politicking and Brian fielded calls and letters on the heated municipal elections, I was spending my time rocking a soft, sweet little baby.

I wrote three editorials, put three editorial pages together (except for last-minute letters) and left the news pages in Brian's capable hands. Bud and I took off for San Francisco to get acquainted with Taylor Love.

We spent some time visiting with our daughter and son-in-law, Catherine and Arthur, but the purpose of this visit was very clear.

Taylor and I had some great times visiting in her brightly-decorated room that is filled with teddy bears and all the stuff a new baby must have.

We hit it off immediately, and I liked talking to Taylor, because she really seemed to listen.

I told her about my grandmother, Joe Jessie Mahota Love Culwell, who was born in Indian Territory, a place that couldn't have been any wilder than California. Taylor is part of a long line of women who carry my grandmother's maiden name, Love.

I want her to know all about all the strong women in my family who have paved the way for her.

My grandmother lived to be 83, and never stopped learning and sharing her knowledge with others. The day before she died, she taught a women's Bible class at St. Mark Presbyterian Church in Lubbock.

She had a way of telling stories about her Papa and her childhood that made those far-away people, times and places come alive. Granny's dad, Judge Overton Love, took her to Washington D.C. one spring, and I can almost see her at the Easter egg roll on the White House lawn.

One of my favorite pictures is one of Granny, all dressed in white with her hair piled on her head, as part of an all-female mandolin band.

And Granny passed on her strong spirit to my mother, Ruby Love Culwell Stogner, born in 1909 in Marietta, Oklahoma.

That next Love, my mom, graduated from high school second in her class when she was just 16, and in 1929, she graduated from Oklahoma University. My favorite picture of my mother, shows her in her cap and gown the day she graduates from OU.

If you have anything bad to say about the Sooners, make sure you are out of reach of my mother's sturdy cane.

Through the years, Ruby Love Stogner has set a high priority on raising strong, competent children and grandchildren. As one of those children, I can tell you that she doesn't ever give up or quit.

She made sure all her children loved reading, and got right into school research projects and reports. When we all walked from our house to the library, you can bet the kids complained about the long walk before she did.

My mother's religious and political beliefs are clear and unwavering, and she has done her best to share those ideals and pass them on to her entire family.

And that brings me to the next Love, my sister, Joe Love Stogner Nelson, perhaps the most determined Love so far.

Since graduating from Texas Tech, Joe Love has worked as a social worker, taught Spanish, put in thousands of volunteer hours, raised four children and established a successful family violence program that serves West Texas.

Joe Love, once she sets her mind to something, cannot be stopped. That's probably why she was so successful in putting together the full-fledged, far-reaching program to aid victims of domestic violence in Lubbock County.

Joe Love inherited the determination and the strong will of her mother and grandmother, and added her own special energy that has turned her into a dynamo.

And that brings us to the next generation of Loves—my daughter, Catherine Love, and her two cousins, Margaret Love and Virginia Love.

These three young women, all graduates of Texas Tech University, are still making their marks on the world.

Margie, with her fiery spirit and flashing eyes, is just taking the travel business in North Carolina by storm.

Virginia, with her ready laugh and easy-going disposition, is in Singapore on assignment for her accounting firm.

And Catherine, my sensitive and thoughtful daughter, is on leave from her San Francisco lawfirm.

Watch out for this generation of Loves.

And then there's little Taylor Love Hanna, the first of a brand new generation.

I'm expecting great things of this sweet little girl, the first California Love, who arrived just in time for the nineties.

Letters to the editor

DEAR EDITOR:

I see where the New Mexico teacher's threat to strike, if they don't get a raise, has paid off. The Legislature has called a special session to consider a raise for them. The governor has followed the line of least resistance and to top it off, I voted for him. According to recent figures on teachers salaries the average teacher's pay is between twenty four and twenty five thousand dollars and in the case where both husband and wife are teachers that means around fifty thousand dollars. It appears to me that they either need to lower their standard of living or get in some other line of work; for instance Politics.

It doesn't appeal to me to be forced to pay an extra one hundred or more dollars in gross receipts tax in order for teachers to have a better standard of living.

My wife and I are on a fixed combined income of only about what half what the average teachers salary is. I'm sure I speak for a multitude of people who work for a lower salary or are on a fixed income and have to pay these increased taxes. These people do not have a union to represent them before the legislature.

Thank you very much
Guy C. Warnica

Modern Eye Care

by Wayne A. Delamater, M.D.

