Snow — 50 inches in 5 days

Ski Apache, blessed with 50 inches of snow in five days, is this state's southern winter wonderland.

With a midway settled depth of 58 inches, Ski Apache reports that all trails and lifts are open and skiing is excellent.

For Christmas, Ski Apache offered skiers just what they wanted for the holidays — great ski conditions.

Roy Parker, Ski Apache manager, expects this to be the best Christmas the mountain has ever had, with 6,000 to 7,000 skiers taking advantage of the excellent conditions every day.

Last weekend's power outages, caused by a big snowstorm that swept through New Mexico, didn't phase visitors to Ski Apache.

Parker reported that the short-lived power outage was out of his control, but he's ordered an extra generator to have on hand just in case.

Meanwhile, Parker disagreed with previous reports that he was hesitant to give refunds to skiers who left the mountain early when the ski lifts were shut down because of lack of power.

"We gave them an option of a full refund or they could keep their ticket and ski again free at any time," said Parker. "Some people preferred a refund," he said, stressing that the management of Ski Apache did not hesitate to do whatever was necessary to make the skiers happy.

Parker disagreed vehemently with reports that The News received from a number of skiers and from several ski shops that Ski Apache had at first refused to give refunds.

As a matter of fact, Parker went on to say, the power was quickly restored to Ski Apache last weekend and at least 400 patient skiers got their refund and got to ski free for the rest of the day.

"There were lots of people who were patient and just stuck around," said Parker. "There were at least 400 people out here having a wonderful time."

Snowfalls that boosted the snow depth at Ski Apache were right in keeping with the rest of the state. Among all New Mexico ski areas, the average is 53.6 inches.

Ski New Mexico reports that Utah's area average is 42.7 inches, Colorado's average is 37 inches, California's average is 35.5 inches and Wyoming's average is 45.8 inches.

In New Mexico, Ski New Mexico reported that Taos Ski Valley has a midway depth of 58 inches, Red River has 48 inches, Angel Fire has 51 inches, Sandia Peak has 50 in-

And away we sleigh

J & B Sleighs offers sleigh rides on the streets of Ruidoso continuously through the winter and will offer buggy rides in the summer. The picturesque conveyance is pictured here amid a snowfall that hit the village on Saturday. Passengers and drivers bundle up to make the most of taking a sleigh ride.

Resort Air revs up to take off in 1992

If Dick Weber has his way a new regional airline will be formed to serve Ruidoso, Santa Fe and Taos.

The proposed airline will be named Resort Air and will connect with major carriers in El Paso, Albuquerque and Denver.

Weber is forming a public, not for profit, corporation. The goal of the organization is to spark economic development in rural communities.

"We are not limited to the towns we are including on the schedule," Weber said. "But can service small communities of 500 people and land on dirt strips. We also hope that chartering aircraft will be a major part of our business."

He has proposed an initial capitalization of $8 million to purchase equipment, advertise and operate for one year. This will include $4.5 million for planes and ground support equipment, and $3.5 million for operations and an initial advertising budget.

"We will attempt to make a presentation to state transportation authorities and request that they issue revenue bonds. If that doesn't do it, we will go to the public market and scale down our plans," Weber said.

In addition to Weber, other organizers of the effort are Ruidoso Mayor Victor Alonso, United New Mexico Ruidoso branch President Tom Rigsby, CPA Roy Crocker and Ruidoso Village Councilor Patricia Espinosa.

The airline plans to purchase five Convair 580's and three DeHavilland twin otters.

"We plan to focus on the needs of the customers and pay attention to those needs. We want to have clean planes with scratch-free windows that people can take pictures out of. We want our people to be interface people and call the customer by name," Weber said.

"If we start this we must continue. We must be dependable. Reliability is a key factor. People must depend on you like a light switch."

The Convair 580 carries 50 people and the Twin Otter carries 17.

"We could carry more on the Twin Otter," Weber says. "But we want to be sure and have a bathroom aboard. We will use the smaller aircraft during slower times."

Weber wrote to investors on December 18, announcing progress in creating a New Mexican airline and reminding them that donations can still be made to the Village of Ruidoso Airline Committee.

Weber said if all goes according to schedule, Resort Air should be fully licensed by April 1992.

"With the apparent lack of interest from Roswell, Artesia and Carlsbad, we will begin a hypothetical route for business planning which consists of El Paso, Ruidoso, Albuquerque, Santa Fe, Taos, Raton and Denver," said Weber in his letter. "The FAA-sponsored study, which is now under way, could provide us with alternate ideas that may change our first concept. Service to other cities in Texas, Arizona, New Mexico and Mexico continue to be distinct possibilities after a first route is established.

"As the new manufacturing center and port-of-entry at Santa Teresa becomes a reality, Resort Air will be in an excellent position to provide both passenger and air cargo service," he continued.

Weber said the first few dollars contributed were spent to buy an FAA manual, adding that the Village of Ruidoso's purchasing, accounting and legal services were all donated.

Recent financial woes that have plagued major airlines don't worry Weber and his committee.

"Since we began our effort one year ago, Eastern, Midway and PanAm have ceased operating and America West and American Eagle/Dallas have filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act. Is it really possible to start a new carrier in light of all this?" asks Weber, to which he answers, "Absolutely!"

Such troubles also have plagued previous air services that have served Ruidoso.

Mesa Airlines offered subsidized service into this area, and even with that subsidy Mesa operators indicated the routes that stopped at the Sierra Blanca Regional Airport never broke even because of low passenger numbers.

Air Ruidoso, a local corporation, was able to incorporate and obtain all the necessary FAA certificates to offer scheduled air service based in Ruidoso, but also went out of business here just a few years ago.

But Weber is convinced that Resort Air is offering something different.

"On opening day, we may be the most experience airline in the air," said Weber in his letter to contributors.

"Our proposed Chief Executive Officer and Director of Flight Operations is a 37-year veteran under part 121 regulations. Kerry Greer was a pilot, check pilot and instructor for Eastern Airlines.

"As our proposed chief pilot, Bill Campbell is also a 30-year veteran of Eastern. Many pilots have been contacting our proposed CEO and are apparently eager to become part of our concept," said Weber.

He invites anyone interested to attend meetings of the Village of Ruidoso Transportation Committee at 8 p.m. the third Wednesday of each month at Don Victor's Restaurant. The meetings are open to the public.

Dick Weber is working hard to create a new airline to serve Ruidoso and other New Mexico resort areas.

Hot rods and megabucks: the MRS saga

By A. GAYLE HUDGENS, Ph.D.
Special to The News
Part 6 in a 7-part series

Everyone agrees that any monitored retrievable storage (MRS) facility for high-level nuclear waste is a political issue, as well as an environmental one.

"Only politics and political action can stop the MRS," commented one Native American.

"Politics and hypergreed" was one clergyman's opinion on why the Department of Energy (DOE) or anyone want to build an MRS here in New Mexico, and specifically in the region in and around the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation.

"Of course the MRS is a political issue," said a staffer at the Nuclear Information and Resource Service in Washington, D.C.

"Anyone doing monitored retrievable storage creates a national, global and planetary issue."

"That's the last vote George Bush is getting from me," remarked a life-long Republican when he learned that David Leroy, the Nuclear Waste Negotiator, reports directly to the President.

Leroy, whose job it is to find a central place to store all the radioactive trash from the nation's nuclear power plants, has promised the host site providers, whoever that may be, billions of dollars and many added benefits.

The government tried long and hard to find someone to host the MRS, but no one wanted it — no one. So two years ago the federal government hired Leroy, the former Lt. Governor of Idaho.

"They are looking for patsies to take billions of dollars of liability," said a hazardous site development official of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

"The host is a means to their end: to keep the nuclear industry afloat," was the assessment of another observer of the "MRS extravaganza." "The host may have been brainwashed to think he's doing the country a service, but the reality is this: he's enabling the nuclear mob to create more and more evil waste, more and more problems for this Earth we share."

In the meantime, David Leroy has been going around the country giving speeches. In Atlanta on November 19 at DOE's low-level waste meeting, he talked about finding a voluntary host.

According to one witness, Leroy used his phase I grants with Mescalero and Grant County, North Dakota, as brag points.

Questioned specifically about the Mescalero application and who he had to deal with, Leroy answered that he dealt, of course, with the tribal official and legal representative of the tribe. He went on to say that if the New Mexico governor or the Congressional delegation do not approve of the project, he would drop it.

"I will drop it because my job is to solve problems for Congress, not make them."

The three sites being studied by Mescalero consultants are in Congressman Joe Skeen's district. As late as December 19, his office admitted that he still had not made up his mind about the MRS.

"He has lots of questions about it, such as what highways will be used for hauling the waste," said one of his staffers. Because of the risks involved, railroads are the required transportation Skeen's office was told.

"Since his ranch is near the Hondo site it is surprising that he isn't more informed and out ragedously opposed to it," said one rancher's wife.

On December 4, Leroy and Mescalero President Wendell Chino were on the program at a Native American Rights Fund conference in San Francisco.

Leroy reportedly quoted at length from the famous speech of Chief Seattle. Seattle's "speech" is now known to be a hoax, written by a Baptist minister back in the 1970's.

U.S. Representative Bart Gordon of Tennessee, shared his viewpoint about the MRS with

Briefs

Henry and Luana Rue win the Downs lighting contest

Several Ruidoso Downs residents were rewarded for their Christmas spirit and lighting decorations in the annual Ladies Auxiliary lighting contest.

