Underwood ousted in legislative race

Long lines build up at polling booths

Long lines and a complicated general election ballot caused voters to wait up to an hour in sections of Lincoln County Tuesday.

To encourage voters to punch their choices a little faster, County Clerk Martha Proctor told poll workers to invoke a three minute limit under state law. But after a voter complained, Proctor checked and discovered that the time limit had been repealed in 1992. She immediately notified poll workers of her mistake.

Proctor said the three minute law had been in effect since before she began working the elections as a poll person in the 1960s.

"I never did believe in the law," she added. "I told (poll workers) to just remind voters of the law, if they took a long time in the booth."

Apache pow-wow honors veterans

A pow-wow this weekend in Mescalero will pay tribute to Native American war veterans.

The Southern Eagle Benefit Pow-Wow opens at 6 p.m. Friday on Veterans Day with a Gourd dance, when men dance to honor veterans. Grand Entry inter-tribal dancing will follow at 7 p.m., with various dances in the Southern Plains Indian style and a salute to the American flag and veterans.

Gourd dancing runs from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday. After an hour-long supper break (several booths will serve food), there will be more Gourd dancing and Grand Entry inter-tribal dancing.

The public is invited to come to the free pow-wow at the Mescalero Community Center, just off Highway 70. Cameras will be allowed.

Indian arts and crafts booths can be reserved by calling Freddie Kaydahzine or Sherman Blake between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. at 505/671-4494.

Singers and dancers will come from as far away as Oklahoma and Arizona.

New trail leads to white sand source

White Sands National Monument opens a new hiking trail Saturday.

The Alkali Flat Trail leads from the end of the Dunes Drive 2 1/4 miles through the heart of the dunes to the Alkali Flat, an ice-age lake bed and source of the gypsum sand. The marked trail will encourage visitors to get away from the heavily used loop drive area into a remote section of the park.

The Alkali Flat Trail will be inaugurated with a ranger-guided hike at 10 a.m. Saturday. The 4 1/2 mile round trip hike will last four hours. Participants should bring water, lunch, hiking shoes and sun protection.

Weather

The National Weather Service forecast for the south central mountain region of New Mexico calls for variable high clouds and sunny today. The predicted high is in the high-50s with the low tonight in the low-30s.

The Friday forecast calls for continued high cloudiness and cooler temperatures with the predicted highs in the mid-50s and lows in the low-20s.

Juvenile vandals hit with 2-year sentences

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Four juveniles have been sentenced to a maximum two years in New Mexico correctional centers for vandalizing at least 22 homes in Ruidoso and Alto areas.

Judge Richard A. Parsons, of the 12th Judicial District, said Wednesday the sentences should send a message to juveniles that criminal acts will be punished to the extent the law allows.

"I told them (the four defense lawyers) that I'm sorry your clients have to be the messengers, but I have to send the message," Parsons said. He passed down the sentences Friday.

Damage to the houses exceeded $50,000, said Det. Jim Biggs of the Ruidoso Police Department. From the first week in October until they were arrested Oct. 8, the four set up temporary headquarters in an unoccupied vacation home in Alto Crest subdivision, Biggs said.

"They stayed in this one house and when they wanted something, they went out foraging," he said. "They broke into six or eight homes on that one road."

Three boys ranging in age from 14-16 were sentenced Oct. 28 to two years in the New Mexico Boys School. Two live in Ruidoso and one is from Mescalero. The Mescalero resident was listed as a runaway.

A 15-year-old Ruidoso Downs girl was sentenced to two years at the New Mexico Girls School.

All but one were in single parent homes, Biggs said. Parsons said the boys were each charged with 62-64 counts of residential burglary, larceny and criminal damage to property. Rhodes was charged with 24 counts of the same trio of offenses.

Parsons said early release from the state detention centers probably will depend on the inmate count and whether they become crowded.

Parsons pointed out that officials with the state diagnostic center and with Children, Youth and Family Services recommended the girl and two of the boys be returned home and the fourth boy remain at diagnostic for 12 months.

The four pled guilty to the charges. During their sentencing hearing, video tapes were shown of the homes that were vandalized.

"The damages were appalling," Parsons said. "There was more than $30,000 damage in one home alone."

"The police had videotaped it, three hours or more, but the defense attorney agreed after an hour we didn't need to see anymore."

In one, five-bedroom summer cabin on McBride Street, all of the carpet had to be replaced after the four offenders squirted syrup, cat-soup, flour and pop on the floor.

"They just kind of emptied out the kitchen cabinets," Biggs said. "It was a beautiful house. The furniture had been shoved in a corner, the family pictures had syrup on them, the fireplace poker had been stuck through the living room chair."

Pool table balls were thrown through a glass shower door in a home on Sandia Street. In other houses, food coloring containers had been pierced with BBs, knives were stuck in the oak ceiling and walls, figurines and a television were broken and obscenities written with indelible pens on cabinets.

The four hauled off in their backpacks smaller items such as jewelry, knives and liquor, Biggs said. He has yet to identify the owners of some of the items.

Parsons said the actions of the four "clearly warranted the maximum sentence under law. They didn't show any remorse."

Jane Parnell, juvenile probation officer, said the vandalism spree was the first incident with three of the juveniles. One had some previous minor infractions.

Parsons said it was unrealistic to believe that either the children or their parents could pay for the damage.

Biggs said the owners of some of the vandalized homes had taken precautions against break-ins, with double bolts on the doors and window guards.

"But where there's a will..." he said. The case is one of the worst examples of vandalism he's encountered in Ruidoso, he said.

"Crime here seems to go in cycles," Biggs said. "During the month of November last year, 33 residential burglaries were reported and we solved all of them. There's going to be a bunch from October this year."

Parsons said on Oct. 21, he sentenced another juvenile boy to two years at Springer in an unrelated incident involving shooting a teacher with a water gun.

The boy was charged with assault and battery, the judge said. He was not a student and had been asked to leave the school grounds when the incident occurred. Parsons said other drug-related charges against the boy were dropped.

The wind of change that swept Democrats out of office across the nation Tuesday dipped into Lincoln County and scooped up State Rep. H. John Underwood.

Local Democratic Party leaders said they were caught off guard by the victory of Republican Dub Williams, a rancher and former teacher, over the two-term incumbent.

Williams himself admitted he was surprised by his strong showing in Otero County, which accounts for a portion of District 56 along with all of Lincoln County and parts of Chaves County.

"I lost in Otero by less than 50 votes," Williams noted. "I had some good workers there."

In Lincoln, Williams' final figure mirrored that of Republican gubernatorial winner Gary Johnson, both at 2,849 votes, suggesting that Williams benefited from his party association with Johnson. Local voters picked the New Mexico businessman for governor in spite of his lack of position on the proposed storage of spent nuclear fuel rods on the neighboring Mescalero Apache Reservation.

"I knew it was going to be a real tough race and John had brought back a lot for the area," Williams said. "I had to depend on my reputation and people who knew me. I appreciated the type of positive campaign John ran and I intend to seek his counsel on things to do. I wish him all the luck."

"I think a lot of people were just tired and wanted change," Underwood said during the campaign, he felt some chill by voters toward incumbents.

"Sometimes when I would walk into a room, it seems it didn't matter what you had done, but you were an enemy if you were in office and a Democrat," he said. "I'm very confused. I worked very hard for my district and I felt with four years under my belt, I'd be able to handle some of the tough issues on the plate for the next legislative session, like nuclear spent fuel storage and gambling legislation."

"You're taught that if you do a good job, you'll be rewarded, but I guess that's not always the way. But I feel strongly there are no mistakes and everything happens for a reason. Every time one door shuts, three others open."

Williams said he will stand tough on issues vital to the Lincoln County area even as a freshman legislator.

"They won't be able to keep me from talking, although maybe they won't listen," he said.

Republican commissioner holds on

In the county commission district 4 race between incumbent Alto Republican William Schwettmann and Capitan Democrat Preston Stone, voters chose the man already occupying the seat.

"The voters spoke," Stone said Wednesday. "I appreciate those who voted for me. All I can say is if you are going to ride a horse, you better know how to put the saddle on. I hope Mr. Schwettmann works on that."

Schwettmann said winning against a man as popular as Stone "was kind of like being in school and getting a report card. Maybe I didn't get straight As, but I got good grades."

"Two years of learning are over and I expect to make some real

County supports video gambling

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Lincoln County voters followed the rest of the state Tuesday and approved a constitutional amendment to allow a lottery and video gaming.

A higher percentage of Lincoln County voters than state voters supported the amendment.

The passage carries special significance for Ruidoso and the horse racetrack at Ruidoso Downs, since village leaders hope they'll be on a short list of resort communities selected by the state legislature for the video games.

Some local business owners, church officials and residents opposed Amendment 8's passage, fearing property values and taxes would soar, the nature of the village would change and the state legislature would fail to draft strong enabling regulations.

But racing officials pushed for approval. They said without the games, the combination of a lottery

Teacher quits after arrests

by DON HIXON
Ruidoso News Staff Writer
Ruidoso High School teacher and athletic coordinator, Juan Baca, has resigned after being arrested three times.

Baca is now employed 25 miles away at the Hondo school as a Spanish and driver's education teacher.

In his resignation letter to Ruidoso High School Principal Ron Hodges, Baca stated that "Based on the events that have transpired in the last few months in my personal life, I feel it is in the best interest of the Ruidoso schools to resign effective immediately." The school board accepted his resignation Nov. 3.

Baca was arrested July 22 and charged with battery in domestic violence, said Judge William Butts. According to police reports, Baca is accused of grabbing his wife Marlene by the throat and attempting to choke her, pushing her and causing bruises. Baca turned himself in to the Carrizozo detention center the next day, after a warrant for his arrest was issued by Judge Butts. Butts set Baca's bond at $20,000.

"I usually set a high bond in domestic violence cases," Butts said. "By doing so it helps protect the victim."

According to Butts, Baca spent the weekend in jail and was released on July 26, after 12th District Court Judge Richard A. Parsons issued a restraining order barring Baca from being within 100 yards of her or their Alto residence.

Baca pled not guilty to the battery charge and accused his wife of battery against him. He later dropped that charge.

Baca's battery/domestic violence case is still pending, Butts said.

Baca was again jailed in late August after Parsons found him in contempt of the restraining order, Parsons said. The order prohibited the couple from close contact and Parsons said they were living together. Baca was given a suspended six-month sentence and released. Mrs. Baca also was found to be in contempt of the order and was given the same sentence, Parsons said.

Baca was again arrested Oct. 25, Judge Butts said, on a criminal trespass charge. Baca was accused of trying to kick down the door at a residence where his daughter was staying. Judge Butts said he initially refused to grant Baca bond. Baca was eventually released under a $1,000 unsecured bond when the alleged victim sought to drop the charges. The hearing is still pending on that charge, Butts said.

Butts said he seldom sees teachers in his courtroom. As with many domestic violence cases, he may require counseling as part of a sentence, Butts said.