Eye Surgeon

CORRECTING A CATARACT

In its most severe form, senile cataract can lead to blindness. Fortunately for the cataract patient, this drastic consequence of cataract may be averted with a relatively simple surgical procedure. In the most popular form of cataract surgery, the extracapsular method, the eye surgeon need only make a single incision. While the patient is under local anesthesia, the surgeon works to extract the clouded lens through the small opening. After cataract removal is completed, a man-made lens is implanted to take the place of the orginal lens. (Otherwise, the patient may have opted for contact lenses or glasses for visual correction.) At this point, the operation is finished after approximately five sutures are placed close to the incision. After bandaging and usually less than one hour's time, the surgery is over.

For further information, please call or schedule an appointment with your eye doctor. Dr. Delamater specializes in medical and surgical diseases of the eye. He is certified by the American Board of Ophthalmology. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Ophthalmology and of the American College of Surgeons. His practice is located in Roswell, New Mexico. 624-0370

VIRGINIA HARRISON AND MARK MEDOFF

School is more than three R's; it's lights, camera and action

by VIRGINIA HARRISON
Special to The News

"Teach me every thing you know. There's so much to learn and so little time!"

After completing five television commercials for the American Red Cross, I found myself saying those words to Mark Medoff at New Mexico State University.

The Red Cross asked Mark if he would be willing to produce five 60-second spots on Aids Awareness, targeting elementary through high school age students. Mark agreed, provided the commercials be written, filmed and produced by students at New Mexico State University.

My stage management and directing teacher, Cindy Snelling, recommended me to Mark. I was to be his assistant for all five commercials. As Cindy walked me across the 30-foot high catwalk above the Hershel Zohn Theater, she said, "Virginia, there's not anything you can't do."

Acting is such a rush, but the real creative power happens behind the scenes. Since September of 1989, I have assisted Mark, worked makeup and wardrobe for the world premier of Mark's new play, Stumps, and stage managed Viking, a play for the New Play Festival at NMSU. That play recently went to regionals in Lubbock, Texas.

I also ran the sound for Charlotte's Web, and was the assistant stage manager for Ghetto, directed by Kim McCallum, artistic director for The American Southwest Theater Company. I was cast for the role of Nadeen in Gathrtings, a new play by Pat Cole to be presented at The Fountain Theater in Old Mesilla.

With all that, I finished my first one-act play, and maintained a 3.5 grade point while carrying 20 hours a semester. Not bad for a forty-two year old!

My new goal in life is not to add years to my life, but life to my years!

When I moved to Las Cruces in June of 1989 it was the first time I had ever lived alone. As I hyperventilated walking to math class during that first summer session, I began my journey from just surviving to learning how to live.

The second oldest of eight children, I survived a great number of problems while growing up in El Paso, Texas. My one-act play which is titled, To Life, is based upon an actual meeting which took place an August 13, 1988, at the Marriott Hotel between my two sisters and myself. We went back to El Paso to try and put the pieces of our lives back together. It is a story of love, courage, forgiveness, laughter and life.

I will be leaving Las Cruces at the end of this semester, to be with my husband as he begins his new OB/GYN practice in Albuquerque. I look forward to completing my degree in Theater Arts from the University of New Mexico in 1991.

The greatest lesson I take with me from my year spent at NMSU is best expressed by these gentle words, "everything flowers from within, although it is sometimes necessary to reteach a thing its loveliness."

The Plant Corner by Sally Black

Tomatoes - last time this season.

I do hope you still have the Tomato Column of 1-11-90. If not, write me; I'll send you a copy.

It is just about time to transplant your seedlings to the containers they will call home. I get the most pleasure growing my tomato seedings. It's psychologically uplifting to watch tomatoes grow, I always think this will be the year my tomatoes make the Guiness Book of Records. There is a school of thought that believes praying over seedlings helps—maybe so. Anyway, I always give silent thanks to Thomas Jefferson, my mother and God when I start the tomato seed rites. A superstition once held that tomatoes stimulated love—must be, for I truly Love tomatoes.

Cutworms love them, too, so when you transplant them to their permanent container be sure to wrap the stem, set a small stick next to the stem (so the cutworm can't wrap itself around it and cut), or make a cardboard collar. These collars are also effectively used on other vegetable transplants.

Stagger your tomato-seed plantings, so as to ensure fruit all summer. I like to plant several varieties of tomatoes, including a special type for canning. I have a theory that several varieties cross pollinate and make for bigger crops. Plant the canning ones last.

A word to the wise—a ladybug is a tomato's best friend, so if they come flying around when you set them out, rejoice and let them be. Don't forget to plant the marigolds and Basil in the same container with the tomatoes.

Now back to the old cutworm. Try all these tricks. Try crushing eggshells and working them into soil around plants. Soot sprinkled around the plants is also said to drive cutworms off, and so is a mixture of equal parts of salt, ashes and plaster of Paris, or just salt and ashes—but so be careful with the salt—too much could be harmful to the plants.