The contest was judged Friday night, and Henry and Luana Rue of 350 East Highway 70 won first prize. They won $100 for the first place win.

In second place was Robin Surguy of 827 Colorado who won $75. The third place winners were Andy, Virginia, Dean and Corina Miller of 1700 West Highway 70 and received $50.

EDCLC narrows field for director down to five

The Economic Development Corporation of Lincoln County is one step closer to selecting an administrator for the corporation.

Ron Paulger, president of EDCLC, said the selection committee has narrowed the number of applicants down to five. He said they are now in the process of checking references, which is difficult at this time of the year.

After that is completed the committee will do interviews with applicants that are still interested in the position. Paulger said several of the applicants are from Ruidoso.

He said he hopes they will have the interviews and get some one selected shortly after the first of the new year.

State tourism group to meet

The New Mexico Economic Development and Tourism Commission will conduct its quarterly meeting from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. January 9, 1992 at Motel Stevens in Carlsbad.

Agenda items include a report from New Mexico First on infrastructure, an update from the Governor's Science Advisor on Space New Mexico and the Governor's Technical Excellence Committee, and an update on the status of the Presidential Rural Development Initiative.

The meeting is open to the public.

ENMU-R closed for holidays

The ENMU-Ruidoso office will be closed until January 1, 1992 and will reopen at 8 a.m. Thursday, January 2, 1992, at which time students may register for spring classes.

The opportunity for regular registration opens January 6 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the college office, 1400 Sudderth Drive. Special registration sessions will be at the following:

January 6—Hondo School Library
January 7—Capitan School
January 8—Carrizozo UNM Bank
January 9—Mescalero Tribal Center and Tularosa School.

Learn to type this spring

If the fact that you've never learned to type is hindering your job search or dead-ending your desire to conquer computers, Eastern New Mexico University's Ruidoso Instructional Center wants to help.

BEAS 101 is designed to develop the fundamentals of touch keyboarding and to introduce computerized document formatting. This beginning class is intended for students who have no prior knowledge in typewriting or have no/minimal knowledge of keyboarding. The class is offered twice a week, Monday and Friday afternoons from 4-6:30 p.m.

Call the ENMU-Ruidoso offices at 257-2120 or stop by 1400 Sudderth Drive for additional information.

Communications skills could help you find a good job

In today's competitive job market, how one presents oneself on paper and communicates in person often makes the difference between a job offer or another rejection.

If you could benefit from learning the vital role of effective communication in business by developing skill in writing materials which presents information in a logically organized form, this ENMU-Ruidoso class may be for you. The theory of communication, the principles, and techniques of effective business writing, verbal and non-verbal communication and organizational skills, as well as an in depth participatory look at the interviewing process will all be integral portions of this course.

A written paragraph demonstrating basic composition ability will be required in order to enroll. However, if you are needing some additional training or an introduction to presenting information appropriately and professionally, BUS 210, Business Communications, can help give you the communication edge.

Cloudcroft calls out the Air Force, declares emergency

The heavy wet snows of the weekend cause havoc in Cloudcroft. Power outages caused by trees falling over the lines resulted in not only electricity being cut off from residents but disabled the water supply in the village.

Mayor Mike Nevison said that the sewer plant was inoperative also. Residents in an area of the county east of the village were without power for 48 hours and many were without Communications.

Village radio communications were being kept operative by the use of auxiliary generators.

Helicopters from Holloman Air Force base were being used to spot areas where trees were over the lines and to direct crews to those trouble spots.

While the snow was putting the icing on the cake at Ski Apache, the Village of Ruidoso was receiving more snow on Christmas day.

Despite the continuing snowfalls and icy road conditions, Ruidoso Police report few problems in the village. Last weekend's ice resulting in a few fender benders, but on Christmas the village was quiet.

Ski shops report plenty of business, and owners and operators are gearing up a busy holiday season before students return to school after the Christmas break.

the Nashville, Tennessee, "Banner" last July: "Simply put, the so-called monitored retrievable storage (MRS) facility is a waste of money. It's an expensive roadblock that diverts funds, labor and political energy from the siting of a permanent nuclear waste storage facility, as directed by Congress four years ago, in Yucca Mountain, Nevada."

U.S. Senator Paul Wellstone, D-Minn. and a member of the Senate Energy Committee, stated in October that the Yucca Mountain site for a permanent deep geologic depository "was chosen largely out of political expediency. Running roughshod over state and local efforts to protect public health and safety is bad public policy ...

"The nuclear industry is pressing hard for a quick fix to its waste disposal problem. Radioactive wastes are a millstone around its neck. We would all like to find a solution—but not at the price of risking public health and safety."

At a January 1991, DOE-sponsored meeting on strategic principles for high-level nuclear waste management, a nuclear utility executive exasperated with DOE delays in the program, said he wanted the government to take charge of the waste by 1998 and "I don't care where you put it."

Buried in little more than shallow trenches or reactor cooling pools, nuclear waste for many years took a backseat to other public issues. Only as frightened scientists began to blow the whistle did this almost forgotten element of nuclear industrial complex emerge as a serious matter.

The "back-end" of nuclear technology now has become, in the words of a new report by the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research (IEER) in Takoma Park, Maryland, "one of the most vexing, contentious and costly environmental issues of our time."

Regulatory failures, inadequate technology, poor management, invalid computer models, sloppy engineering and indifference to public effects all have pushed open the door to stormy politics.

Public opposition to nuclear waste disposal sites has been spirited, says IEER, not only because of the "not in my backyard" syndrome but also because of "basic conflicts of interest." The nation's regulators of nuclear waste disposal, namely the Department of Energy and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, "have an agenda — sometimes stated, and sometimes only implicit — of producing nuclear weapons and promoting nuclear power." Such goals stand in the way and thus conflict, says IEER, with "providing sufficient time and resources to protect future generations" from the consequences of the politics overwhelming the science.

The urgency about the waste disposal problem — clearly evident in the 1982 and 1987 legislation for dealing with high-level nuclear waste — may have a politically expedient "stop-gap measure."

Luther J. Carter's assessment in his "Nuclear Imperative and Public Trust: Dealing with Radioactive Waste" (Resources for the Future, 1987) indicated the urgency was at least artificial: "the industry feeling was that the sooner this solution could be effectively demonstrated, the better for the industry politically."

The politics of nuclear waste is complex and frustrating for all the players, no matter their position on nuclear technology.

The complex nature of the beast stems from the issue itself which is multifaceted, encompassing highly technical and theoretical disciplines as well as common everyday life concerns such as health, money, a safe place to live, safe food to eat, and safe water to drink.

The frustration arises from the lack of a solution to a worldwide problem.

In its most recent report, the Worldwatch Institute indicates that the now global problem is so dangerous and deep that it will be with us practically forever. The 26 nations with nuclear power plants produced "9,500 tons of irradiated fuel in 1990, bringing the total accumulation of used fuel to 84,000 tons — twice as much as in 1985."

It is a problem that can never be solved, says Worldwatch, because the waste cannot be destroyed and there is no guarantee that it can be kept out of the accessible environment for its hazardous life span. Depending on the isotope, that period can range up to millions of years.

IEER is less pessimistic, but not much. Recognizing the reality that a long-term waste isolation option will not be available for many decades and that there are no safe or simple solutions, IEER recommends certain interim steps to allow time for development of careful and sound understanding of geology and climate in selective of a disposal option, development of waste forms with better isolation characteristics and research on new technologies.

"This will allow the science to be done in parallel with the politics, in contrast to the present program where politics and policy goals in areas other than public health and environmental protection have tended to dominate." The broad steps, without the many details, include:

—a total restructuring of our nuclear waste disposal program;

—a redefinition and reclassification of wastes and their disposal according to longevity and hazard level; and —an extended (up to 100 years) at-reactor storage of irradiated fuel where it is generated, together with a 100 year postponement of decommissioning after reactor shut-down.

A large part of the political problem, as IEER's authors of "High Level Dollars, Low-Level Sense" (to be published in 1992) see it, is that the Department of Energy has "repeatedly failed to conduct site selection and related activities with the scientific, technical and institutional integrity needed for a program with such serious implications for the health of future generations."

Their prime goal has been "on promoting nuclear power and in helping nuclear utilities get rid of the spent fuel" at the cost of "evading regulations" and threatening the public's health.

Because of DOE's "compromised programs" and "consistent record of failure in dealing with the radioactive waste problem," IEER says "the only apparent option to restore confidence, credibility, flexibility, and competence is to replace the DOE with an independent waste management authority."

Replace the DOE! Now we're really talking politics. But wait.

Here's what some of the experts have recently said that affects the politics of the monitored retrievable storage (MRS) facility which the Mescalero-Apache Tribal Nation may host on or near their reservation — a facility that would be the central (above ground) warehouse of the nation's most dangerous waste.

—a 1987 General Accounting Office study found the DOE had pushed the MRS concept without adequately considering alternative technologies.

—MRS Commission testimony in 1989 revealed that the DOE still had not looked at other possibilities.

—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission in its "Waste Confidence Decision Review," as reported in the Federal Register, Vol. 54, September 28, 1989, stated that it considers onsite at-reactor storage to be safe for at least an interim period of 100 years.

—The Board on Radioactive Waste Management of the National Academy of Sciences criticized DOE's rigidity and approach in its 1990 report, "Rethinking High-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal," and called for "major changes in the way Congress, the regulatory agencies, and DOE conduct their business, indicating they needed an approach designed for dealing with surprises and uncertainties.