Parsons said he is concerned about the amount of domestic violence cases he sees.

"I'm seeing five or six domestic violence cases every week," Parsons said. "That's a large number for a community of this size."

Nob Hill seeks to avoid labels

It's posted on the walls throughout Nob Hill Early Childhood Center: "An inviting school is one where all children are advantaged."

To help students gain an advantage, Nob Hill offers a variety of early childhood programs including Head Start, 3 and 4-year-old developmentally delayed, and kindergarten. Nob Hill serves approximately 250 children aged 3-6.

Like most schools, Nob Hill is involved in many local, state, and federal programs, each directed towards a particular "target" population or a narrow segment of student services, said Principal Roger Sowder. But while these programs are beneficial, they rarely consider the whole child or all children, Sowder said.

Although children are tested and problem areas identified, they are kept in regular classes at Nob Hill, thus avoiding "labels" such as "minority" or "ADD" (Attention Deficiency Disorder).

Labels hinder the learning process, said Nob Hill kindergarten teacher Cathy Jones.

"In the past, the system tended to put a label on a child," Jones said. "We are trying to focus on the child rather than the label."

Avoiding labels is the thrust of what Nob Hill educators call the "unified delivery approach."

"The unified delivery approach focuses on each individual child's needs," said Sowder. "The staff collaborates to meet those needs. We are trying to break down the bureaucratic walls between programs and present a unified approach to benefit the whole child."

Nob Hill has no special education classrooms or teachers. Instead, various areas within the school are used for small group instruction and special projects by staff teams who try to provide appropriate learning experiences.

Focusing on the common thread within each program, educators at Nob Hill identified language development as the basic academic need.

"In our three and four-year-old developmentally delayed program, we have identified 80 percent of the children having language delays, with problems in basic language areas," said Sowder.

A plan was designed at Nob Hill to combat the language problem. Key contributors to the plan include speech and language therapists, bilingual and early childhood instructors, resource staff, and Indian education staff, all with expertise in language development.

Staff brainstorming sessions led to the formation of the early childhood literacy center, operating on the belief that young children should be exposed to literacy through a wide variety of activities.

Nob Hill's literacy center uses a theme approach where children join in storytelling, puppetry, listening, filmstrips, writing, art, drama and computer centers.

"I died at Anzio"

A Ranger's Story

by REYNEL MARTINEZ
Special to The News

"Anzio was a prime example of the horror of war."

It was a place where thousands died and death had no regard for nationality or status. Some who died disappeared forever in the mud and swamps. Of many of those who survived, it can be said that Anzio took their souls.

"May Anzio never happen again." — excerpt from Carlo Deste's Fatal Decision

We lived in San Patricio, New Mexico, a small community nestled on the Rio Ruidoso (Noisy River) drainage. Land of enchantment, land of chile. No kidney beans or tomatoes to spoil the taste. Our chile was roasted, peeled, and eaten with a generous amount of garlic and a trace of salt.

Ours was a ranching and farming community, populated by persons of mostly Mexican heritage. Sheep and the raising of apples were the mainstays. This was Lincoln County, home of Billy the Kid, Sheriff William Brady, Pat Garrett and the rest of the history of the guachos.

My younger sister and I were adopted in the Visidro and Pablita Chavez family. It was a big family. Eighteen children. Our mother died when I was four, and my father had no one to take care of us. He was married and had 13 children. We lived for a year in Juarez, Mexico with my mother's relatives. Not liking it, my Dad appealed to his sister to take us in.

We arrived in San Patricio when I was five, in 1951. I enrolled in school and started learning English, lost in a sea of emptiness trying to find a father. I gravitated toward Senon, my adopted brother. If there was ever a hero in my youthful life, it was Senon.

He was a wild one, this Senon. He was 35 years old when I arrived in San Patricio. Senon was a person with a gleam in the eye, full of energy and relishing any excitement or danger. Small of stature, but stout of heart.

I remember we had a five-year-old stud horse that roamed the range, and had bred mares. Never had a rope on him. A typical crazy stud horse, and it was spring. The horse's name was Alacran (Scorpion), in honor of his disposition.

Senon ran the horse with sore mares into the corral, segregated him and, with the help of half the men in the valley, got the stud hogged and saddled. It was a big social event. Drinking wine was heavy then.

They turned Senon loose into an open area in the orchard. It was a rodeo. Alacran unloaded him. Senon got back on. This went on through the morning, interspersed with hits off "La Copita," the wine the men favored. Senon was getting into it and so was Alacran.

I was nine years old and I was impressed. Alacran, full of vigor, was snorting, bucking and farting, all at the same time, and having a harder time unloading his tormentor as it went on. By sheer imposition of his will, Senon broke that stud from bucking and eventually into a good saddle horse. I never forgot that.

As I got older, Senon took me under his wing and I helped him ride the range on horseback, taking care of our sheep and cattle. He taught me how to hunt, stalk, read sign, kill and dress the game.

The family had 300 head of sheep, and dogs running wild in a pack could quickly disseminate a flock. Our job was eliminating the dogs. Senon was a crack shot.

About this time I started to realize that there was something more to Senon, something that he missed. It was those quiet times, that faraway look he would get, and the features in his face would get such sadness. Sometimes he would take to the wine bottle for days. I knew better than to ask, and bit my tongue.

When I was 12 Senon came home late one night. He woke me up with a comment of, "Hey trooper, you're not supposed to be sleeping on guard duty." He started talking to me (all in Spanish) and I knew this was different. I knew he had been in the service but had never heard Senon say much about it. For the first time I was given a glimpse of the Rangers. It was a legacy being passed on to me. Both of us in our wildest dreams could have never envisioned what a role it would end up playing in my life.

Looking back I can see I served as a release for Senon as he prepared and set for me my own rendezvous with destiny. For the first time in my young life, I heard about honor and devotion to duty and to the brotherhood forged in war. I also sensed just what a burden Senon was carrying with him. I heard about a man called Darby, and an outfit called "Darby's Rangers."

Brig. Gen. William Orlando Darby, a 1933 graduate from the United States Military Academy at West Point, was the organizer and commander of the First, Third and Fourth Ranger battalions. The First Ranger Battalion was activated June 19, 1942 at Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland. The battalions known as Darby's Rangers were commanded by Darby during most of their existence in World War II.

To better clarify the events Senon Chavez went through, I contacted James Altieri, whom I had met at the 50th anniversary of the Rangers at Ft. Benning, Ga. on June 19, 1992. Altieri began his career with the formation of the Rangers in Ireland, as an enlisted man. Starting as T/5 (technician corporal), Altieri rose through the ranks. Upon receiving a battlefield commission, he became a platoon leader, becoming company commander of F Co., Fourth Ranger Battalion at Anzio. He went on to write two books, The Spearheaders and Darby's Rangers. The latter book is an account of the Rangers in the North Africa, Sicily and Italian campaigns, culminating with the eventual demise of the First and Third Ranger Battalions of Darby's Rangers at Cisterna.

Altieri confirmed in both verbal and document proof that PFC Senon S. Chavez joined the First Ranger Battalion Jan. 28, 1943 at Arzew, North Africa. Senon is carried on the First and Third Ranger Battalion rosters.

I used a military biography of William O. Darby by Michael J. King, Darby's Rangers by Altieri, Rangers in WWII by Robert Black, and documents from the Darby Foundation in Ft. Smith, Ark. (Darby's place of birth), to place Senon in the events that happened.

I was amazed at the recollections Senon had, and the accuracy they reflected when compared with my resources. I taped his recollections in a series of interviews in December of 1993. Many books have been written about Anzio, and history concurs that Anzio was one of the bloodiest chapters in WWII.

On that December evening I turned on my tape recorder and asked my first question of my adopted brother, uncle, father, benefactor and brother Ranger. "Did you talk to anyone about the Rangers?" I asked. Like a flood, it came out.

"No, nobody, nobody knew anything and I thought to myself, 'I am going to have to keep this to myself.' It took me a long, long time to talk. I remember talking to you about the Rangers, which was about it."

"See, people would start talking about the war and what they had done, 'I did this and I did that,' but for me it was nothing. So now I have to get it out, because if people don't believe me I don't either. To me it's all a dream. I am not talking about myself, I'm talking for everybody, the whole outfit. That's what makes it."

"I tell people, 'I died at Anzio.' I do not know why I live. I am part of the living dead. Out of all the people on a landing craft at Sicily, I am the only one that survived. We were hit by an M-88 howitzer round. All I remember was coming to the surface of the water and having legs, arms and body parts landing all around me. It was a horrible shock to see this. I had been in all the campaigns from North Africa up the Sicilian boot and up the Italian mainland but still, nothing compared to Anzio."

In Ranger type warfare the motto is, "Hit first, hit hard, and keep on hitting." The Rangers of WWII, with accounts of their dangerous and daring exploits, captured the imagination of the American public. Their campaigns and accomplishments left a legacy unsurpassed in the annals of American military history. Senon and his brother Rangers helped write this legacy in blood, determination, and perseverance of will.

Darby, tasked with the formation of an unconventional fighting unit, modeled it after the British Commandos. The name Ranger was picked because it personified the American history of ruggedness and was similar to Roger's Rangers of colonial days.

Darby's Rangers were assigned the most dangerous missions in WWII. They spearheaded all the major amphibious landings in the invasions of North Africa; at Arzew, Algeria; Gela and Licata in Sicily; and Salerno and Anzio in Italy. When landing, the Rangers were ordered to seize and destroy the enemy coastal defenses and set up the initial beachhead defensive perimeters.

The raid at Sened Station in Tunisia was one of the most successful Ranger missions performed. Making a hazardous traverse across terrain the enemy thought impassable at night, they attacked and overran an enemy position situated on high terrain. The Rangers killed 75 of the enemy with knives and bayonets, capturing 11 men and the position's weapons. The Rangers suffered one killed and 20 wounded. This took place in less than 30 minutes.

The First Rangers executed another night attack with strategic importance one month later, with the same results at Djebel el Ank Pass.

The Rangers spearheaded the land attacks in the major battles of Derna Pass, El Guettar in Tunisia (for which they were awarded the Presidential Unit Citation for distinguished action), Gela, Licata, Senon Chavez drinks with a local buddy, Ernesto Monarques, before Anzio.

Porto Empedocle, Butera, Messina in Sicily and onto the mainland of Italy in Chiunzi Pass at Salerno (another Presidential Unit Citation for distinguished action, First and Third Ranger battalions), Venafaro, San Pietro and ending at Cisterna. They led the way against incredible odds.

Operation Shingle: Anzio-Nettuno and Cisterna di Littoria

As 1943 came to a close, the American Fifth Army had failed to attain their final objectives, the Liri Valley and the town of Cassino that anchored the Gustav Line. They were protected by the natural barriers of the Garigliano and Rapido rivers. On the Adriatic side of the Allied front, the Eighth Army commanded by Montgomery had not done any better. The exhausted Eighth Army had been forced to halt in the battered town of Ortona. The Allies were at a stalemate, after bleeding and exhausting their resources breaching the Winter Line and facing a determined German defense that used mountainous terrain and winter weather to its advantage. To counter this, the Allied High Command planned an amphibious end run to outflank the German's southern front.