Weeds have been used to guard plants against cutworms. Keep the weeds growing downhill from the plants and permit the weeds to grow a few weeks between plants—just don't let the weeds get to big and out of control.

Plant the tomatoes deep (only tomatoes should be buried deep) at least 1/2 up the stem. All other plants should not be buried. Trim off lower leaves before you bury them. This is how to cope with a seedling that becomes thin stemmed and leggy. The stem will root all along hair roots and give a better and stronger plant. Fill in soil mix around plant and make a water basin, pour a couple of cups of Vitamin B-1 solution and repeat B-1 Treatment with each watering for a couple of weeks. The Vitamin B-1 helps stop transplant shock.

Tomatoes do not like shallow watering, so water deep, once flowers appear, water only every 2-3 weeks deeply or you will get growth without fruit. Watch the plant, it will tell you when it needs water, the top will wilt a bit when it needs water.

A good way to water deep is to sink a 2 to 4" plastic drain pipe, drilled with several small holes on all sides to the bottom beside each plant. Let the pipe rest on top of a flat rock at the bottom for good drainage, and keep the top open end of the pipe covered with a piece of foil, or another flat rock. Filling the pipe with water, depending on the size of the container, about once a week—do not over water or let plant become completely dry. If you can not find the large plastic pipe, some old downspout will do just as good.

Check your plants every day for the big monster worm with that ugly horn—he can be the worst enemy. Kill the horn-worm, dead, under no circumstances let him get away. He does not deserve to live. Also the white Fly is an enemy.

I don't know how I could be of more help. I wish you luck and take pictures of your tomatoes. Maybe we will have a contest and print your story on how to grow tomatoes.

Sharon Maines
Director of Consumer Affairs

Dear Sharon,
I've seen your new produce commerical on TV, the recipe cards in the produce department and the new nutritional signs on your counters. Why the sudden emphasis on produce?

Alicia Gomez, El Paso

Dear Alicia,
We're glad you noticed! Despite the blows the fresh produce industry took last year (Chilean fruit and Alar insecticide scares), the percentage of people reporting increased fresh fruit and vegetable consumption is up significantly this year. A lot of this has to do with increased nutritional awareness and calorie "consciousness".
You will find nutritional signage in the produce department along with a mobile recipe center that holds about 35 recipes for fruits, vegetables and herbs in each of our stores. These recipe cards will be changing throughout the season.
To further meet our customers demands, we purchase our produce through a nationwide buying service. This service acts as our field inspectors and assure us the quality of produce we want to have in our stores. This enables us to give you our Perfect Produce Pledge you're seeing on TV.
Our goal is to offer our customers the freshest, the sweetest, the ripest produce you can find.

Thanks for writing,
Sharon

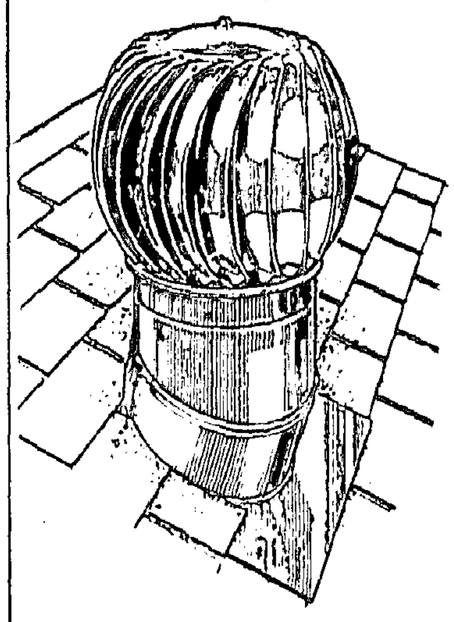
ROOF VENTILATION



Aluminum
TURBINE VENT

12" Internally Braced

WHY VENTILATION?

• Controls Condensation
Ventilation of your home provides condensation control, protects insulation and helps eliminate paint peeling, ceiling spots, plaster cracks, wood rot and roofing deterioration.

• Conserves Energy
Ventilation helps to conserve energy all year long. In the summer, ventilation can remove super-heated attic air before it radiates down into your living areas. In winter, proper ventilation can remove moisture which can seep into insulation and reduce its effectiveness.

• Complete Ventilation System
A combination of intake louvers and exhaust vents at the eaves and at the gable ends provides the necessary moisture control to prevent condensation and damage to your home. Individual requirements geographic location and type of house will determine the attic ventilation system that is best for you.

Stop in to see your 84 Sales Associate today. We will be happy to assist you in selecting vents to meet your particular needs.