"The studies done over the past two decades have led to the realization that the phenomena are more complicated than had been thought ... increased knowledge can lead to greater humility about one's ability to fully understand the phenomena involved."

—The Nuclear Waste Technical Review Board in its "Fourth Report to Congress" (December 1991) comments on its visit to Canada to review that country's spent fuel disposal program: "It appears to the Board that the technical communities in both countries believe that fuel can be stored safely on site at reactors for many decades. At-reactor wet and dry storage is being employed in both countries."

—The North American Water Office in Minnesota which has been working with the Mdeewankaton Sioux to fend off the Prairie Island independent spent fuel storage installation has stated that "the fight over nuclear waste storage facilities threatens democracy. Pure and simple, no rational body wants to host a radioactive waste dump. For a facility to be sited anywhere, jurisdiction over all aspects of the siting and nuclear waste management process must be stripped from the people living in the area most affected by the siting decision."

Furthermore, they said that siting this facility at Prairie Island right next to the Mdeewankaton Sioux community "is a continuation of the genocide European settlers have historically inflicted upon the indigenous population."

And finally, such a proposal "puts society on the road of blind evolution into an MRS program. We should not be following this road blindly ... the perceived narrow, short-term financial interests of the local utility" are an irresponsible substitute for the "utmost scrutiny in terms of siting criteria and the technology employed."

—The "only clearly identifiable motivating reason" to construct an MRS anywhere, according to IEER's 1992 study, is to help "reduce utility needs to build expanded storage—an entirely self-serving reason benefiting primarily nuclear utilities." Further, there are no "overall" advantages to building an MRS. "There is no cost advantage, and in fact there are recognized system cost disadvantages that are acknowledged by DOE."

In spite of these flaws, criticism, and official anti-MRS sentiment, says IEER, "DOE is still planning to build an MRS, and the administration is currently supporting energy policy legislation that includes an abolition of the schedule linkage between an MRS and a repository."

Which brings us back to the politics of the Mescaleros' MRS.

From press reports, it seems that Pacific Nuclear's Miller Hudson has been the prime influence on the Tribal Council's decisions thus far.

The uneven playing field includes an amazing array of one-sided propaganda materials designed to convince anyone without a prior knowledge of the complexities of nuclear waste that an MRS project would be sound economically and scientifically.

"Repeatedly reminding the tribe of the 'billions of dollars' involved, is self-serving to the nth degree," said one observer.

Among the fanfare of promotional materials being used by DOE in one proposed MRS location are letters, packets and supplemental materials including audio cassettes, booklets, and videos from the Nuclear Waste Negotiator, Virginia Power, Duke Power, and Sandia Laboratories. The videos ranging in length from 8 to 13 minutes cover MRS topics, dry casks, and container testing. Materials from foreign nuclear industries include pamphlets, reports, booklets, and speeches.

Assorted materials describing funding and benefit packages for the MRS host are conspicuous.

Noticeably absent are any materials illustrating the dangers of nuclear waste, the many scientific criticisms of the MRS concept, the damage done to local economies, radiation and cancer studies, environmental impact statements, accounts of exploitation of indigenous peoples, and reviews critical of the inadequate technology.

Pacific Nuclear and other financial beneficiaries of the MRS path, if chosen, are giving away no secrets, in the words of Anne Rowthorn ("Caring for Creation, 1989,") especially those about the dark side of nuclear energy—the harmful effects to people and to the environment."

Another political aspect ignored by the pro-MRS consultants is how the waste industry in general has threatened and exploited sovereignty. In his 1991 Greenpeace report, "The Toxic Threat to Indian Lands," Bradley Angel describes the minimal permit application process a waste enterprise can expect when dumping on Indian land: "scant public input or review," "little or no regulatory oversight" (Indian land is exempt from state and local laws); few tribal environmental laws; an inexperienced and inexperienced Bureau of Indian Affairs in terms of environmental issues, technical staff competence, and regulatory, inspection, monitoring and enforcement infrastructure.

"A company proposing to build a commercial hazardous waste disposal facility on Indian land is also aware that the permit application process is much quicker and easier than on non-Indian land," says Angel. "With no county or state permit process, and without a Regional Water Quality or Air Quality permit to apply for, a costly and time-consuming process is avoided completely—as is the environmental review associated with such permit processes."

Because of their remote locations, such facilities would not be the object of frequent visits by EPA inspectors, Angel indicated.

Just as incinerator, landfill and hazardous waste companies find sovereign Indian land attractive for their purposes, so too does the nuclear industrial complex.

A major political stumbling block in the case of the Mescalero MRS proposal, however, is that the Mescaleros want to control and operate an MRS facility and benefit financially from doing so ... but not on their reservation.

A similar land trust/land swap was tried with the Mississippi Choctaw and it did not work.

In Tennessee, however, when the DOE was attempting to place the MRS at the old Clinch River Breeder Reactor, DOE proposed a land swap. DOE was to release other DOE land to the local community compensation for removing the Clinch River site in consideration of industrial development.

If the Tribal Council breaks its promise and puts MRS on the reservation, then they will have a larger political problem than they've ever faced with their own people, observers say. If they opt to put it on the reservation, according to Lance Hughes of the Oklahoma-based Native Americans for a Clean Environment (NACE), "They'll have to go through the BIA which is more nervous about political things than the DOE because there is an effort to dismantle the BIA and this might be more ammunition to verify that they are not handling their responsibility."

As far as the political fallout with other Native Americans, Hughes says that they are alienated by the whole thing.

Willie Hardacker, lawyer for the Blue Dog Legal Services in Minnesota, says it's "clear, clear, clear" to him that "all facets of the nuclear industry wield a great deal of political power and are economically powerful with all kinds of economic resources at their disposal."

Thus, "economically and politically weak tribes are easy prey for these people who want to locate dump sites on their land." The tribes he represents as a lawyer get "stuff all the time for medical incinerators and hazardous waste facilities."

As for nuclear waste, Hardacker says "no one wants the stuff but we can see how the nuclear industry having weapons of radiation at its disposal borders on potential genocide because this waste can kill all these Indians. It's sort of a population solution, a return to fascist outbreaks. It's lethal for tens of thousands of years."

Viewed from Hardacker's point of view, the Indian-MRS experiment is a classic example of "mass-elite relations" which Michael A. Weinstein in his 1977 book, "The Tragic Sense of Political Life," made analogous to child-rental relations.

"The children strive to demonstrate that they are independent, while relying on the parents to support them. The parents dole out rewards and punishments to keep the children under control and motivate them to perform according to plan."

This relationship is also analogous to the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act (IRA) which Joe Sanchez of Citizen Alert in Nevada says created a 1930's good ol' boys network. "It's just like the U.S. propped up Marcos et al. Native folks do not choose the system that is imposed on them. We are not participating in it. The tribal governments were purposely put in place for the benefit of racist governments and corporations," said Sanchez, a Shoshone.

The DOE's new formal "Policies for Interaction with American Indians" rededicates the government to this same kind of IRA leadership, said one observer.

There is a consensus among Native Americans who have experienced the threat of toxic dumping and exploitation that Indian leaders who participate in this "good ol' boy" network are becoming a dying breed. "The generation that emerged from the IRA reforms was one that did the bidding for the U.S. Government. If the government wanted to extract resources such as coal or uranium, these leaders accommodated the government," said one Native American.

"The IRA was merely a legal mechanism to ensure that the tribal government would maintain control over the reservation resources for the U.S. government."

The tribal nations were and are "domestic dependent nations," said a Virginia researcher, under the guise of what looks like tribal self-government.

"The strings were pulled from Washington and not from any 'sovereign' tribal government. This was a legalization of exploitation of mineral resources, pure and simple," explained a Native American.

"It was quite clever because it looked like self-government. Now the DOE is pulling the strings again — its "interaction policy" notwithstanding — not to extract resources this time, but as a way to open the door to other tribes around the country."

Village of Ruidoso strikes out on tree planting grant

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The village of Ruidoso and the Ruidoso school system went home empty handed from the first round of grants handed out under the state's severance tax tree planting program.

Only Capitan and its Bear Roots Tree Committee won approval for a portion of its $50,000 application sent to the Energy, Minerals and Natural Resources Department, Forestry and Resources Conservation Division.

Gov. Bruce King announced the recipients earlier this week. Half a million dollars was available for tree planting, generated from the sale of a severance tax bond last September. The legislation was passed in response to concern about New Mexico's environment. Planting trees is one of the best ways to combat some of the detrimental effects caused by carbon dioxide, said Jim Freeman of the department's Santa Fe office.

"We received 94 proposals totalling $2.1-million. The awards were allocated to 29 different communities in 23 counties, representing both rural and urban areas," Freeman said.

"Geographic location definitely was a consideration. We attempted to spread the money around the state and not award in clusters."

The money is to be used to purchase trees and to provide for their long-term survivability after they have been planted.

That was one of the features of the program that attracted the Village of Ruidoso, said Gary Jackson, deputy village manager.

"We requested $49,758 for tree planting in phase one of the MainStreet project," Jackson said. "The grant would have covered money for the watering systems and we thought that would be a good approach. We also proposed planting aspens in School House Park and aspens, maples and cottonwood along the perimeter of the Grindstone recreation area."

The school district had zeroed in on money for landscape work around four of its school sites. Even though the $48,914 request included shrubs, something not covered in the program, it was a good proposal, Freeman said.