Some 30 miles south of Rome, the place targeted for an invasion landing, was a pleasant bathing resort and seaport by the name of Anzio. A mile south was the town of Nettuno. To both combatants, Anzio would become a name that signified everything brutal and evil that comes with war. They might have also remembered that it was the birthplace of the Roman Emperor Nero, and that it was in the theater of ancient Anzio that Nero is supposed to have fiddled while Rome burned.

The Allies believed that an amphibious landing at Anzio, followed by a drive on the Alban Hills (Colli Laziali) would cause the enemy resistance to crumble in the south, leaving Rome open to the Fifth Army. It would give a boost to Allied morale, and a blow to German confidence.

The VI (US) Corps, under the command of Major General John Lucas, would be the invasion force (40,000 men). Part of this command was Ranger Force, which consisted of First, Third and Fourth Ranger battalions, the 609th Parachute Infantry Battalion, 83rd Chemical Battalion (4.2-inch mortars), and Company H, 36th Engineers.

The Ranger Force mission in Operation Shingle was to spearhead the landing. Once on the beach, the order of priority was to overcome beach defenses, clear the town, form a defensive perimeter, and clear the beach area between Anzio and Nettuno.

In detail, Senon and the Third Rangers would land on Yellow Beach two hours after the First and Fourth Ranger battalions, pass through the Fourth Rangers, clear the town of Anzio of the enemy, and destroy coastal defenses and enemy installations in its area of operation.

On Jan. 20, Senon boarded his ship, the Uster Monarch, at Bala, Italy, a small port north of Naples.

The ship set sail the next day. Destiny beckoned.

The first assault waves carrying the First and Fourth Rangers landed at Anzio Yellow Beach at 0200 hours on Jan. 22, 1944, exactly H-hour. At 0300 hours Senon landed with B Company, Third Ranger Battalion. They pushed to the northwest end of town, where they captured a four-gun battery of 100mm howitzers.

Senon recalls the day well.

"About ninety minutes after we landed, it was still dark. I was walking point for my section on the side of a small dirt road when a small German car, like a jeep, a reconnaissance car with three German officers, came driving up. I opened up on them, getting two, with the other officer getting away. There were some holes in the car but it was driveable. I claimed it for myself but they wanted to take it away. Lt. Palumbo said, 'he got it, it's his.' The lieutenant and I then drove that car around for a little while and eventually back toward the beach area."

By midnight, VI Corps has poured in more than 26,000 men. The beachhead had been expanded inland by three miles. The landing had been a success.

Meanwhile, the German's reaction to the Anzio landing was a total commitment to stop the Allies at the beachhead, and eventual destruction. Receiving word of the landing at the German Command Center South, a flurry of telephone and wireless orders were issued. Going out as far away as Germany, Yugoslavia, and France, units were ordered into the Anzio area. By midnight on the 22nd, the German forces numbered 20,000 and the majority were paratroopers and panzer grenadiers.

An attack that preceded the landings at Anzio by Fifth Army at the Gustav line had failed to divert German forces manning the Gustav Line. The stage was set for a protracted and bloody siege.

On Jan. 23, the Rangers expanded their patrolling north of Anzio to a depth of several miles. The tempo of German artillery and Luftwaffe directed against the port and front line sections increased. On Jan. 24, the Ranger Force had reached the railroad, two miles south of Carrocchia. Overhead, the air war was raging. German air strength had never been seen at this magnitude.

Senon recalls that until the 28th of January, the Rangers were involved in a series of fights, trying to expand and consolidate defensive lines with the British on the left. They were blasted by artillery and mortar fire and strafed by aircraft, increasing with ferocity as the Germans reinforced their defensive sectors. Senon felt the Germans were readying for an all-out offensive against them.

On the afternoon of the 28th Senon recalls, "We got word that the British would be replacing us. That night we were trucked to the Third Division area that was in the northeast section of the beachhead. Something was up and I knew that whatever it was, we would be in the thick of it."

"Cisterna di Littoria" Allied high command was vocing concern that VI Corps was not expanding their beachhead fast enough. Lucas had planned his offensive for Jan. 29, but set it back for 24 hours, allowing the newly arrived 1st Armored Division time to get ready. An unknowing fatal mistake.

Lucas' plan called for a two-pronged advance. On the eastern flank, the Third Infantry Division was to push to Cisterna and seize it, cut Highway 7, and be prepared to continue to Valletti. The western flank would be the main attack. The British First Infantry Division was to advance to Albano. They would first seize the rail and road junction of Campoleone by advancing from the Factory, Meniville, General Ernest Harmon's First Armored Division would be on their left, making a wide swing round Campoleone to come in on the Colli Laziali from the west.

The three Ranger battalions attached to the Third Division would spearhead the attack on Cisterna. The First and Third Ranger battalions were to cross the line of departure at 0100 hours Jan. 30, with the First Rangers leading, and advance under the cover of darkness to Cisterna. Using the Pantano Ditch for cover, they would infiltrate between two strongpoints manned by the Herman Goring Division. The Fosso di Pantano was a partially dry extension of the Mussolini Canal and would provide cover for the Rangers too, within one and one-half miles of Cisterna. The rest of the way would be across open ground, laced with ditches to the outskirts of town. Darby stressed the importance of the First and Third Rangers infiltrating Cisterna before dawn and avoiding enemy contact enroute. If trouble arose, the Third Rangers would cover it, allowing the First Rangers to continue to Cisterna. The Fourth Ranger Battalion, with an eight-man night sweeping party attached, would cross the line of departure at 0200 hours. They would advance up the concave Fossato-Cisterna road, clearing the road of mines and enemy. According to Third Division reconnaissance reports, the road itself was lightly held. One hour later the main attack would follow.

During the night of the 29th, unknown to Allied intelligence, the Germans had reinforced the Herman Goring Division with fresh troops of the 28th Panzer Division that had just arrived from the Eighth Army front. Instead of a battalion-size unit as expected, two full divisions now sealed the gap where the Rangers were headed. At Anzio, German troop numbers now exceeded 71,000 men.

Senon recalls that the 28th was spent busily getting ready for the night attack. He cleaned his weapon thoroughly, resupplied with a generous number of sticky grenades and .45 caliber ammo for his Thompson submachine gun. He would also carry a couple of rocket shells for the bazooka gunners. He sharpened his knife to a razor-sharp hone. He tried to eat as much as possible and refilled the one canteen he would be carrying. He said his prayers and toward the afternoon tried to get some sleep.

non felt it would be a long, hard fight. Senon recalls they took off from an air bivouac area around 2100 hrs. It was bitterly cold. They crossed the canal, got off the road and sat waiting for more than an hour until 11 hour. Not moving, he started getting really cold and shivering.

Darby moved his command post forward and set up in an isolated farmhouse near the line of departure, to the right of the eminimorta-Cisterna road. At 100 hours Jan. 30, the 767 men of the First and Third Ranger battalions entered the Pantano Ditch single file and disappeared into the darkness. One hour later, the Fourth Ranger Battalion began moving along the ditches on both sides of the road toward eminimorta.

There was a deathly silence on the battlefield as the Rangers assessed the point of no return.

Senon, with B Company, Third Ranger Battalion, remembers.

We had been on the move a few short bursts to the left and behind us. A few minutes later I heard machine guns firing and all hell broke loose and figured the Fourth was into a fight. Flares started going off and we all hit the ground to keep from being seen.

James Altieri was company commander of Fox Company, Fourth Rangers. He was on the road to eminimorta that morning, and describes it in his book as follows.

Thrusting up the road at the head of the column, the leading scouts searched both sides of the ditches for signs of the enemy. Less than a half-mile from the starting point, a lone machine pistol opened up on the point. Then, out of the black night, coming from far out into the fields on both sides of the road, machine-gun tracers suddenly magnified into a solid wall of flaming steel.

Swiftly, the leading company attacked at close quarters with grenades and bayonets. Two machine-gun nests were wiped out, but others seemed to rise out of the ground to take their places. After two ferocious assaults that failed to penetrate the solid line, the company, with many killed and wounded, including the commander, was forced to hold up in a shallow ditch. Every inch of ground seemed covered by deadly grazing fire, and enemy mortar shells were landing in the fields along both sides of the road.

Meanwhile, the First and Third Rangers were having their own problems. Four radio operators that were supposed to accompany them were lost to the force. The second problem was, the Third Rangers lost contact with the First about halfway to the objective. Major Dobson, in command of the First Rangers, split his command. Capt. Charles Shunston took command of the First Rangers' three rear companies and sent a runner back to contact the Third. Major Dobson, with his three lead companies, continued on toward Cisterna.

Senon recalls that he had just crossed Highway 7 and was moving up an irrigation ditch at dawn. He started hearing all kinds of shooting from up front where the First Rangers were.

When it got light enough, I could see a farmhouse about 50 yards to the left and ahead," Senon said. "I saw movement and hit the ground as the Germans opened up. The fire was coming from both sides of the ditch, machine gun and rifle fire. I heard this deep throated booming, like a machine-gun, and could see large chunks of dirt flying off the tops of the ditch to my front.

come from German artillery was landing very heavy in that area.

Senon remembers, "Just before it got light we crossed a tree-lined road and jumped into this ditch. Moving toward Cisterna, we kept passing German artillery positions. We were so close I could hear them speaking in German as they fired their guns. Just as it started getting light, we heard a lot of screaming from up front — no firing, just screaming. It raised the hair on my neck."

Major Dobson gave an account of the scene to an Associated Press War Correspondent.

"Enemy patrol crossed in front of us and on both sides, but missed us. Two groups of German sentries were encountered and killed with knives by our point, led by Lt. James Fowler, who killed two of them himself."

"We set up our radio and tried to contact Col. Darby's headquarters, but the radio failed. By this time, it was quite apparent that there was no one on either our right or left, and firing about two miles to our rear indicated that the infantry regiments were away behind."

"We crept on through some unoccupied German trenches for about a quarter of a mile, then came out on the very level expanse leading to Cisterna. From the trenches, we started to run, hoping to reach the town before the sun rose. Approximately 600 yards from the outskirts of Cisterna, we passed what appeared to be a German bivouac area. At this point, things began to pop.

A German got up from a foxhole and began to scream when he saw us. In the ensuing melee, using only knives and bayonets, forward elements of the First Battalion killed approximately 100 Germans as they tried to get out of their foxholes.

"We continued for about 400 yards more and tried to reach a small bridge along the edge of the town. At this point, Sgt. Heiser of A Company crawled forward and knocked out three successive machine-gun posts by creeping up, tossing a grenade, then going in with a bayonet.

