Texan glad to be alive after ATV plunges down ravine

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

All Lucy Brady remembers seeing were a few trees before she lost consciousness as she plunged 75 feet down a ravine Thursday.

The 45-year-old spring break visitor from Dallas was driving a four-wheel all terrain vehicle (ATV). While her husband, children and several friends behind her in a rented Jeep watched in horror, she failed to navigate a turn on a forest road and disappeared over a ridge in the Bonito area of the Lincoln National Forest.

Speaking from her room at the Lincoln County Medical Center Friday, Brady said she suffered fractured ribs, torn ligaments in her left knee, a bruised liver, cuts and bruises.

"My helmet was split in half," she said. "I religiously wear my seatbelt. They both helped save my life."

Her husband, Jack Brady, their three children and friends scrambled down into the ravine, but couldn't find her or the rented vehicle in the thick underbrush.

"I was very slow waking up," Brady said. "I yelled knowing something was wrong. I was in great pain and couldn't straighten up. I faded in and out and then I heard them looking for me."

"They heard me and after finding me, sent someone back to call for an ambulance." The Bonito Fire Department received the call at 5:09 from the pay telephone at Bonito Lou's Store several miles away from the accident site, according to Howard Puckett of the Bonito department.

The accident site was up past the old Parson's Mine, about a quarter of a mile west of Crest Trail off Forest Road 108, Puckett said.

"She said she wasn't going fast and came to this curve and it (a Honda Odyssey four wheeler) wouldn't turn," Puckett said. "She went out about 50 feet and down about a 75-foot incline. It rolled and landed. She was strapped in by a four-point safety harness and had a helmet on.

"She was trapped between the roll bars and we had to cut the roll cage to get her out of it."

The department's six-man rescue unit was met at Bonito Lou's by one of the Brady party, who stayed behind after calling to show rescuers the way. Paramedic Greg Kotila and two crew members were right behind in the ambulance, Puckett said.

"We had to carry her out in a (fiberglass basket) a quarter of a mile to get to the road," he said.

"We got her out just as it got dark. We drove out in the dark through Nogal rather than go back the other way because it was a little smoother."

Brady said she was in great pain while being carried out in the basket and on the ride back.

"I was just moaning. The only reason I couldn't yell out more was my kids were in tears and my husband was about ready to have a fit. They couldn't give me anything un-

Session ends without track gambling bill

by PETER EICHSTAEDT
The News Correspondent

After a marathon all-night session by the state Senate, the 1995 Legislature adjourned at noon Saturday after killing new gambling and passing spending bills for education, state government and new construction projects.

Efforts to approve video gambling at the state's horse racing tracks continued up until the final moments, but died when the House failed to vote on compromises.

The governor said he will not call a special session for gambling bills, and legislators weren't jumping on that bandwagon, either.

The result is that questionable video gambling at fraternal and charitable organizations will continue as it has, and some 13 Indian tribes will have legitimate gambling under compacts signed by Gov. Gary Johnson.

Johnson said he will do like previous governors and not remove the questionable video gambling machines from these organizations. But, he would act if the number of machines is increased or racetracks attempt to install them.

New Mexicans will, however, be playing a lottery later this year if Johnson, as expected, signs the lottery bill approved by the Legislature.

That bill, sponsored by Sen. Tim Jennings (D-Roswell) and Stuart Ingle (R-Portales) will allow for instant winners and a statewide number matching lottery.

The lottery would provide money for public school construction projects and college scholarships for state residents to attend state universities and colleges.

Ruidoso left out of state funding

by PETER EICHSTAEDT
The News Correspondent

A bill that spends $84 million on new construction projects was passed by the Legislature just one half hour before adjournment on Saturday.

While many Lincoln County communities received funding for projects, Ruidoso's requests for a rec center and water system improvements went unfunded.

Of the total, $20 million goes to public school projects statewide. Another $1 million will go to buy water rights in the Pecos River Basin.

Other expenditures include $2 million for sewer systems in the co-lonias that have developed in the Dona Ana County area, and $1.7 million for handicapped access to state universities.

The bill is still subject to line-item vetoes by Gov. Gary Johnson, but the governor said he is unlikely to ax many projects.

In Lincoln County, the following projects were included:

- $65,000 for the Corona Senior Citizen Center.
- $70,000 for Carrizozo Police Department equipment.
- $180,000 for Ruidoso Downs water system.
- $180,000 for Ruidoso Downs waste water system.
- $50,000 for Corona schools activity bus.

Endangered species addressed last day

by PETER EICHSTAEDT
The News Correspondent

After behind-the-scenes negotiations between ranchers and environmentalists, a unique bill that details how animals are put on the state's endangered species list was passed by the Legislature moments before adjournment on Saturday.

"It will require people get together and be concerned about the effect on people and animals that the listing has," said the bill's sponsor, Sen. Tim Jennings (D-Roswell), shortly after adjournment.

"It can be one of the most remarkable things to come out of the session," Jennings said.

The bill will require scientific analysis of the species before it is placed on the endangered list, and will also require public hearings in the affected region as well as a mitigation plan for both the animal and the community affected.

The last-minute negotiations involved funding of about $450,000, which has been taken out of the state Game and Fish Department's budget.

Environmentalists said the lack of money made it impossible for the department to carry out the requirements of the bill.

The funding, however, was restored in a last-minute bill that contained about $9.5 million for various state projects and departments.

Jennings said part of the state money will be used to match

"I got to the hospital," she said. "As soon as they were through with the X-rays, I said, 'Excuse me in this day and age, and Nancy Reagan will be upset, but I want drugs now.' I was worried I was going to be paralyzed with a broken back, but it was just bruised."