"It made it through to the fifth or sixth round of consideration when we were down to the serious contenders," he said. The village's application was eliminated in the second round, but Freeman was unsure on what basis since it was not one of the projects he reviewed.

"Most of the projects submitted had multiple objectives," Freeman said.

He said a committee comprised of department staff and representatives from other technical backgrounds reviewed and eliminated proposals for a week before selecting the final recipients.

Capitan's $24,056 award will be used in connection with the beautification of the village in preparation for the celebration of Smokey Bear's fiftieth birthday in 1993-94.

The group worked closely with Barbara Luna, Capitan district manager of the State Forestry Division, who helped organize the Bear Roots committee as a spin-off of the Friends of Smokey organization.

The largest grant, $45,207, was awarded to the city of Albuquerque and the smallest, $7,200, to Mora County.

This is the first year for the severance tax tree planting program, Freeman said.

"We hope the legislature considers refunding the program since a tremendous need was shown," he said. "It's sad that we couldn't fund every proposal."

Department Secretary Anita Lockwood said she was extremely pleased by the response to the program and hopes the legislature will renew the program next year.

"People are concerned about New Mexico's environment. This program shows just how much New Mexicans care about planting trees."

Winter ads target Fort Worth

by KRISTIE SULZBACH
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The winter advertising campaign for Ruidoso will include print, television and radio ads for the southwest and Mexico.

Visitors Promotion and Services Committee chairperson Joan Bailey said it is going to be a dynamite year because of mother nature and the many plans the committee has made. The winter campaign kicked off November 25-27 and then continued for several days at the first of December.

Bailey said the rest of the advertising will be done after the first of the year. The committee met Friday to discuss those plans with Phil Price of Phil Price Advertising Agency.

Plans were approved to place advertising in the Fort Worth Star Telegram ski section, and if it goes well to continue advertising there yearly. Bailey said the deadline to place an ad in the section is January 7, but she said she would also like to try to get some editorial copy into the section as well.

A deadline is close approaching for another area the group would like to advertise in, Texas Monthly magazine. The deadline for the March issue is January 10, but the group will make the final decision on this at the first meeting of next year. Bailey said by appearing in this magazine and possibly in New Mexico Magazine for several months in a row, it will show some consistency, and people will begin to look for Ruidoso advertising.

This project will wait because the committee doesn't have the funding for it yet. Bailey and Jerry Watts, chamber director, who are also on the Regional Advertising Board said the committee may be able to get some money from the RAB if they have specific projects such as this. Bailey said it could be between $30,000 and $60,000, which would give the committee a budget of about $200,000 for the fiscal year.

One market the group has already budgeted for and will hit hard in the winter campaign is Mexico.

"We want to be as aggressive as we can. We haven't even gotten our feet wet in this market. It is an excellent market because Mexican Nationals are coming with more and more dollars every year,"

Bailey said.

Last year advertising was done through XEROK radio and they will continue to do some this year. They will also have several advertisements in the print media at Chihauhau, Juarez and Monterey. The committee will also try to get advertising on Telemundo.

"There is an advantage to diversifying. All we did last year was XEROK radio station, now people won't say is that all? We are doing more with our money," said Watts.

Watts and Price said advertising on Telemundo should be inexpensive. Watts said they wouldn't have to make any new video shoots because they could use footage from the chamber's Ruidoso video. Price said they may also be able to use the audio cuts from the XEROK advertisements, but if not the production costs wouldn't be too much either.

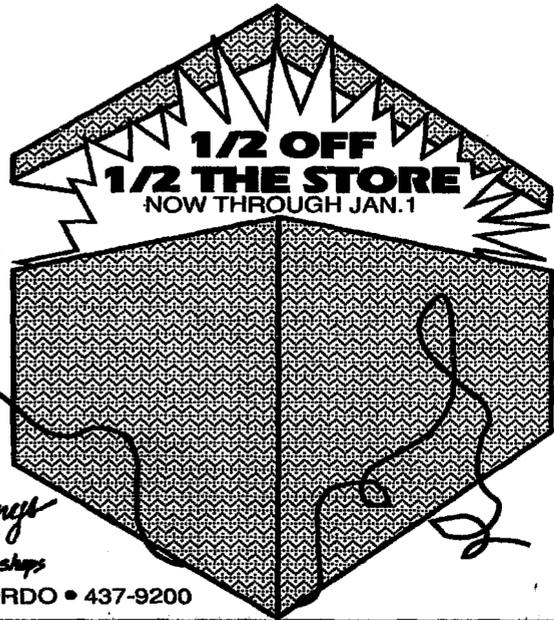

One package that had been planned but is on hold for funding is spring break advertising at major college campuses. Bailey said they decided to look into this area at the urging of many ski shops and businesses.

Eidson named to all-star team

by KRISTIE SULZBACH
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Shane Eidson was selected to the tight end position for the south all-star football team.

Eidson, a senior on the Ruidoso Warriors football team, played well the whole season and won several other awards. He was selected as the first team all-district tight end and was academic all-district. At the fall sports banquet Eidson was also honored by his teammates with the leadership award.

Coach Alex McAllister, president of the New Mexico High School Coaches Association, announced the selection of the 1992 North-South AAA/AAAA All-Star Football Teams and their coaches. These athletes will be invited to participate in the NMHSCA's 49th annual North-South AAA/AAAA All-Star Football Game on July 31, 1992 in Albuquerque.

The game will be played at the University of New Mexico Stadium. The teams were selected by a committee of head football coaches in each section of the state representing each AAAA and AAA district.

The game will again be played in conjunction with the 46th annual North/South All-Star Basketball games and the 48th annual NMHSCA Coaches School.

The coach for the south team will be Tom Gruber of Carlsbad and the north coach is Mike Sparaco of Raton.

Last year the south won 37-6. The series stands at 30 wins for the south, 15 wins for the north and three ended up as ties.

The net proceeds from these games go to the New Mexico High School Coaches Association's Ledbetter-Stratton Memorial Scholarship Fund. Recipients of this scholarship must have a physical handicap, graduate from an accredited New Mexico High School and attend a college or university in New Mexico.

Currently four students are attending college on this scholarship. Thirteen students have earned their college degrees through this program.

Several other athletes from the area were also selected to play in the North-South AAA All-Star game on June 20, 1992 at the Wool Bowl in Roswell. This game is only the second one to be played with the South winning 13-10 last year.

From Carrizozo Val Reyes was selected as a guard and Justin Portillo as a tight end. Representing Tularosa in the game are Shea Zerm at quarterback and Chris Trujillo at defensive back.

Travis Lee of Hot Springs will coach the south team. The north will be coached by Robert Bell of Estancia.

Check fish for mercury levels

Lincoln County residents who fish in New Mexico reservoirs should check the size of their catch to help judge the mercury levels for fish pulled from those waters.

Mercury has been found in some fish at concentrations that could lead to adverse human health effects. The New Mexico Department of Health and Environment Department earlier this month released guidelines for the public to assess the personal risk.

The source of the mercury contamination has not been pinpointed, according to Jim Edwards of the Ruidoso office of the State Environment Department.

The occasional consumer of fish from the waters tested is at little risk if in good health otherwise. But consuming mercury at levels found in the fish over a long period of time could result in health problems such as kidney disease, eye, respiratory tract or brain damage.

Currently, no legal restrictions have been imposed on catching or eating fish from state lakes or streams. No health risks from mercury appear to be related to camping, swimming or boating in and around the waters.

The guidelines are based on the size of the fish. After catching a fish, measure it from the tip of its nose to the end of its tail. Compare its length with the chart to determine if it is safe to eat. Fish on the dividing line should be considered in the higher group.

Pregnant women should eat no more than one meal a month of fish in group one.

Fish in group two should not be eaten by pregnant or breast-feeding women, those who plan to have children or anyone under the age of 18. Everyone else should eat no more than 26 meals of these fish in a year and no more than 13 of the 26 meals should be consumed in one month. The remaining meals should be evenly spaced over the rest of the year.

Group three fish carry the same restriction for women as those in group two. In addition, no more than 13 meals of these fish should be eaten per year, with no more than seven in any single month. The remainder should be evenly spaced over the rest of the year.

Fish in group four should not be eaten by anyone.

Waters and fish species not on the list may not have been tested. In the absence of specific information, use the guideline from the nearest lake. In many cases, the larger the fish, the heavier the mercury concentration.

Only reservoirs frequently fished by Lincoln County residents have been included below:

—Caballo near Truth or Consequences: group one includes white bass at 13 inches, walleye at 17 inches, channel catfish at 28 inches, largemouth bass at 12 inches and white crappie at 12 inches.

CAR BEGINNING TO BURN OIL?

Part Two

With proper maintenance, an engine should go well beyond the 100,000 mile mark without needing an overhaul. Check engine oil regularly, recommends Ruidoso Ford. If oil is over-full or smells like gasoline, it may be diluted with gasoline, thereby having lost some of its lubricating qualities.

If you have to pump the accelerator to keep the engine from stalling, you may be pumping raw gasoline into the crankcase. This situation can be avoided by keeping the engine in tune.

Misfiring spark plugs can aggravate a situation such as this because they permit raw, unburned gasoline to wash into the crankcase. Not only does this create hard starting, it also accelerates wear due to diluted engine oil. Another factor in oil burning is a malfunctioning positive crankcase ventilation (PCV) valve, which is intended to route oil vapors through the combustion chamber rather than permitting them to escape into the atmosphere. If the PCV system is not in proper working order, it can be the cause of oil burning.