"By then, we were running into real trouble. The enemy fire was too hot for us to keep moving forward. We consolidated a position astride a lateral road outside the town parallel to a canal. It was without cover, but it was the best available.

"The Germans' first counterattack came from our rear — from the direction of our own lines — in the form of 17 tanks and armored, self-propelled guns.

"They overran our position, but we knocked out 15 of them with bazookas, grenades and about everything else we could lay our hands on. I saw one of our sergeants trying to plaster a sticky bomb on a German tank turret when a bazooka shot hit it on the opposite side. It knocked him into the air and he did a complete somersault but landed running. All these tanks and guns were burning and exploding in the middle of our position at one time, a beautiful sight."

Senon recalls that he had just crossed Highway 7 and was moving up an irrigation ditch at dawn. He started hearing all kinds of shooting from up front where the First Rangers were.

When it got light enough, I could see a farmhouse about 50 yards to the left and ahead," Senon said. "I saw movement and hit the ground as the Germans opened up. The fire was coming from both sides of the ditch, machine gun and rifle fire. I heard this deep throated booming, like a machine-gun, and could see large chunks of dirt flying off the tops of the ditch to my front.

The author, Reynel Martinez, with his fellow Ranger and his hero, Senon Chavez.

It didn't take long to figure out that it was a flak-wagon shooting point blank. Somebody got it with a bazooka. We got orders to keep going forward toward the First Rangers. German artillery was impacting all around us as we made our way forward. You wouldn't dare stick your head up above the ditch or you would get killed. The grazing fire was just thick, with every kind of machine-gun they had being used. As I moved forward I had to crawl over men that had been shot and fallen into the ditch.

"There was a little water flowing in the ditch, but as the battle raged on, it turned into solid blood.

"Sometime during the fight, I cannot remember when, I saw this little ditch that ran off toward a shed. My Thompson was packed with mud and stuff from crawling around, and I needed to clean it. I remember seeing this guy, a friend of mine, and I told him, 'Let's crawl over to that shed and clean our rifles. We're not going to do anything with these rifles like they are.' He said, 'No, when they see us in there, they're going to blow it with artillery.' I told him they wouldn't see us but he replied, 'No, I'll stay here.' So I crawled over there and got in the shed and cleaned my rifle.

"I pulled a bit of cheese out of my trouser pocket and it had a bullet hole in it. I reached for my canteen to take a drink of water and it also had a bullet hole in it. I couldn't recall it happening.

"I finished and crawled back out of the shed and started crawling back down the little ditch toward him. I could see him looking at me over the ditch and I was hollering and talking to him, telling him he should have come with me.

"As I got closer I noticed he was staring at me with his eyes wide open, not moving. I found a little red hole between his eyes. A sniper got him, I guess, because it was right between the eyes. I remember thinking 'Oh, you should have gone with me.'

"My section was involved on an attack on a farmhouse. We got 10-12 Germans in there and some machine guns. I could hear and see armored guns, tanks and flak wagons with infantry troops behind them coming from the direction we had come from. The cannons were shooting up the length of the ditch at us.

"The fight stretched on so long it turned into a blur. We were fighting for our lives and using anything we could get our hands on. The whole time, it seemed every kind of artillery shell was busting among us.

"Sometime during the fight I heard that my battalion commander, Major Miller, had been killed by artillery. He was a good man. So many brave men."

The operation had hinged on moving to Cisterna undetected, but now the ditch they had used had turned into a death trap. Four miles deep into enemy territory, the Germans surrounded the Rangers and sealed their escape route back to U.S. lines. The supporting units that were supposed to be on their flanks had been stopped dead, two miles back. The Rangers were on their own and they fought on.

Another account of the B Company, Third Ranger fight is given in Altieri's book by T/S James P. Reilly, also of B Company.

"At first light we heard a lot of shooting up ahead," Reilly said. "The First Battalion was having a fight. Their suddenly everything happened at once. Hidden near a haystack on our left, a Jerry flak-wagon opened up with a point-blank barrage of 20mm flak. Then sniper and machine-gun fire began cracking at us from both flanks.

"They were so close we could throw stones at them. We all hit the ground fast. One of our sections went after a bunch of Jerries in a farmhouse about 50 yards to the left of the canal. The boys fought their way into the building and killed off 10 of them who had several machine guns set up inside and mortars in the rear. Our company was right alongside the road running north-south into Cisterna. We were fairly well dispersed along a deep irrigation ditch."

"Moving up the irrigation ditch (it might have been a small canal) we advanced about 100 yards, wading through knee-deep water. Then three more armored guns came up the road with cannons blasting into our ditch. Our rocket gunners waited until they came close, then let them have it with sticky grenades and finished them off. We waited until they had all cleared the flak-wagon, then we raked them with BARS and rifle fire. It was just like shooting ducks, only with more satisfaction. Lieutenants Palumbo and Johnston with the aid of a grenadier knocked one out and took five prisoners. But while marching them down a ditch they tried to make a break, so we had to shoot them down."

"All around us, the fighting was getting real hot. Some of the companies broke up several attempts by Jerry infantry to close with us. But most of the attacking was being done by Rangers, trying to get into the farm buildings which the German held. Machine gun fire and sniper fire were taking a heavy toll on our fellows...

"We were all certain that the trap had been closed, but we were still hoping for reinforcements. We had the Jerries so they couldn't move out in front of us, but far out to our left we saw a helluva lot of ammo going around to our rear. Shortly after, we heard a lot of roaring motors. They sounded just like our tanks. We were happy as hell, thinking our armor had broken through to rescue us.

"Our elation gave way to bitter disappointment because they were German tanks and armored guns coming from our rear. We would be lucky to hold out much longer against another full-scale attack. I had one clip of M-1 rounds left in my belt. I had fired my own two bandoliers and a beltload and also two bandoliers and beltload I had taken off a dead Ranger.

"Shortly after, the Germans advancing behind some Mark VI tanks attacked the sector that the remainder of 'E' Company was defending. They captured some of 'E' Company and marched up to a strongpoint where a Ranger section was causing them a lot of trouble. Using the captured Rangers as hostages, they told them to come out and surrender or they would shoot the prisoners. (The Rangers) refused, and told the Jerries to come and get them. (The Rangers) fired at the Jerries, trying to kill them so the others could escape. (The Rangers) got quite a few, but those they didn't get killed seven or eight of the (other) Rangers to prove they meant business. The boys couldn't keep on shooting and have the bastards take it out on the Rangers. The section had no alternative but to come out."

Senon remembers that by noon he had run out of ammo. Everybody was out of ammo. He had picked up an M-1 and had what was left of a full clip in the rifle.

"In my mind, I really did not want to give up," Senon recalls. "I had worked my way into a vineyard that was on a slight slope about 40 yards from the ditch and road. I was trying to figure a way to escape or play dead. I could see a bunch of tanks and Germans herding captured Rangers in front of them and heading in our direction. They would shoot into ditches once in a while and I knew they were killing wounded Rangers."

"I noticed this one German. He stood out because he was kind of fat. About 100 yards away I had seen him bayonet two Rangers in the back. As they got closer, about 60 yards away, I could hear him yelling in perfect English to these Rangers in a house to come out or he would kill the Rangers. Suddenly they started shooting these men. All that morning I had been killing Germans but I cannot recall any of it.

"I remember this one, though. I shot him through the heart and he fell like a pig. He was fat and dropped like a pig. There was still some shooting and I don't think the Germans knew where the shot came from or they would have killed me. I could hear some of the fellows that knew me saying, 'Hey Chavez, give up, they're going to kill you if you don't.'

"Finally I stood up and started walking toward the road. On the way I saw a dead Ranger and I stooped down and grabbed his water canteen. I noticed a pack of cigarettes in his shirt pocket and took those also. They were not mine for long."

Sgt. Maj. Robert Ehalt of the First Ranger Battalion was the last person to talk to Darby from the battlefield. Ehalt radioed Darby at 1230 hours, telling Darby he had only five men left, and that German tanks were closing in.

"So long, Colonel," Ehalt finally said. "Maybe when it's all over I'll see you again."

Darby replied, "Ehalt, I leave everything in your hands. Tell the men I am with them to the end."

Sgt. Maj. Ehalt then destroyed the radio. Darby, feeling the emotional impact of losing his command, put his head down on his arms and gave himself over to grief.

Of the 767 Rangers of First and Third Ranger Battalions who had started toward Cisterna, only six returned. The rest were either dead or captured.

Senon S. Chavez spent the remainder of the war in a prisoner war camp. It was a brutal and harrowing experience.

With the annihilation of the First and Third Ranger Battalions at Cisterna, and the Fourth Ranger Battalion taking more than 50 percent casualties at Feminimorta trying to come to the aid of their brother Rangers, Darby's Rangers ceased to exist. What remained of the Fourth Battalion was shipped to the United States and disbanded.

Colonel William Orlando Darby was killed in action on April 30, 1945 in the Po Valley, Italy, with the Tenth Mountain Division. He died two days before the Germans surrendered Italy.

The end of the Rangers was only the beginning battle in the defense of the Anzio beachhead. Many thousands of men would bleed and die in the coming months.

Cisterna was finally taken May 25, 1944, by the Third Infantry Division. The breakout off the Anzio beachhead was finally accomplished June 1, 1944.

In June, after the combatants had moved on towards Rome, the local farmers dug holes and buried some of the dead who had lain in the Pantano Ditch and elsewhere in the fields outside Cisterna since the end of January. Many German and GI corpses were buried in mass graves and covered by a bulldozer in the Pantano Ditch, which has since been renamed Ditch of Holy Souls. The area around the ditch has been officially designated as a battlefield.

There are 7,862 Americans buried at the American military cemetery at Nettuno. A marble memorial commemorates the 3,094 Americans missing in action, last in the ditches and mud of Anzio, who were never found. Another 2,300 British are buried outside Anzio, in the British military cemetery.

In memory of the Rangers, the citizens of the Cisterna have renamed the Feminimorta-Cisterna highway the Via Ranger, and signed a peace pact by becoming twinned towns with Fort Smith, Ark., the birthplace of Colonel William O. Darby.

On Christmas Day of 1993, a month and a few days short of the 50th anniversary of Cisterna, Senon picked me up so we could ride together and have Christmas dinner at our sister's house.

Senon was 77 years old, and when he turned around to walk out the door I realized he was wearing his colors, for me. For only I could understand and appreciate the significance. On the back of the black coat he was wearing was the silkscreen of an eagle, its wings flared back, talons outstretched.

Across the top in red lettering were the words, "Rangers Lead the Way."

(Reynel Martinez served two tours with the 101st Airborne Division Rangers (1968-68) in Vietnam. He now lives in McCammon, Idaho. Senon S. Chavez still lives in Lincoln County.)

RHS gridders face 'speedy' Chargers

by LAURA CLYMER
Ruidoso News Sports Writer

Ruidoso football coach Les Carter returns to his old stomping grounds with a Warrior team that hasn't participated in the playoffs since the late 1980s.