Remember: excessive oil burning is a condition that gradually worsens and can affect other aspects of the engine. Like so many other car troubles, early detection and correction are essential.

Share your favorite wildlife viewing area

Do you watch wildlife? According to a recent survey you are in the minority of New Mexico if you don't. It seems most folks really enjoy getting out to see deer, elk, antelope, ducks, geese, prairie chickens and a myriad of other wildlife species found within our borders.

However, it's not always easy to find a good place to be able to see these critters. The Department of Game and Fish is trying to make it easier by putting out a guidebook for "Watchable Wildlife" viewing areas, and you can help.

Most folks know a few areas where they can go to have the chance to see some species of wild animal, at least during certain parts of the year. If you have such an area we would like you to nominate it as a wildlife viewing area and have it included in the guidebook. This way many more people will have the opportunity to enjoy our wild areas.

In nominating a site, please consider some of these recommended criteria. Of course, the site must offer a reasonably high chance of seeing wildlife and, just as important, the visits by people should not be likely to harm either the animals or their habitat. Sites should also be on public land, or have permission from the landowner if on private land. Access is also important be it by vehicles, bicycle, foot or boat and areas that have facilities for the handicapped are especially needed. Consideration should also be given, not only to wildlife, but the scenic quality as well.

One of the main goals of the guidebook is to provide diversity for the folks of the state. Geographical diversity, so that people get an idea about the special attractions from all regions of the state. Wildlife diversity, so that sites not only point out areas to see deer and elk, but lesser known animals like bats or bullfrogs. Last but not least, access diversity. Some folks like areas where they can drive right to the viewing area, especially those that are physically handicapped or that have small children to consider. On the other hand, there are folks that like to get off the beaten path to areas where horses or serious hiking are required.

To nominate a site for the "New Mexico Wildlife Viewing Guide" pick up a site nomination form from any Game Department office. You may also contact the head of the project, Don MacCarter in Santa Fe at 827-7882.

Sharing your special wildlife viewing area may be difficult for some folks, but just think of the enjoyment you will provide for others. It is also gives an important economic boost to New Mexico. According to a 1985 survey, "non-consumptive wildlife-related recreation" contributed nearly 120 million dollars to New Mexico's economy, and that's only considering the residents of the state. Just think of the boon from folks all across the country!

Sharing New Mexico's wildlife with folks from other states will provide another added benefit. Hopefully, all 50 states will participate in the program. This way, anyone traveling around the country will be able to appreciate the wide wildlife scenic diversity all over the nation.

R.D. Hubbard's Sixty Lady wins the 1991 Sunland Park Fall Quarter Horse Futurity

Sixty Lady came through with an impressive one length win in Sunday's $74,233 Sunland Park Fall

Q.H. Futurity at Sunland Park. The two-year-old filly by Streakin Six produced a strong burst of speed in the final 200 yards to pull clear off the strong field. Sunday's winner was coming off a third place performance in the trials.

Winning jockey Jerry Nicodemus praised his winning mount, "The filly broke better today. I think with a little improvement, she will be a real fine filly."

Sixty Lady, a 9-5 favorite, clocked the 400 yards in a fast 19.68 seconds.

Sixty Lady won the Ruidoso Sale Q.H. Futurity on November 3.

H. Don Farris, trainer and co-owner, indicated the West Texas Derby would be her next assignment.

Sixty Lady earned $37,116 for owners R.D. Hubbard and H. Don Farris.

Georgia Lindy closed well to get second place honors. The Georgia-bred started in 5th place and determinedly improved her position. She earned $12,619 for owner Faye Meeks, of Superton, Georgia.

Lincoln County coffers benefit from area National Forest visitors' receipts

Lincoln County collected $53,014 from the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) of the Department of Agriculture as its share of receipts from activities in the Lincoln and Cibola national forests during 1991.

The allocation represents the county's portion of receipts collected from the sale and use of national forest resources, according to F. Dale Robertson, chief of the U.S. Forest Service.

Sales in the Lincoln National Forest generated $48,249 for the county and sales in the Cibola accounted for $4,765.

Bernalillo County collected the most money in New Mexico at $323,672, followed by Rio Arriba at $260,189. Chaves saw the smallest return of $5,339.

Robertson said the money is collected primarily from timber sales, grazing of livestock, recreation and mineral extraction on 191 million acres of national forest land. The payments do not include 25 percent of the 1991 national grassland revenues, which will be paid in March 1992.

New Mexico will receive $1.36-billion from the forest service from the five national forests within its boundaries: Cibola west of Albuquerque, Lincoln in the south central mountains and around Carlsbad, Carson in the extreme northwest, Gila to the west and the Santa Fe.

New Mexico and Arizona comprise the Southwestern Region of the forest service and will receive a total of $6.36-billion.

But that's penny candy compared to Oregon, which received $141-million, California at $56-million and Washington at $41-million. North Dakota collected the least, $68.05.

On September 24, the department sent interim payments of $228-million to states based on estimated national forest revenues for the year. A final payment of $94-million, based on actual receipts collected during the year, was paid last week.

Actual fiscal 1991 receipts collected from the sale and use of national forest resources totalled $1.29-billion. By law, 25 percent of the revenues collected by the forest service from use of national forest lands and resources are returned to the 41 states where the lands are located. The states are required to use the money for schools and roads.

Weather spirits celebrate Christmas

A Christmas Snow Welcomes Winter

On the twentieth freezing mist and fog that had drifted in out of the North began turning into very fine snow toward nightfall.

The snow fell all night, along with sleet and freezing rain, and by the morning of the twenty-first the fine snow turned into large flakes, and fell almost all morning. The snow storm let up about eleven o'clock, just long enough to catch its breath and then start out again.

It was a wet, heavy cold snow that clung to everything it touched. Since it was traveling from the north east, that side of power poles and tall trees were outlined in the close-clinging snow.

By eventide the vale was covered with about ten inches of snow which weighted down the cedar bushes until they touched the ground with their tips, as the snow kept falling all the evergreens were covered the pines looking like trees of pure snow, and the cedar bushes like white round tents. I do not remember seeing such large tufts of snow on the piñon, cedar and juniper, and also the oak and walnut by the river-side.

One of the main limbs of the large cedar tree at the yard gate was weighted down with its tip buried in the snow, forming a snowy archway entrance into the yard. This is the first time I have seen this snow and cedar archway.

The twenty-first ended with light snow falling over the snowy meadows trees and hillsides.

Snowy Morning

Then this morning the world awakened to a Christmas-card snow scene under a dark blue sky with the snowy vale all in a silent and quiet hush. There was no sound or movement, as the mountain world welcomed in the First Day of Winter.

Then from up the valley you heard an approaching wind, voice singing through the river trees and over the snow clad meadows and hillsides.

And here came the west wind, blowing the cedar branches loose from the hold of the snow on the ground; the branches were waved and whipped and lashed by the driving western gale, but refused to let go of their heavy tufts of snow.

It was something to behold—these branches refusing to let go of their large handfuls of snow on the ends of their branches, while they whirled and tossed and waved in the wind.

As I drove out about mid morning, on part of the road I drove through a snowy tunnel of over-hanging cedar limbs weighted down with snow.

And now just before sundown on the first day of Winter, the world is quiet again, and all the snowy ornaments on the evergreens have been blown away, and there they stand bare winter green against a back ground of pure white meadows and hillsides.

Sunshine and Snow

And now it is one hour before high noon on December twenty third and from the little sun room you look out to the south at the American flag floating in a blue sky with the mountain beyond a patchwork of white and green, and the blue bird meadow shipping and sparkling, radiant with snow jewelry as the snow begins to melt. The snow birds chirping and singing with joy, go skipping over the snow drinking from these sparkling snow drops and feeding on the grass stems that extend up through the snow.

A Good Snow

This is the heaviest snow I can remember, and one of the coldest. You can see this by the way the snow is still hanging on to the hillsides on the sunny side of the valley even with the bright sun beaming down.

The heaviness of the snow was brought home to me yesterday when I saw the landmark oak tree by the river bend meadows had three large limbs broken by the weight of the snow. Often times when a late springtime snow falls on the trees that have already leafed out, you can see three branches broken by the weight of the snow.

But this is the first time I have seen an oak tree in the winter, bare of leaves to catch the snow, and still with limbs broken by the weight of the snow on their branches.

This snow will stay on the ground a long time, because of the short days of late December and early January, generally "The Deep of Winter" the coldest time of the year.

This snow is money in the bank for the moisture of the land, a Christmas present from Jack Frost and the Weather Spirits. Mother Earth is smiling her white and Golden smile, and saying a Christmas and New Year prayer of thanks to God.

Looking Forward To Christmas And New Year

This is being sent to you on December 23, and will reach you on the day after Christmas.

Today I am praying that you will have a wonderful Christmas, and I am remembering back to many happy Christmas times back through the years. In Alaska our Mother made blueberry pies, Christmas cards for each other and neighbor children with pencil and crayon. One of them is in the house today drawn by Brother Joe, with a picture of a church surrounded by snow with the words: "Outside its cold, but inside the church its nice and warm. Because the Lord is there."

I remember our voices joined in singing the Christmas Hymns in Church while our Mother played the organ. Then at home we sang the Christmas hymns while Mother played the small family church organ, which is now in the Home of Brother Lynn and his wife, Maxine, in Dripping Springs, Texas.

The Christmas season last until January six; so let us carry the Spirit of Christmas, the birthday of our Infant Saviour, over into the new year and always.

Let us thank Our Lord for a wonderful Christmas season and all our many other blessings.

GARY MILLER
PART 11 IN A SERIES

GARY MILLER WITH SOME OF HIS WORK

Gary Miller art merges the creative with the logical

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Throughout his life, Gary Miller has struggled with two opposing forces in his personality.

He has wrestled with the challenge of trying to blend those forces, the creative and the practical, into a career that could be rewarding emotionally and financially.

His latest attempt to channel that creativity will be his most public project to date as conceptual architect and curator of the Museum of the Horse.

"The biggest difference in this type of undertaking is that it is not a solitary activity," Miller said. "You can't tear it up if you're disappointed. It's out there for the public to see whatever the results."

EARLY YEARS

Born in Seattle, Washington, Miller inherited the legacy of all military families, he moved every few years. Never staying long in one place wasn't the only force keeping him in a state of flux as the son of a career Navy pilot and a Virginia-bred artistic mother.

"Unfortunately or fortunately, I inherited both their tendencies, the practical and the artistic," Miller said. "I used to think I was very unique, but as I got older I found that several well-known artists such as Wilson Hurley and Peter Hurd had that military background."

"But it's not easy to flip flop, to go out one day and sell a product and the next day, be an artist. There's always a tension, a love-hate relationship."

That drive to apply his art in practical ways found an outlet in a Seattle high school where he was able to study architecture for three years.

"They had a good program and a friend's father was a contractor. I got associated with that," Miller said.

Using a dart board approach to selecting a college in the Southwest, Miller ended up at New Mexico State University in Las Cruces.

"I studied art there. Like 'he typical high school student, I wasn't sure what I wanted to do and I knew I was comfortable with art."

It was the Vietnam era and Miller enrolled in the university's ROTC program. His college career, like his life, was split between the military and art.

Miller graduated in 1967, married his wife, Dee, and moved to California.

"I realized that I had never associated with the arts," Miller said. "College is academics, not people who make a living at it. It dawned on me that I couldn't make a living."

He joined the Air Force as a second lieutenant and went to navigator training in Maitland Air Force Base in California. For two years, he left art behind and became a navigator in a B52 bomber squadron. He saw active duty while based in Utapao, Thailand.

After six years in the Air Force, the realization hit him that the work was not very creative, although it appealed to the technical side of his nature.

"After you land the plane, there's nothing left. You can't say I built this. I did some soul-searching and decided I wanted something more creative in life," Miller said.

He left the Air Force, enrolled at New Mexico State University in 1973 and earned a master's degree. He studied with Ken Barrick, head of the art department. To satisfy his practical side, he also took education courses, thinking he might teach art at a junior college and paint in the summers.

LINCOLN REBIRTH

He focused mainly on graphic arts and etching, and for a while, taught some watercolor courses.

"Along the way, I bumped into a guy named Michael Hurd, who had been in industrial real estate in Chicago. He wanted to become an artist, but his family had wanted him to pursue any other direction," Miller said. "When he seemed determined, his father told him to go to New Mexico State and Barrick to learn the basics."

Hurd occasionally invited Miller to the family ranch in San Patricio.

"He asked me what I wanted to do with my life and I told him maybe go into the museum business," Miller said.

Hurd offered to put Miller in touch with some people who might be able to help, such as gallery owner John Meigs and art-history benefactor, oilman Robert O. Anderson.

They were interested in a new project. They wanted to take a neglected piece of history, restore it and invite the public to enjoy the results.

Miller was hired to head the effort to revitalize the historic settlement of Lincoln, where Billy the Kid and Pat Garrett once roamed.

"They wanted someone with a big paintbrush, not an academic, someone practical," Miller said. He was appointed director of the Lincoln County Heritage Trust in 1978.

"At that point, it was like a ghost town," Miller said. "There were no people, no dogs, lots of barbed wire and old buildings."

"Mr. Anderson made a determination that it would never be preserved unless someone waved the banner. It was a national historic landmark and people ought to be more interested. You could ask people in Ruidoso where Lincoln was and no one knew."

"Through a number of years in an alliance with the state, interest has been raised, a museum has been created and buildings restored. It's unique in the American West. Dodge City, Tombstone and Deadwood all have been destroyed by over-commercialization."

"Lincoln stands alone, no grocery stores, gas stations or curio stores. In the long term, I think that will be more appreciated."

The pragmatist and the artist came together in the Lincoln project.

"We had some real battles on how to create a town, but I think there's a certain reward...knowing that it might not have been done if you had not been there," Miller said.

"In arts management, projects have lifetimes. Lincoln to me is a finished canvas. That's not to say others can't paint on it, but the time of taking a ghost town and turning it into a national monument is passed."

After the Lincoln project and encouraged by his wife, Miller again took up the brush.

Watercolor is his favorite medium and landscape his special subject.

That preference he dates to the three years he lived in England, from 1957-59.

"We didn't live on base, so I had the opportunity to visit the Tate Gallery in London and experience my first real exposure to great artists."

He gravitated toward Joseph Mallord William Turner, perhaps explaining his affinity for landscape.

He broke his leg high jumping and while he was healing, he experimented with painting, primarily oil.

"For the first time, it occurred to me that maybe people can say something through painting," he said.

But today, his work centers on watercolor.

"I just think it's an interesting medium and extremely mobile," he said. "It combines detail with broad brush. You slop all the paint on and then come back with a pencil, pen or brush and can be real detailed. So probably that's the engineer and the artist fighting again."

He enjoys working on site.

"It's more exciting because you have to do it now. You can't think it and study it. You go to the field and do it," he said. "It's fast decision-making. If you're right, you save it. If not, throw it out."

He especially enjoys painting New Mexico landscapes because of the sense of freedom they convey and scenes in Washington State because of its majesty.

However, it wasn't long after leaving Lincoln before Miller was looking for something more tangible again.

A NEW MUSEUM

"My creative talents turn to other things, three dimensional design, facility planning, murals and sculptures that might go inside or outside," Miller said. "Then I turn to other artists to bring the projects alive."

"I'm realistic. I know where my talents lie, in architectural design, exhibition design and historic preservation."

His love of history stemmed from his years in England where his family lived for three years in a 700-year-old cottage that used to be a blacksmith's shop. Leaded glass windows and a tree plastered into the wall were constant reminders of the past.

"You can't help but get a sense of history and wonder who lived there before," he said. The history is more tied to physical things than academics."

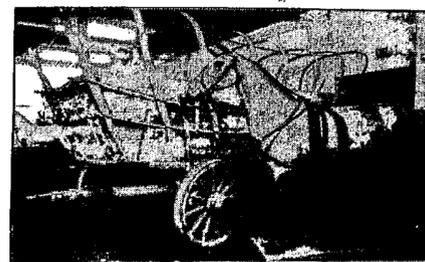

Enter the Museum of the Horse and R.D. Hubbard.

"When this project came up, it was basically tough because people don't know what they want to do," he said. "It's like starting at a blank canvas. You have a vision. Whether you can make it happen is the real challenge."

"Beginning projects always intrigue me." The mainstay of the museum is the Anne C. Stradling collection of horse-related artifacts based in Patagonia, Arizona.

"At one time I had tried to get it for Lincoln or Fort Stanton through the Trust," Miller said. "Anne was not in the best of health and there were a number of museums interested in the large collection, but only in segments of it. She was determined it would be all or nothing. It took a long time putting it together (nearly 70 years) and she wanted somebody to safeguard it all."

Stradling's family was involved in fox hunting and polo back East and when she took off for life in the West, she carried that equine affection with her to her ranch. As she continued her travels around the world, Stradling collected unusual items such as saddles from Argentina and China, spurs from Spain, a Scandinavian horse ornament and a French silver sidesaddle stirrup.

"When the collection finally came to Ruidoso, Mr. Hubbard asked if I was interested in sorting it out," Miller said. "It was another chance to start from scratch."

He sees the project as southeast New Mexico's chance to show its interest in museums and the arts, fields that have been monopolized to a great extent by the northern sections of the state for years.

To be successful, however, the museum will need community support and a benefactor. Many questions remain such as to what extent will horse breeders become involved and if there will be an extensive horse library.

"This is a real opportunity," he said. "There's nothing dealing with horses anywhere close and I think there are enough people associated with and interested in the horse. It's not like dead, history and it's a worldwide history. The evolution of the horse began in the new world, then moved to Europe and was transported back. We're actually in the area where the horse started."

A mural showing the evolution of the horse over 50-million years probably will be the central emphasis of one display, Miller said.

The 30,000-square-foot museum building, which will undergo extensive renovations, begins to shrink when looking at the tremendous smorgasbord of horse artifacts, Miller said. Over the next two years, he will have to determine the major focuses of the museum and how to blend them together.

Right now, he envisions huge backdrops depicting turn-of-the-century life in America as a framework for displays. One long mural will show Stradling's house next to the Franklin D. Roosevelt home on the Hudson River.

"In art administration, it's basically the team concept," Miller said. "You have to leave the individual artist in you behind and realize that others also are painting on the canvas. But it's hard. As an artist, you're used to producing your personal vision. Painting is basically a solitary experience. The public may or may not ever get to see the finished product."

"This project is very public. Once started and a product is created, I can't throw it in the garbage can."

Miller hopes to see construction begin within the next month on the new entrance to the museum. Because the building sits so low, the entrance will be tied into the second floor and will be in the form of a tower to draw attention from the highway.