But neither has the Warriors' opponent, the Albuquerque Academy Chargers.

Both teams will try to overcome the playoff jitters when they meet in a Class AAA pre-playoff game at 1 p.m. Saturday at Albuquerque Academy.

The Chargers played as an independent team from 1986 to 1993. This is their first year in the playoffs.

Charger coach Kevin Carroll has directed his team to a 9-1 overall record. In eight years, Carroll's teams have posted a 50-24 overall mark. Last year Albuquerque Academy was 9-0.

Ruidoso is 6-5 overall and owns a three-game winning streak as the team heads into post-season play.

But as far as records are concerned, Carroll said they don't matter.

"That's a bunch of crap (team records) — we found that out last week," said Carroll, whose team suffered its first loss of the season to a 2-7 Grants team, 19-14.

The Warriors are coming off a 28-13 win over Truth or Consequences. Ruidoso dominated both sides of the line, gaining more than 300 yards in offense while limiting the Tigers to less than 100 yards in total offense.

"We just have to continue to do the things we have been for the last couple of weeks," Carter said. Carter, who is in his first year at RHS, previously coached at Los Lunas High School near Albuquerque.

Carter's return to the area is somewhat of a homecoming.

"I've had a lot of calls from the Los Lunas area (sending their congratulations)," he said.

The Warriors coach said the Chargers have a pair of speedy running backs in seniors Billy Lujan and James Davis. Lujan leads Albuquerque Academy with more than 900 yards rushing. Davis has rushed for more than 650 yards. Senior offensive guard Brian Wolfmueller anchors the Charger line.

Ruidoso's linebackers Byron Soules, Jose Prieto, Rex Comanche and David LaMay will be responsible for harnessing the Charger runners.

"Their overall quickness, that's their biggest strength and they're well-disciplined," Carter said of his team's opponent.

"We feel like we have to control the ball and play the physical and aggressive defense like we have been playing," he said.

Albuquerque Academy counters with a pair of linebackers who will try to contain Ruidoso's balanced rushing attack. Senior T. J. Rogers and junior Miguel Sanchez will try to put the clamps on the Warriors' leading rusher, junior back Kyle Humphreys.

Ruidoso also relies on running backs Comanche and LaMay. Senior quarterback John Echols has posted solid efforts both running and passing the ball in the last several outings.

Carroll's team won't overlook the Warriors.

"They are well-coached and have some good people at the skill positions. They're real solid," Carroll said of the Warriors. "They come right at you. They do what they do well."

"I like to think we don't make too many mistakes," Carroll added, citing that as his team's strength. "I think we have to come out and not make any mistakes, not shoot ourselves in the foot and not get too fancy."

Carter said the Warriors will need another team effort if they are going to post their fourth-straight win.

"We need all 11 guys on offense and all 11 on defense. It just has to be a whole team effort," Carter said.

Laura Clymer/The Ruidoso News

Ruidoso will need its balanced running attack and a strong defensive effort if the Warriors are to upend Albuquerque Academy in their pre-playoff matchup. Lineman Richard Urban and quarterback John Echols lead the way for running back Rex Comanche during the Warriors win over Truth or Consequences last week.

Warriors chase their dreams at state meet

by LAURA CLYMER
Ruidoso News Sports Writer

Ruidoso cross country runners will be in for the race of their lives when they travel to Gallup for the state meet this Saturday, Nov. 12.

"The state meet in New Mexico is a very tough meet," Warriors coach Ronny Maskew said. "New Mexico has some of the best runners in the country."

Maskew's boys and girls teams earned the right to participate in the state finals when both teams took second place at the district meet Nov. 5.

The Warriors' boys team has a chance to do well. Southern New Mexican teams traditionally don't finish in the top 10 at state, Maskew said. But this year, Maskew said the boys have a shot.

Maskew said his team's one-point loss to Cobre in the district meet "will pay dividends." That means the Warriors learned a tough lesson and they'll be ready to run.

The Ruidoso girls team will try to improve upon its district performance as well.

"All of them ran their best times of the year. They did very well, but I expect them to run even better at state," Maskew said.

The girls team is young, paced by freshman Bridget Tam. Tam coasted to the individual district Saturday. Maskew said Tam is capable of finishing in the top 15 at the finals.

This will be her second state meet — Tam qualified last year as an eighth-grader.

The Warriors will leave Friday morning for Gallup. Ruidoso will arrive in time to check out the course, which winds its way through Red Rock State Park for three miles.

"We'll walk it over carefully and see the course before dark," Maskew said. By walking the course, the Warriors will be able to see where they can make their moves during the race.

With 18 teams qualified plus individual qualifiers, Maskew expects between 140 and 150 runners in each race. The boys race starts at 11 a.m. and the girls take off at 12:30 p.m.

Academy blanks Warriors

Ruidoso's first trip to the state soccer tournament ended abruptly in the quarterfinals. Albuquerque Academy punted the Warriors 7-0 behind Josh Skarsgard's four goals.

The Warriors finish with an 11-6 overall record.

The Chargers scored twice in each of the first three quarters. Albuquerque Academy kept Ruidoso's keeper, Matt Norbury, quite busy. The Chargers outshot the Warriors 33-6. Norbury recorded six saves in the losing effort.

Five members of the Ruidoso High School soccer team were named to the District 3-AAA team last week. Defenders Ben Travis and Daniel Espinosa, midfielder Cory Hood, and forwards Danny Schrader and Piper Adamian.

Ruidoso goalie Norby and Leaf Anderson received honorable mention accolades.

Semifinal game pits No. 1 versus No. 2

by LAURA CLYMER
Ruidoso News Sports Writer

The similarities between the Capitan and Fort Sumner football teams go further than what the casual observer sees on paper.

Both teams have basically cruised through the regular season and first rounds of the playoffs. Fort Sumner is 11-0 and ranked No. 1 in Class A. Capitan is 10-1 and No. 2 in the polls.

Both coaches have turned around their respective programs in three short years.

And, both squads are led by an outstanding player who is backed up by a strong supporting cast — Capitan's Michael Fish and Fort Sumner's Ben Segura.

It all makes for what is bound to be a classic battle come Saturday, Nov. 12, in Fort Sumner. That's when the Fort Sumner Foxes will host the Capitan Tigers in a semifinal Class A football clash.

Coach Mario Martinez turned around the Fort Sumner football program as quickly as Ed Davis got Capitan football back on its feet.

The year prior to Martinez' arrival, the Foxes were 0-10 and forfeited their last games because they couldn't suit up enough players.

Since the arrival of Martinez, Fort Sumner has posted a 24-6 record in three seasons. Last year the Foxes fell to Cloudford in the semifinals. And Martinez will use that experience to motivate his troops.

"To be honest, our main strength is maturity and being involved in the same program for the last three years," Martinez said.

The Foxes also have a strength in quarterback Ben Segura. The 5'-8", 185-pound junior has thrown for more than 1,700 yards this season. He's been hot of late, passing for more than 900 yards in the last four games.

Segura's favorite target is junior back/receiver Benny Madrid. Madrid leads the Foxes in all-purpose yards. Senior running back Gino Sena (6-0, 165) balances out the Fort Sumner attack. He is their leading rusher.

"We're explosive. We can score lots of points," Martinez said.

Tyke Noe is Martinez' "anchor of the defense." The 6-2, 240-pound senior plays both sides of the line for the Foxes.

Capitan coach Ed Davis is aware of what his team is up against.

"They're big and fast and right now they're the best Class A team in the state," Davis said. "They hit the ball. They throw the ball. And they play defense."

"We have to stop their passing game. That's where they've really tore people up in the last four games. We've got to stop the pass if we're going to be successful."

While Capitan worries about stopping Segura, Fort Sumner hopes it can stop, or at least slow down, the Tigers' Michael Fish.

The senior quarterback is one of only three returning starters for the Tigers. He can single-handedly turn a game around from either the offensive or defensive end.

"Everybody knows when you play Capitan, you've got to contain Michael Fish," Martinez said. "He's a very good athlete with a good supporting cast. He does everything — kicks off, punts — I'm surprised he doesn't go out and lead the band at halftime."

It wasn't long ago that Fish and senior teammates J. P. Whipple, Troy Stone, Lee Yobbi, Vincente Lopez and Shannon Johnson were in the same situation as Fort Sumner was.

The year before Davis took the reins of the Capitan team, the Tigers were struggling to find players and riding an 18-game losing streak.

What has turned those fortunes around?

"We've got a group of unique individuals that work well together and we've got some talent," Davis said.

On paper, it looks like this semifinal game could be considered the 'state championship' with No. 1 facing No. 2, but neither coach looks at it that way.

Davis notes that in the other semifinal, tradition-rich Jal plays Escalante. Jal, a perennial state contender at the Class AA level, moved down to Class A this year for the first time.

And, Martinez offered this advice: "You get to this point and you just have to prepare for each one. You can't make the game any bigger than it is. You can't get caught in the hoopla."

"The rankings only go so far. From the beginning of the season, Jal was the team to beat. This is just a big semifinal game."

Kickoff is set for 2 p.m. in Fort Sumner.

Students write about being drug free

DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

They worry about their friends using drugs or alcohol. They want to avoid peer pressure and punish substance abusers.

Neil Davis assigned the topic of "My Solution for a Drug Free New Mexico" to his seventh and eighth grade English classes at Capitan Middle School.

A few came up with some suggestions, others dealt with their fears and some expressed their frustrations.

Andria Brennan pinpointed several action steps toward combating drugs.

She wrote that:

- Users should stop selling drugs to smaller children.
- Television networks should stop showing alcohol on television with people in bathing suits at the beach.
- They should show the way you act after you get drunk or high, the hangovers you would have the next morning," she wrote. "Then people would see how it really is and not a fantasy life where all beautiful women wear bikinis and drink alcohol."

Terry Hill wrote that she doesn't think the world will ever be rid of harmful drugs, even though they harm not only the person taking them, but also their families.

"If people want drugs, they're going to get them one way or another," she wrote, and suggested legalizing drugs. She added that "beer is a drug and it can mess you up as bad as some illegal drugs."

Buffie York wants to see a return to prohibition.

"My solution to this problem would be to abolish all alcohol in New Mexico," she wrote. "If anyone is caught with alcohol or drugs, the minimum punishment would be 50 years in a state penitentiary. Most drug abusers shouldn't be allowed to have privileges such as T.V., radios, etc. They need to know they are being punished."

Fernando Saliz endorses the use of undercover police.

"I like the method that is used in Albuquerque," he wrote. "They send undercover policemen out into the streets."

"The main thing is to support our police departments so they can obtain more help!"

Sheila Crandall encouraged police to visit schools and talk about the perils of drug use. Teachers also should be required to teach students about drugs, because they cut down a person's life span, she wrote.

Colleen McGrath wrote that one solution would be "to put all the drugs on the market and let the people buy them 'til they are all gone. Then make sure there is no more supplies of drugs coming in," although she acknowledged that would be difficult.

She decided that the best approach is to punish everyone associated with drugs.

Brandon Beavers recommended setting up inspection points on the borders of New Mexico and not letting anyone with drugs come into the state.

Several students, including Haylee Murry, wrote that alcohol is a big problem in high schools, and it also may start students experimenting with other substances that are illegal.

Maria Pacheco defined the solution this way: "In order to have a Drug Free New Mexico, we would have to wipe out drug dealers, the sales of alcohol, and any tobacco, marijuana, heroin, cocaine and many other drugs."

Codi Montez noted that drugs and alcohol play a major role in deaths and accidents in the state.

"First, I would start support groups for the people that suffer from this addiction," Montez wrote. "Next, I would make people aware of how many lives are destroyed each day due to drugs."

Drug use prevention education at an early age also would help, Montez wrote.

Trenna Stephens wants to see a dog sniffing out drugs at schools once a month. She also advocated meetings for those who have difficulty stopping the use of drugs.

"They could build up a person's self-esteem about quitting," she wrote.

Shawna Cupit went a step further. She'd like to see drug testing in every school. She also wants to involve the parents and punish them if traces of drugs are found in their blood.

Cupit wrote that parents "teach their children what is right and what is wrong. Usually, kids do what their parents do."

Essay writers in Neil Davis' class (in back) are Maria Pacheco, Haylee Murry and Brandon Beavers. In front are Danielle Farris and Julie Jaquess.

Students who wrote essays (in back) are Terry Hill, Fernando Saliz and Buffie York. In front are Chris Hill, Colleen McGrath, Sheila Crandall and Andria Brennan.

English class essay writers (in back) are Brenna Ward, Codi Montez and Danielle Jenkins. In front are Krystal Roybal, Trenna Stephens and Shawna Cupit.

The Silver Lining

Snow comes and goes as jays multiply

Snow Rides in on the West Wind

On the last day of October, the Mountain World celebrated the farewell to Glorious October with a typical Storybook Indian Summer Day, with blue sky and the golden sun shining down upon the hills and valley bright with the leaf colors shining high and low at their brilliant and cheerful best.

The air was still, so that all the vale was like an autumn painting.

Then, on the first of November the west wind began blowing down the valley, singing along the tops of the hills, and among the branches of the pine trees, a song of falling leaves.

The golden, red, and yellow leaves began flying, forming autumn carpets under the trees, and flying and spinning down the draw, some landing in the river where they became tiny leaf boats sailing down on the crystal tide.

By November 4, the wind had increased to a gale, blowing the lemon yellow leaves off the walnut trees.

The giant walnut tree at Storm's Bend stood with its arched branches clearly outlined against the sunset colors of crimson and gold. These branch arches remind you of church

by Daniel Storm
The Ridge Runner

snow followed me all the way, and stopped just as I entered into the front gate.

The next day, the wind slowed down, resting from its work of bringing the snow. And the Mountain was a giant cone of crystal white touched with the gold of the sun, outlined against a blue November sky.

The Return of Indian Summer

Now today, just at high noon, the clouds that all morning cast the sky in a ceiling of gray, have all passed away and the temperature is a sunny 80 degrees. At mid-morning, about 60 Pinon Jays, the most I have ever seen together, came into the front yard.

Just before noon, about 15 Stellar Jays were out feeding in the pathways, along with the Snow Birds. In all the years I have been here, 69, I have never been visited by so many Pinon Jays and Stellar Jays. They are very tame, staying in the large cedar tree as I walk under the gate; and no longer fly away as I open the front door.

Our bird friends are singing special songs of thanks during the Thankful Month.

Let us be more thankful day by day to the Lord, for our wonderful blessings, especially for friends and loved ones.

The Buddy poppies will be distributed Friday through Sunday to help needy veterans.

Poppies honor fallen veterans

"In Flanders Fields the poppies blow..."

So went the immortal words of Col. John McCrae's poem about soldiers' sacrifice and heroism. Little did he realize when he penned those lines that some day the poppies he wrote about would be the symbol of those who gave their lives in our nation's wars.

Each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars sponsors a "Buddy" poppy distribution in the Ruidoso area. The Buddy poppy is a symbol of the sacrifices made by the nation's war dead. The poppy has been the symbolic flower of Veteran's Day since the VFW began distributing the poppies since 1922. The poppies are assembled by disabled veterans.

Proceeds from Buddy poppy contributions are used to help disabled and needy veterans, and the widows and children of deceased veterans.

Veterans Day in Ruidoso will be observed jointly by the Coe Curry Chapter #23 of the Disabled American Veterans, the Robert J. Hagee

Post 79 of the American Legion and American Legion Auxiliary, and the Jerome Don Klein Post 7072 of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and VFW Auxiliary.

In honor of Veterans Day, there will be a flag raising ceremony at the corner of Spring Road and Highway 70 East in Ruidoso Downs at 10:30 a.m. Friday. The public is invited.

Buddy poppies will be distributed at both Ruidoso Furrs Supermarkets, Wal-mart and Thriftway Foods Friday through Sunday.

Maybe time in Springer will wake up teenagers

Judge Richard Parsons should be applauded for giving four teenagers the maximum sentence for the wanton destruction they laid upon more than 30 Ruidoso homes.

The teenagers were sentenced to two years in the girls' and boys' state detention halls, despite officials' recommendation of no sentence for three.

Without a thought for the pain they inflicted upon the people who owned the homes, the teenagers (aged 14, 16 and 17) seemed to have destroyed about everything they could get their hands on. They shot up food coloring bottles with BB guns, spraying the permanent color all over the place. They sprayed family pictures with syrup. They threw pool table balls through a glass door. The list goes on and on. Apparently, they were empowered by all the booze they had stolen.

It's too bad they (or their parents) can't be forced to pay for the more than $50,000 in damage. Instead, insurance companies will pay.

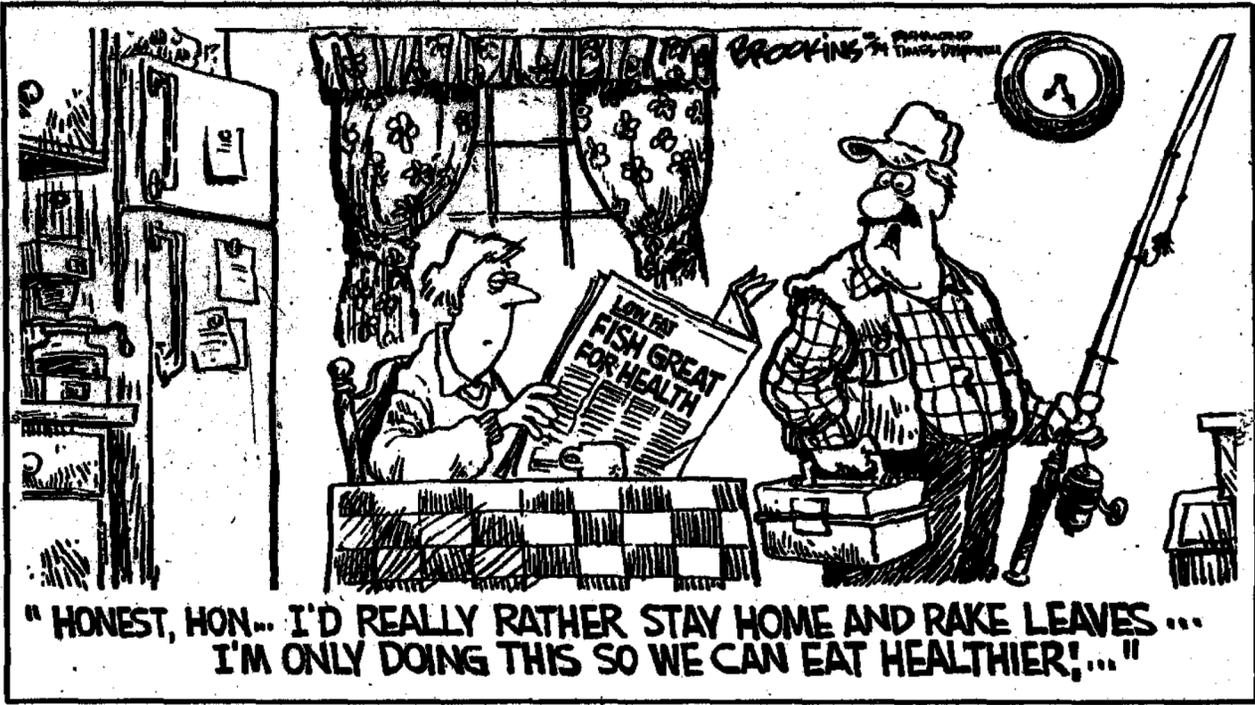

More accurately, you and I will pay. Insurance companies are well aware of the problems with teenage vandals in this community. These teenagers weren't the first to vandalize summer homes, although they are at the top of the list in total damages. Already, those who try to get insurance on second homes in this community are being turned down, because of the vandalism problem. We can't force teenagers to pay for this cost.

The only way to make them pay is to give them plenty of time to think about what they've done. We know of one other teenager sent to Springer who said the experience woke him up. Let's hope these kids wake up, too.

One wonders why only one of the four parents reported a missing child when all four stayed overnight in one of the summer homes they were destroying. We bet they were as shocked as their children when the sentences were handed down.

Whatever happened to, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Did these teens' parents ever quote that adage to their children?

Maybe the parents need some time in Springer so they'll wake up, too.

Memorable moments from the '94 election

by ROGER MORRIS
Summit Syndicate

Some historic scenes behind-the-scenes from the 1994 election in New Mexico, moments of folly and fraud you never saw on TV or in the candidates' ads and handouts, yet were decisive in this often lurid political year:

- Democratic Party fixer Jamie Koch and other backroom statesmen of the King regime scheming last January to push Lieutenant Governor Casey Luna off the ticket. Smart fellows that they were, they knew it could all be done quietly, without trouble.

- Federal Bureau of Land Management Director Jim Baca being axed in Washington one weekend last winter, and deciding the next that he had nothing better to do than run in the New Mexico Democratic gubernatorial primary, ensuring the split of the insurgent majority, and the renomination of a politically crippled Bruce King.

- Republican gubernatorial front-runner Dick Chaney thinking grass and ignorant newcomer Gary Johnson was nothing to worry about.

- Governor Bruce King surviving the opposition of 65% of his party's voters in the primary, and then thinking that crass and ignorant newcomer Gary Johnson was nothing to worry about.

- President Bill Clinton trying to talk Bruce King into a more vigorous and aggressive campaign, and succeeding -- only to have to talk Alice King into it as well, and failing.

- Bruce King oblivious to appeals from environmentalists and other Democratic grass roots activists to meet their concerns in return for their support.