Plans also call for a bookstore, giftshop and limited cafe. An exhibit area will be allocated for the top floor with a balcony overlooking the Stradling collection. Miller sees the exhibit area being changed periodically to offer interesting new information to summer visitors.

Five acres between the building in Ruidoso Downs and U.S. 70 have been purchased for parking.

Plans now call for the museum's doors to open in early summer, although Miller does not expect the entire project to be finished by then.

Running a museum, Miller says is a mixture of preservation, education and showmanship. Apparently, he's finally found the perfect blend for the artist-aid pragmatist.

Volunteers make the world better

Volunteers are the key to making life better for lots of people in and around Ruidoso. They're at work in the hospital, in the schools, at the care center, at the food bank, with Family Crisis Center, Lincoln County Humane Society, at SantaCops workshop and through various special events all year long.

The Ruidoso News salutes those generous and compassionate people who spend their spare hours doing volunteer work. It would be easy to say, "I don't have the time, let somebody else do it," but there are many people in Ruidoso who never say that, and they add to the quality of life in various ways.

Lincoln County Medical Center's Auxillary saves the hospital and its patients hundreds of thousands of dollars by raising funds, buying equipment and serving as hospital volunteers to answer telephones, provide a coffee shop and deliver flowers and mail to patient rooms.

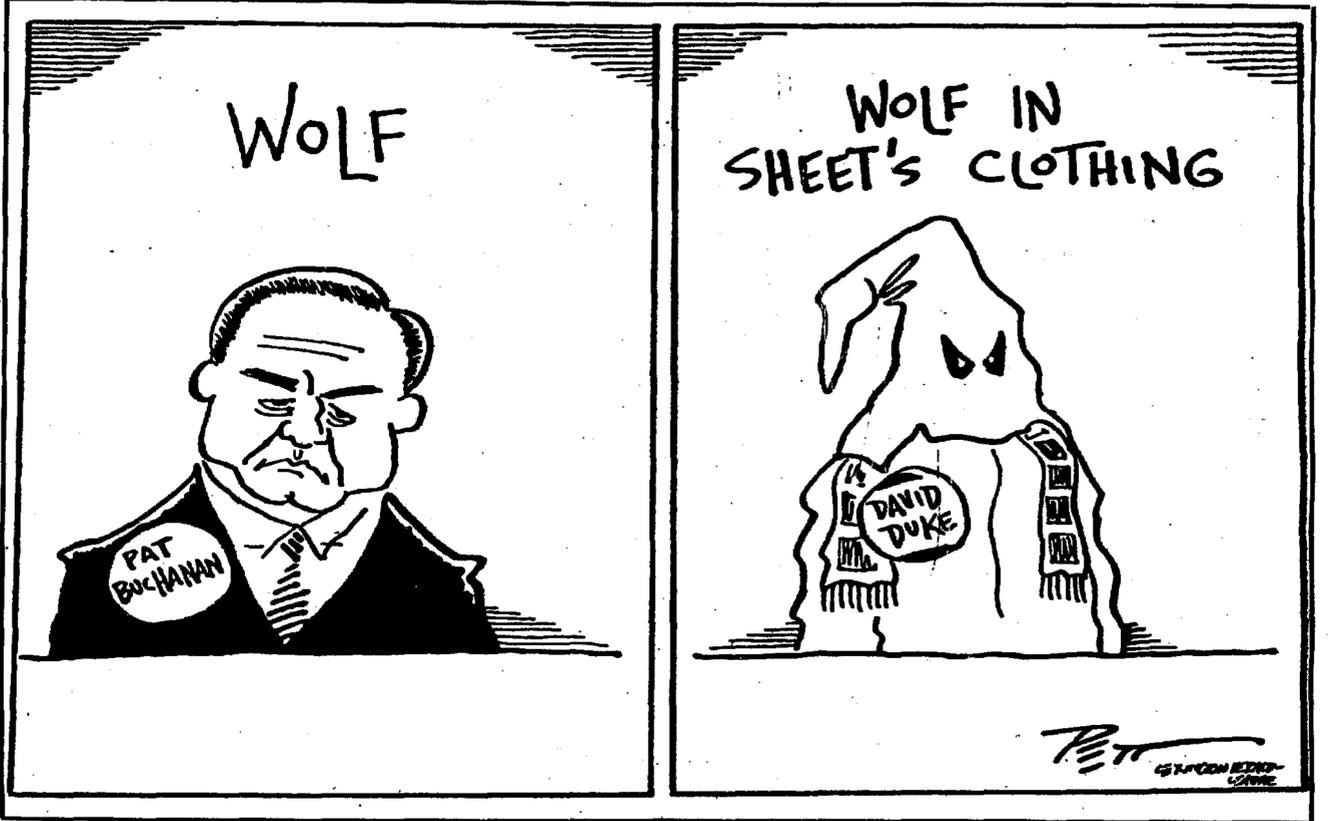

That's only the beginning. Parent Advisory Councils are at work in several Ruidoso Schools, with parents spending many hours enhancing educational opportunities in the school system. More help is needed.

Ruidoso Care Center's auxillary takes care of the little extras — like Christmas gifts, clothing, toiletries and such — for residents of the center.

Family Crisis Center and the Lincoln County Food Bank are operated solely by volunteers, as is SantaCops. The Crisis Center volunteers spend time in training to provide emergency help and advocacy for victims of domestic violence. The Food Bank relies on donations of food and money to keep the pantry stocked, and on volunteer help to distribute the food. SantaCops is just winding down its annual project of gathering and distributing food, gifts and toys to the needy of Lincoln County. The Humane Society would not exist were it not for a dedicated bunch who organized the group and have stayed with it through some tough years.

Members of clubs and civic organizations donate time and energy to fundraisers and special projects. If something good is happening, you're likely to see members of Altrusa, Lion's, Kiwanis, Sertoma, Rotary, Knights of Columbus or others in the midst of it.

A thousand thanks to the volunteers of Lincoln County! If you've never joined them, make that your new year's resolution. Even if it's just an hour or two a week, take your pick among the many needs — choose the one that fits your talents — and join that select group of Ruidoso saints.

Members of Youth Authority stand by their man

TO THE EDITOR:

We are writing in response to the five-part article (on the State Youth Authority).

As people who closely monitor the work done by the New Mexico Boys' School, one can say without equivocation that we have never been associated with more dedicated groups of people than Mr. Portillos, former superintendent, and his staff. They are people who are not "just doing a job", but as has been evidenced time and again, they genuinely care for the juveniles placed in their trust.

It is true that overcrowding, lack of money and gangs are major problems. It is also true that today's residents are older, have committed more violent crimes than was the case several years ago. It is also true that some changes in the law are needed to correct some of the current problems in the system. We also agree that much more needs to be done in the vocational area to equip these young men with the job skills they need to properly reintegrate back into the community.

What is not true, however, is the implication in (the Sunmount Syndicate) articles that Mr. Portillos and his staff had done little to correct the problem.

If (the author) will take the time to study the budget records, you will find that Mr. Portillos, addressed the problem and issue with the legislature time and again. While his problems were multiplying at accelerated rates, the legislature was funding his programs at an incremental level. The finances and resources have just not been there to help him resolve the institutional problems.

The geographical isolation of his facility also made it difficult to attract staff whenever he did have the funding for positions.

Frankly, the Board members feel that (the) article is attempting to make Mr. Portillos the scapegoat for problems over which many can share the blame.

Further, if you will inquire about the history leading to the formulation of legislation for the development of the Youth Authority, you will find that Mr. Portillos was the only high profile executive in juvenile corrections that openly supported the Youth Authority concept and legislation. The Board distinctly remembers the support he gave to Representative Ruben Smith and the lobbying he did among the juvenile corrections professionals to get support for the program. This was not a popular position for Mr. Portillos to take but he felt the Youth Authority concept was worth pursuing. It's ironic that one who worked so hard in making the Youth Authority a reality is painted as an enemy of progressive change.

Mr. Portillos has been at the helm of the Youth Authority for only 10 months. Give the man the same chance you have given other department heads. Take a look at his work in another year and then judge his accomplishments. He, like all department secretaries deserves a grace period.

Meanwhile, the members of the Juvenile Parole Board, as well as most of the employees in the Youth Authority, continue to have faith that Portillos will guide the department well in the future as secretary.

Non-taxable certificate fee hurts small businesses

TO THE EDITOR:

As a small business person in this small New Mexico village, I would like to express my written disapproval of the law passed in Santa Fe that requires a $100 fee for the right to reissue non-taxable transaction certificates.

In this state, as in many others, small businesses have the added burden of being tax collectors for the state. As if the time spent collecting and paying gross receipts tax were not enough, we are now asked to reissue non-taxable transaction certificates (for some of us that can amount to quite a few). Plus we are now asked to pay a fee for that privilege.

In a number of states, businesses are paid up to 1/2 percent of the gross receipts taxes they collect for their efforts in collecting and paying these taxes.

When I contacted my representative I was told that this new fee would bring in a lot more revenue for the state. I say, no kidding! With a hundred bucks from each of us they just might be able to add a fair amount to the $22,000,000 they've already spent remodeling CLUB SANTA FE! Perhaps they could add some of the niceties enjoyed by our honored national congresswomen (and congressmen) in CLUB WASHINGTON!

Citizens must organize to fight nuclear waste site

TO THE EDITOR:

We have the unique privilege to live in an unspoiled mountain resort. There are very few places left in America that are pollution free. We are billed as the playground of the southwest, with fishing, skiing, camping, hiking, and a host of other family oriented activities.