- Bruce King oblivious to an idea by Green gubernatorial candidate Roberto Mondragon to form a genuine Democratic-Green governing coalition if Mondragon were to drop out of the race.

- Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor Patricia Madrid smearing and savaging Mondragon all over the North without getting caught by the media, then getting cocky enough to believe she could peddle the same garbage -- including explicit racist demagoguery about "anglos" and "newcomers" -- even in front of reporters.

- Bruce King riding home from the rally where Madrid spewed her racism, muttering in the car, "That stupid (expletive deleted)." "That stupid (expletive deleted)." (Hint: it rhymes with ditch.)

- U.S. Sen. Jeff Bingaman, in a life-and-death fight with GOP challenger Colin McMillan, privately begging the Greens to keep Mondragon in the governor's race, even if it damages Bruce King, because Mondragon dropping out might reduce overall voter turnout and hurt Bingaman. It's called every-man-for-himself politics in the Democratic Party.

- The millionaire, reactionary McMillan deciding to run a nasty, thoroughly negative, obscenely costly campaign against Bingaman on the grounds that sleepy Jeff is out of touch with ordinary folks, unlike good ol' Colin. That's the same McMillan who collected his government subsidy checks on large landholdings while denouncing handouts to the poor, and whose legislative record in Santa Fe reeked of big special interest favoritism.

- Democratic House Speaker Ray Sanchez and Senate President Manny Aragon deciding pretty much to stand by and watch Bruce King self-destruct, because a lonely Republican governor means more power, publicity and future political prominence for the Legislative barons who'll confront him.

- Thousands of voters knowing that both the Democratic and Republican parties are terminally corrupted and intellectually bankrupt, yet sadly unable to face the need and necessity of supporting a purgative third party -- even the Greens or a Mondragon they may not completely favor -- simply out of fear or habit. Voters are watching democracy in New Mexico die, a slow death, but can't bring themselves to give the saving medicine to revive the old system.

- Meanwhile, campaign consultants, media manipulators, advertising wizards, pollsters, consultants and other assorted hacks -- win or lose -- are counting their huge profits from the most expensive races in state history, profits made by largely obscuring the issues, confusing the electorate, and poisoning once again a free and intelligent political choice of leadership.

And those are only a few of the grainy snapshots. Thank goodness it's over -- this dirtiest, seediest, most expensive campaign in our annals. Good riddance. But we'll be living with the toll for some time to come.

Letters to the Editor

Library vital to this community

TO THE EDITOR:

I attended a workshop at the Ruidoso Village Hall Nov. 1 to discuss the situation of the senior citizen's centers and the public library. Both facilities have a real need for more room.

However, it seems many people don't realize how important libraries are in our lives and in our culture. They aren't just a place from which to borrow the current best-seller.

Besides the people who read for sheer enjoyment, many a lonely person, or one trapped in dire circumstances or a seemingly hopeless situation, can find escape in books. But public libraries also are important centers for research, and with the computer hook-up our library has with other libraries, it is possible to borrow almost any book one could want to read. I used the facility before making a trip to Alaska with a Smithsonian group. They recommended several books on the history and culture of Alaska. Our library did not have the books, but they got them for me in a very short time.

About a year ago, there was an article in Guideposts by a successful author. She was the daughter of a pharmacist and had had no opportunity for a formal education.

She sought out public libraries every chance she had and educated herself entirely through the resources she found in those places. An almost unbelievable story; but, periodically, other stories appear testifying to the importance of the role libraries have played in the lives of individuals.

So please, people, don't think of the Ruidoso Library as another recreational facility which can be put anywhere. Realize what we have here -- and appreciate it.

Post election reflections

TO THE EDITOR:

Re: Post Election Reflections

When people publicly speak out on a given issue it is OK, even constitutional, to question what motivates them to take a certain position.

I am deeply grieved to hear of Mr. Hubbard's tremendous financial losses at the Ruidoso Downs racetrack. Why would Mr. Hubbard be building a new hotel in an area where he has lost so much? Why did Mr. Hubbard speak out in favor of legalized gambling? It is OK for Mr. Hubbard to be rich, but Mr. Hubbard should tell us as it is. Legalized gambling in Ruidoso will be of great financial benefit to him.

He is betting on it! Realtors receive a 7% commission of their gross sales. If, in fact, legalized gambling will double or triple our property values, it seems to me that Gary Lynch will double or triple his commission each time he sells a piece of real estate. Watch out for double and triple increases in property taxes, too, folks. What really frightens me is that Mr. Lynch and others trust the political hacks in Santa Fe to "do the right thing." Scary, isn't it?

Our city government just recently approved a water-rationing program. If legalized gambling brings a lot of new businesses and homes to the area, will we have an adequate supply of water, or will we be bathing in and drinking beer? Most people who move here do so for the same reasons my wife and I did, i.e., a small, quiet town, no major crime problems, no air pollution, no traffic jams, less stress, and the pure beauty of the area. I'm disappointed in our mayor's support of legalized gambling. Does she have grandiose ideas of being mayor of a miniature Las Vegas? What's in it for her?

The major argument for legalizing gambling demonstrates the cognitive processes of a greedy and selfish teenager. It goes like this: "The Indians do it, they do it in Texas, we want some of the money," etc. My children used to try this by saying, "Jimmy's parents let him get drunk, have sex use drugs, etc., in their home." The response my children elicited was the same my mother gave me, "You are not Jimmy -- get used to it!"

How about legalizing cocaine, heroin and prostitution? After all, it will generate revenue and we can regulate it. Right? Legalized gambling won't attract certain criminal elements, break up marriages, or destroy lives. Right? WRONG! How about building a motel across from our high school where the kids can be provided with condoms and they can have "safe sex." We can charge $10 per hour room rent. It would generate revenue. The kids do it anyway, and it doesn't mean we condone premarital sex. Right? WRONG!

Congratulations to Father John Penn of the Episcopal Church (I'm not a member) for taking a public stand against something he feels is morally and politically wrong. Shame on those members of our local clergy who have failed to speak out on this issue publicly, or even to their own congregation. Their silence is a betrayal of their responsibility. Could it be that the truth may offend some and result in a lighter collection plate? Do absolutes no longer exist even in the church? A wise parson said, "Books become crooked from taking the path of least resistance. So do people." Again, I say SHAME. David L. Schuette

In Loving Memory of My Son Randy Robert Dutchover

It's hard to believe a year and two months have passed since our family ties were lengthened to accommodate your visit with our Lord. You left behind thirty eight years, twenty six days of memories I can't begrudge your choice. For you couldn't have chosen a more perfect friend. I can feel your peace and freedom from life's rough and rocky road, You're away from earthly sufferings in a place where the best go. Although I love you dearly I could not make you stay. I miss our talks, your laughter. Your silly and serious sides. The dreams you had, the plans we made are all now put aside. You tip through my and heart and thoughts often. As I learn to embrace your memories of yesterday, while I toil with today, look forward to tomorrow and the day we will share with you that perfect view. I will always carry you in my heart. Remember to smile as you look down at us while your away in God's care.

Record 72 businesses show at Jubilee

There's plenty of craft shows in the world, but few events bring in established businesses to offer wares normally found in display windows.

The 7th annual Christmas Jubilee brings together a record 72 businesses this year under one roof this year to create a shopper's haven.

This shopping extravaganza will be held Friday through Sunday, Nov. 11-13 at the Ruidoso Civic Events Center.

The Ruidoso Valley Greeters, promoters and boosters for the Ruidoso area, present the jubilee each year.

Included in the show will be holiday gifts, southwestern clothing, antiques, jewelry, appliances and furniture.

The doors open at 5 p.m. Friday, and will close at 8 p.m. Hours Saturday are from 9 a.m. until 7 p.m., and Sunday from 11 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The Jubilee also includes Santa's first appearance of the season, a fashion tea, raffle drawings and numerous musical performers. Food vendors will be selling baked goods, sandwiches and full meals.

Roxanne's bakery will be on hand with all of their goodies, including muffins and breakfast rolls, cakes and pies and pizza.

Blue Goose will be offering up their soups, sandwiches and salads.

The Ellis Store bed and breakfast from Lincoln, will add gourmet delights, and Texas Fajitas will serve up southwestern fare. You can top it all off with Fox Cave fudge.

Santa comes to town

The young and young at heart are invited to have breakfast with Santa Saturday at the Christmas Jubilee.

Santa and his elves will be on duty throughout the "come and go" affair from 9 until 11 a.m.

Just visiting with St. Nick may be enough for the kids, but a good breakfast is important to parents.

Rebecca Durham and her crew from perhaps the best restaurant in town, the Ruidoso High School Teepee Lounge, will be cooking and serving a hot, cooked breakfast with scrambled eggs, bacon, muffins and juice.

Kids and their parents will have their choice of coffee or milk.

Youngsters can whisper their Christmas wish list into Santa's ear and his elves will have a gift for each of the young guests.

Live music will add to the Christmas magic during this year's Breakfast with Santa. Local favorite Randy Jones will perform folk, country and western tunes.

Cost of the breakfast is $3.50 each, and tickets are available now at the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce and from Greeters. Some tickets will be on sale at the breakfast.

Relax with fashions, tea

Even the "shop 'till you drop" crowd welcomes a break in the middle of a long day, and the fashion tea offers just the ticket.

This event combines a fashion show with a relaxing tea break at the Christmas Jubilee at 3 p.m. Saturday.

A crew from Ruidoso's Village Buttery will serve a box of finger sandwiches and cookies with tea.

Many of the same stores exhibiting in the big sales room will have models showing holiday and casual styles for women and children.

A string trio will top off this shopping break before guests take off for another round of buying.

Tickets to the holiday fashion tea are $6, and can be purchased from Greeters and at the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce.

Giveaways galore

A gigantic drawing for prizes is an added draw at the Christmas Jubilee.

Proceeds support the Chamber Greeters' community service projects.

Tickets for the drawing are $2 each or six for $10.

The winning tickets will be drawn on Sunday afternoon, and you need not be present to win.

Prizes include:
— a limited bronze sculpture by local sculptor Dave McGary

— a Christmas print by Ruidoso artist Teri Sodd

— a handmade quilt from Hidden Treasures

— tuxedo shirt and broomstick skirt made by Gloria Fogerson

— a day at the races, including Turf Club tickets for two, courtesy of Ruidoso Downs racetrack

— lodging for two at The Lodge in Cloudcroft or the Carrizo Lodge or the Upper Canyon Inn (all separate prizes)

— lodging for two plus golf from the Swiss Chalet or Shadow Mountain Lodge (also separate prizes)

— dinner and lodging for two at the Ellis House bed and breakfast

— meals for two from Che. Bella, La Lorraine, Whispering Pines, Cattle Baron, Casa Blanca, K-Bob's, Texas House, Village Buttery, Misty Mountain Gourmet Shop, and Bent Tree Jamboree dinner and show

Santa will make his first appearance in Ruidoso Saturday at a breakfast during the Christmas Jubilee. He's also likely to pop up during the weekend afternoons.