Now enter a wealthy, elderly but powerful man. Wendell Chino, president of the Mescalero Apache nation. He wants to put a poisonous nuclear waste dump in our beautiful mountains.

Who wants to play next door to that? I realize the reservation is a nation within a nation; what do the Mescalero people want? Surely they are not in favor of this desecration of their land; what about your brother the bear?...

I believe a show of solidarity is what's called for because if Mr. Chino has his way we will no longer be a playground that people will come to enjoy but perhaps be billed as the most scenic waste dump in the southwest.

Please, citizens, let's fight for our right to live in a clean environment.

Mr. Chino is an elderly man; he won't have to live in the mess he will create, but your children will.

RGA has been serving area youngsters since '79

TO THE EDITOR:

Ruidoso Gymnastics Association (RGA) is a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting the sport of gymnastics in the Ruidoso area.

This organization has continually benefited hundreds of children in the Ruidoso area since 1979, not only in the field of gymnastics but also dance, day camps and other recreational after school and summer pastimes.

RGA has been in existence 12 years and has spent the past eight years raising funds to build a gymnasium to house the gymnastics program. At this point, we have approximately 75 percent of the funds for our building and we are seeking donations in order to complete our project as early as possible.

For those persons in a position to take advantage of the special tax break allowed in 1991 for donations of appreciated tangible personal property to charitable organizations or for those persons or companies with land or money they would like to donate to a qualified non-profit organization, Ruidoso Gymnastics Association is that qualified non-profit organization and will work for that 1991 deduction. Other details available for interested contributors.

Two RHS students nominated to military academies

Skeen names Joe Moore

Congressman Joe Skeen has nominated 29 students to the nation's military academies, including one Ruidoso High School senior, Joe Moore.

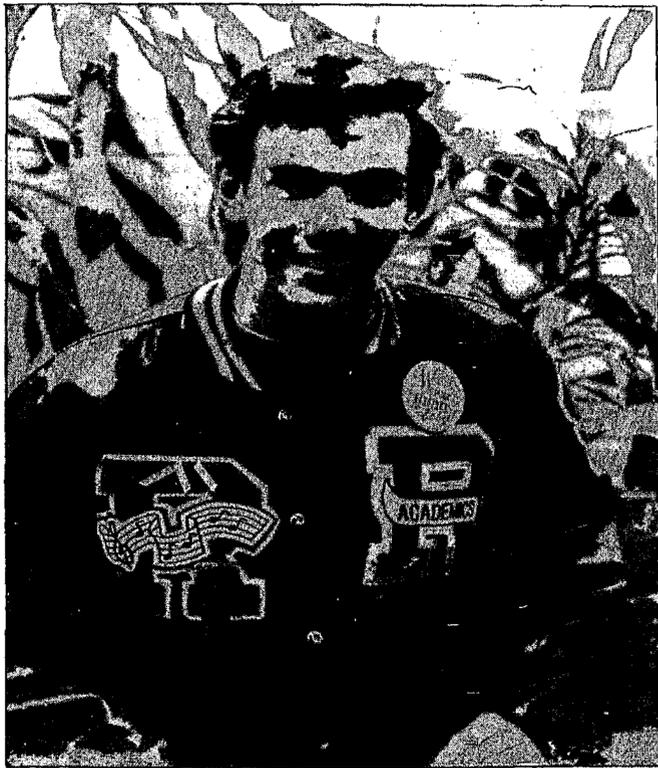

"Every year, I am more impressed than the year before, with the quality of our young men and women from New Mexico who seek careers in the military," Skeen said. "They are bright, articulate, athletic, well-rounded young men and women. Each is a credit to their school, their family and their community."

Moore was nominated to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland.

Moore is the son of Charlie and Mary Lou Moore. He is band major for this year's 24-Karat Gold Marching Band.

Before a student can be nominated by Skeen to attend one of the academies, an extensive application, complete with letters of recommendation and an essay explaining why they would like to attend the academy, must be submitted and reviewed by an appointed board. Each student then meets with one of two academy review boards, appointed by Skeen.

The board members offer their recommendations to the congressman, regarding the event's nominees.

JASON WEILL

Bingaman taps Jason Weill

Senator Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) announced that he has nominated Ruidoso High School senior Jason Weill to attend one of the nation's prestigious service academies, the United States Merchant Marine Academy.

Weill is one of 40 New Mexico students nominated by Bingaman to attend one of the nation's four service academies—the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, and the Merchant Marine Academy at Kingspoint, New York.

His parents are Max and Lara Johnson of Ruidoso.

The 40 nominees — 10 to each service academy — were chosen by panels of community leaders selected by Bingaman.

"I am very proud to announce these nominations," Bingaman said. "I wholeheartedly believe that each student nominated has demonstrated the superior academic and leadership qualities needed to succeed at our service academies. I wish every nominee the very best of luck."

Applicants were interviewed and rated according to their academic records, college entrance test scores, community and extracurricular activities and a personal interview.

Caution: check for pests on new plants

DEAR READERS:

Last week we talked about Red Spiders, now I must try to help you with the white-fly pest. This miserable little pest has already cost the California farmers more than two billion dollars in crop loss this year.

Expect all our fruits and veggies to sour in price, cantaloupe are already $3.50 each. They call this pest the Poinsettia White-Fly because it was first noticed on the Poinsettia. Best to make a very careful inspection for the signs of White-Fly before bringing a new plant from California into your home for a few months.

I have always checked my new plants before bringing them into my house. I use a plastic bag, use any size you need to fit the plant all the way up to the large leaf bag. I put the new plant in the bag, pull the bag all the way up, spray with a good house and garden pest spray, next, quickly fold the top of the bag and close with a twist tie and let stand at least an hour.

This should take care of any pest on the plant pot and soil. This method is quick, easy and effective and gives peace-of-mind, and only takes a few minutes.

Although the adult white-fly presents a nuisance by flying up when the foliage is disturbed, it is the larvae, not the adults, which cause damage to the plant. Adhering to the undersides of the leaves, the oval-shaped larvae suck the plant's sap. This pest tends to be

by Sally Black
Ruidoso News
Plant Specialist

difficult to control because of its life cycle with five stages, one of egg, three of larvae and one of adult.

For control, regular spraying is essential, since young white flies will be constantly hatching. Spray two or three times a week for four weeks with Pyrethrum and or Resmethriva, Diazinon, Orthene or Malathion. First wash the backside of the leaves with a soap suds, not detergent, then spray with Malathion, or whatever. The soap suds help the insecticide spray to stick to the leaves and the pot and also the soil. If white-flies are left unchecked, they will kill the plant, they will suck all the sap from the plant and like aphids, they deposit honeydew. Green leaves turn yellow and drop. The larvae is almost invisible, so check more closely should green leaves begin to turn yellow.

It may strain your belief, but nature keeps white-flies in check better than anything man has devised for them. A number of wasps lay eggs in white-fly nymphs and pupal; the wasp larvae hatch there and kill the white-fly larvae. So if you notice only a few white-flies in the open garden patio or deck, just leave them to the wasps to clean-up for you.

There is a commercial insecticidal soap, not to be confused with kitchen soap sprays. Soap sprays kill a large percentage of common insects, including aphids, mites, and white-flies. If you add about 1/2 cup of isopropyl alcohol to a quart of insecticidal soap mixture, you increase the effectiveness of the insecticidal soap immensely. I am really trying to cut back on using so many commercial chemical insect sprays.

Good housekeeping is still the best pest control. Keep all plants dust-free-give the large tree-like plants a good shaking once a week, use an ostrich feather duster on others, clean drop trays and vacuum the area, keep fresh air circulating, never allow tobacco smoke to settle on plants. Small electric fans are good to blow smoke away from plants toward an open window. Strive for a moist soil condition, never too dry or too wet. Never allow plants to stand in drip-tray water.

Send questions to Sally Black, c/o The Ruidoso News, P.O. Box 128, Ruidoso, N.M. 88345.

RHS places seventh in Knowledge Masters Bowl

Students at Ruidoso High School received seventh place out of 17 New Mexico high schools in the Knowledge Masters Bowl, which is a national and international computer competition.

Carol Hubbard, sponsor of the group, said 14 students took a test Dec. 4 on the subjects of science, mathematics, literature, art, history, government, economics, sports and music. She said the test started at 5:30 p.m., and the students completed it by 9 p.m. They then called it in to the headquarters of the bowl.

The high school has competed in this bowl for several years and local students have done fairly well, she said. The students will also take a test in April.

LaCueva High School came out top followed by Alamogordo High School. The six schools that beat Ruidoso all have an enrollment of more than 1,300 each. Lovington High School placed 10th and Roswell Senior High placed 13th.

The middle school also has a team that competed in the bowl. Lindy Lott is the sponsor of the group.

WHEN IT'S TIME FOR A CHANGE, GOD HELPS YOU MAKE IT

Once in a while, we all have to make a change of some kind. It might be the retirement from a job of long standing, a move to a different area, or any number of other things. Whatever it is, you will be starting a new chapter in your life, and you must adopt a cheerful and constructive attitude about it. There is no better time than this to start or continue to attend your House of Worship, or if the change is geographical, to find a new one. The comforting word of God will help you bring order and serenity into the present chaos of your life, and point you in some positive directions. You are always where God wants you to be, and He will move you when the time comes. Thus, an apparent catastrophe can prove to be a blessing in the long run.