Greeters host biggest town event of year

What's busy and blue and brightens up the village?

If you guessed the Ruidoso Valley Greeters, then you've probably seen this dynamic bunch of turquoise-blue frocked women in action.

The Greeters, whose biggest and best event of each year is the Christmas Jubilee, are the ambassadors for the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce.

"We are the only one in the country that's all women, and consequently we get more done - because it's women that do all the work," said Bonnie Mattox, vice president of the Greeters and civic center coordinator for the Christmas Jubilee.

The group has grown from 22 to 34 members in the past year, allowing it to do more to boost the spirits of new and old business owners than perhaps any group in town.

One purpose of the Greeters is to promote new businesses and offer support to owners and operators. They welcome new owners to town and cut the ribbons for new businesses.

The Greeters also welcome visitors to conventions and conferences, pouring wine, shaking hands and passing out pins. They give guests a standard packet of information about the village and a Ruidoso pin.

The Greeters entered a float in the Aspenfest parade recently, worked at the Oktoberfest, and welcomed the governor to town this summer.

At the Golden Aspen (motorcycle) Rally each September, the Greeters serve coffee and donuts for three mornings and welcome the cycling visitors to town.

Their second-biggest event of the year is the "Welcome Back, Horseman" party each May, when up to 700 Ruidoso Downs racetrack workers return to the job. The personnel are served specialty foods from nearly 30 restaurants.

But, the Christmas Jubilee, a November shopping extravaganza featuring local shops, is the big event for the busy Greeters.

The Jubilee was originally initiated because November has traditionally been a slow time for Ruidoso merchants.

During this slow time, before the snow and after the leaves, the Greeters decided to do their part to get people up to the mountains for the weekend.

They invest several thousand dollars each year in advertising to boost those efforts, and this investment is paying off. Jubilee participants love the response they get from visitors.

Besides boosting the economy by bringing visitors to town for the day or for the weekend, the Christmas Jubilee is a great time for locals to see, under one roof, all the shopping opportunities they have in their own town.

Links challenges Ruidoso golfers

Landing planes at the old Ruidoso Municipal airport used to be treacherous. Now, trying to land your tee shots on the same site can be just as tricky.

Ruidoso's newest golf course, the Links at Sierra Blanca, is a berm-studded 18-hole course on the site of the old airport. Dig a foot or so into one of those berms and you'll find concrete sections of the old runway cleverly hidden below.

A display booth will tell all about the course, at the Christmas Jubilee this weekend.

Playing the Links can be a dream or nightmare, depending on how good your game is on that day. Skilled players with a downhill lie will be at an advantage. If you walk away with a good score, you're not just an average golfer.

The front nine features a links-style course while the back nine has some more traditional layouts with holes framed by tall pine trees.

From the blue championship tees, the course measures 7,003 yards. Designed by Jim Colbert who is on the senior tour, the course also has a monster 581-yarder, hole seven.

The Links prides itself in its well-maintained tee areas and sandtraps. An excellent driving range and putting green makes the Links one of the better practice ranges in New Mexico.

Golf pro Michael Hicks rated 72 on this par 72.

Bring your clubs, but don't forget your camera. A lake frames the Sierra Blanca peak in the background on the front nine. And the tee at 16 gives the golfer a stunning view of the valley below.

The Links wraps itself around the Ruidoso Convention and Civic Events Center.

It has its own pro shop featuring gifts such as clothing, hats, golf bags and clubs, gift certificates and accessories -- something for the family member who has everything. Drinks and snacks are available in the shop and on the course.

The Links at Sierra Blanca just finished its fourth season this past summer. For more information about the Links, stop by its display booth at the Christmas Jubilee or call 258-5330.

Pine needles can be beautiful art

Pine needles may be considered yard trash to some Ruidoso home owners, but to Kara Matheson they are essential ingredients for her art.

Matheson uses the needles as the primary material to create baskets for her La Naturelle studio at 300 Mechem, behind The Deck House Restaurant.

She'll bring part of her collection to the annual Christmas Jubilee this weekend.

Pine needles may be considered yard trash to some Ruidoso homeowners, but to Kara Matheson they are essential ingredients for her art.

"Send a little bit of Ruidoso to friends and family across the United States," Matheson said. "I'll wrap, include a card and ship it for you."

Matheson decided in the spring of 1992 that Ruidoso would be the perfect town for a basket shop, with its continuously good selection of Ponderosa needles.

Since beginning her work, Matheson has kept busy trying to sew enough of her handmade creations to stay ahead of customer demand.

Each of the shapes are named and each basket is given a numbered logo. Matheson calls them signature baskets.

Her work has been purchased by buyers throughout the United States and in six foreign countries.

Her first catalog, released this year for $2 each, included 56 shapes. Matheson said she hopes to add another 20 shapes to the 1995 catalog selection this winter.

Her studio is open six days a week through Christmas. For a more in-depth look at her work after the Jubilee, stop by from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. any day but Wednesday.

Southwestern gifts hail area

Frank Mangon's new book "Ruidoso Country" explores the history and beauty of an area that has delighted natives and visitors for years. Mangon also captures the stories of the fascinating people who have brought excitement to Ruidoso for a century.

"Ruidoso Country" and other gift ideas that feature New Mexico and the southwest can be found at The Great Southwest! booth during the Christmas Jubilee held Nov. 11-13, at the Civic Events Center.

"Ruidoso Country" and other gift ideas that feature New Mexico and the southwest can be found at The Great Southwest!

The Great Southwest! owners Jerry and Bonnie Mattox have their own contribution to the southwest theme — denim coral necklaces and earrings. The marriage of the coral and the silver has created versatile pieces that complement any blue denim outfit and work well with colors as well.

"We just put the two (coral and silver) together," Bonnie Mattox said. The Mattoxs got the idea after they visited Hawaii. They returned with some of the blue coral and it made a perfect match with silver — a natural fit with the traditional colors of the Southwest.

They've been designing the accessories for years. The necklaces and earrings can dress up any outfit or add the final touch for a casual night on the town.

Other unique gifts available include a set of specially designed Ruidoso absorbent coasters found only at The Great Southwest!

Patrons can find Nambe tableware from Santa Fe as well. Nambe tableware is known for its award-winning elegance and utility. The tableware can transfer directly from the freezer to the stove-top or oven. The hostess can serve from it as well. Nambe cleans easily and doesn't tarnish.

The Mattoxs ran several shops in Santa Fe before moving to Ruidoso six years ago. For a wide range of Southwestern gifts, check out The Great Southwest! booth.

Holiday blooms

Ruidoso Flower Shop will be in full bloom at the Christmas Jubilee.

"We will have a great selection of Christmas wreaths, fireside baskets, centerpieces, ornaments, and wreaths," owner Jane Terrell said. "And we will also be taking orders for custom pieces."

Ruidoso Flower Shop has a wide variety of Christmas and fall silks Terrell said, and the shop also features custom Christmas in-house decorating.

Ruidoso Flower Shop will be in full bloom at the Christmas Jubilee.

Since its inception in the 1950's, Ruidoso Flower Shop has served the community's floral needs.

In 1983 the shop was purchased by the Terrells, who moved it to 353 Sudderth in 1987.

"We needed a larger, more centrally located shop," said Jane Terrell.

Terrell is now the FTD district chairperson.

"I'm responsible for the FTD education programs and design testing," she said. "The area I cover includes all of New Mexico and El Paso."

FTD is one of the sponsors of the Children's Miracle Network, an organization dedicated to helping children.

"I work in conjunction with Providence Hospital in El Paso on the Children's Miracle Network," Terrell said.

Part of the success of Ruidoso Flower Shop is the detail its staff gives to special events.

"People are doing things up big with sit-down dinners, elaborate ceremonies and receptions," Terrell said. "And since weddings and romance are definitely back in style, our flower business is great."

The FTD satisfaction guarantee is an important part of Ruidoso Flower Shop's philosophy. The guarantee states that "As professional FTD florists, we guarantee your satisfaction with every order sent through FTD for delivery in the United States and Canada."

"We really want people to know that because we are FTD and fully computerized, customers can send flowers anywhere in the United States for only $3 extra," Terrell said.

Ruidoso Flower Shop delivers all over Lincoln County and the staff is looking forward to seeing everyone at the Christmas Jubilee.

Clothes for all

Don Hixon/The Ruidoso News

Owner Mary Parsons will bring a sampling of clothes and accessories to the Christmas Jubilee that can be found year around at The Clothes Horse.

The classic look for every size, including petite, missy and large, is the emphasis at The Clothes Horse, which opened in August at the Paddock Shopping Center.

The shop's unique and classic clothing and accessories will deck out a booth at the Annual Christmas Jubilee Friday through Sunday at the Ruidoso Civic Events Center.

Shoppers at the jubilee will be given a sneak preview of the shop's winter line and wide Christmas selection.

Owned and operated by Mary Parsons, the shop is a labor of love, pairing Parsons' artistic ability with her business background. An art class first exposed her to Ruidoso's special charm 18 years ago and she decided to stay.

An agent for Century 21 Real Estate, her collective experience includes running a travel agency, an art gallery, a woman's clothing store, a freight line and a retail lighting store.

Selections for The Clothes Horse booth will feature sportswear, dresses, purses, jewelry, accessories and large assortment of vests, $29.95 and up.

After viewing the composite, stop at the shop at 1009 Mechem Drive, which is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Unique baskets please everyone

When Jenny Doherty and daughter Heather Lowe opened the Violets gift basket business, their goal was to provide quality service for both the person who orders a basket and the one who receives it.

Violets is now in a new location at 2330 Sudderth behind The Wall T-Shirts, and it still seeks to provide the quality and special service which has become the hallmark of the business.

Mother and daughter are always on the lookout for unusual and edible products, searching the world for specialties.

Visitors to the Christmas Jubilee shopping extravaganza will have the opportunity to sample some of the many new items in Violets inventory.

"We invested a lot of time buying only what we feel is the best," Lowe said.

Individually selected, Violets' baskets are artistically arranged and may include pates, pickled vegetables, short-breads, coffees, teas, and many other items.

"Some of our favorites include a Dutch butter tart called Boterkoek and "Croquant's," a French dipping cookie with a unique texture and flavor that's hard to resist when served with coffee, tea, or cocoa," Lowe said.

Tea lovers will find a wonderful selection of China Mist Gourmet Iced Tea, a thirst-quenching change of pace available in a variety of flavors including passion fruit, apricot, and raspberry.

Mother and daughter are always on the lookout for unusual and edible products, searching the world for specialties.

Another favorite item of Violets' customers is the exclusive line of Fairwinds Gourmet Coffees. Many heartwarming, delicious flavors can be included in Violets' personalized baskets.

"Our goal is to provide quality service and merchandise that you, as a customer, and also that special person who receives a Violets Gourmet Gift Basket, will enjoy and remember," Lowe said.