"I'm so sore today, it's pathetic. My liver was bruised. A rock stabbed me on the side. I was out for a good 45 minutes. They couldn't see me in the ravine. When I came to, I was not calling for them, I was crying. One guy heard me. They could not see me from the road. It was about 150 feet down and I was on my side."

"If it had been a cliff, I would have been gone. They were really worried because it was getting dark and they knew it would get real cold."

"When we heard the ambulance siren, the whole group just sighed, 'Hallelujah.'"

Brady said she believes the brakes on the vehicle failed and that something malfunctioned, preventing her from turning left to stay on the road. She couldn't recall the name of the business where she rented the units.

"I don't hold any hard grudges (against the business owners)," she said. "We should have checked it out before we left. They call them accidents, because that's what they are."

The family has no insurance, she said. The Bradys have been married for about two years. She teaches pre-school and her husband owns a landscaping and repair business.

"Our two daughters introduced us," she said. "We both had homes where all the kids came together. I cooked a lot for teenagers."

The girls, her son and several friends came to Ruidoso for the first time earlier this week for spring break.

"We've been having a wonderful time. I love this area and we've been talking about finding a hideaway up here," she said. "I've been totally stress free, and then this happened."

Most of her party planned to leave Friday. Brady said she hoped to leave soon after, and would seek additional treatment for her knee in Dallas.

County drives by travel rule

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Lincoln County officials have come up with a way for county commissioners to avoid violating state law, yet offset the cost of traveling to the county seat in Carrizozo.

Last week, commissioners designated their individual districts as their "home bases." That means travel expenses incurred from the home base to Carrizozo for monthly and special meetings will be covered by the state's travel and per diem act.

Three commissioners came under fire for their practice of collecting travel money for traveling to the meetings after County Attorney Alan Morel reviewed the state statute. Commissioners Wilton Howell from Ruidoso and Stirling Spencer from a ranch outside Carrizozo, had not filed for any reimbursement. Commissioners L. Ray Nunley from Ruidoso, Bill Schwettmann from Alto and Chairman Monroy Montes, who lives the furthest away in Hondo, have been submitting vouchers for reimbursement.

Sheriff James McSwane had been tipped by someone that there was an attorney general's opinion from 1988 saying commissioners should not be paid for travel to meetings at their home base. He called the situation to Morel's attention that the interpretation of home base or "designated port of duty" was the county seat.

County Manager Carol Cooney said she talked to the state Department of Finance and Administration. Officials there said the meaning of designated port of duty had never been determined.

Other counties have solved the problem by designating each commissioner's district as his/her home base, Cooney told commissioners. On a motion by Spencer, they followed the suggested by passing a resolution to that effect.

Other elected county officials still are to consider the courthouse their base.

"The statute lets commissioners define the designated port of duty," Cooney said. "If the action is ever challenged in court, the attorney general's opinion would be thrown out and the law would stand alone."

Although there was no requirement to pay for previous reimbursements, Nunley submitted a $600 check to cover the $594 he had been paid since 1992.

Montes, who as chairman made the trip many more times than other commissioners, had collected $1,149 for 4,596 miles of travel. Schwettmann had been paid $560.50 for 2,242 miles.

the operations of state government and the state's colleges and universities at a 5.5% increase.

Two days before signing the budget, Johnson and legislative leaders announced an agreement on spending levels.

"This is where I hoped to be from day one," Johnson said. The bill contained "everything I hoped to get out of the session."

TAXES

The Legislature approved and Johnson signed a bill that repealed the state's controversial 6-cent gasoline tax. One of the six cents, however, remains in effect until the year 2003 because it has been pledged to pay off bonds used for road construction projects.

Although the gas tax was cut, legislators remained convinced that the reduction will not mean lower prices at the pump.

Johnson had asked for more tax cuts, including reductions in personal income taxes and removal of gross receipts taxes on medications, but the Legislature took no action on his requests.

PRISONS

Part of the budget agreement also established spending levels in capital construction, and included about $16 million to begin design and construction on two new state prisons.

In a last minute move in the Legislature, two bills were passed that would create two separate prisons, each at undetermined locations.

One bill provides for a 550-bed, medium security prison, and another er provides for a 1,200-bed medium security prison.

Also, the Legislature approved $1.9 million to open a 264-bed minimum-security prison now under construction in Las Cruces.

Johnson was elected promising to build a new prison and has said he is looking for community financial support when deciding where to locate it. Johnson currently favors placing the proposed 1,200-bed prison in Hobbs.

GOOD TIME

In a related move, the Legislature also adopted a curtailment in the state's good time policy. The bill would give judges discretion to reduce "good time" by 66% for a wide range of crimes. Currently inmates can cut their sentences in half for good behavior.

Estimates are that the bill could cost the state as much as $100 million in the next 10 years because inmates will be jailed for much longer periods of time.

LIQUOR

Gov. Johnson has also signed bills that would allow for Sunday sales of packaged liquor. A bill that would have banned drive-up windows at liquor stores died in the Legislature.

The justification for the action, Johnson said, was that drunken driving is an individual responsibility.

Instead of curtailing alcohol availability, Johnson said judges should be more strict in punishing drunken drivers.

Commissioners oppose spotted owl designation

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Lincoln County Commissioners oppose the possible designation of 19,200 acres in the county as critical habitat for the endangered Mexican Spotted owl.

Last week, they unanimously approved a response to the proposal drafted by members of the county Public Land Use Advisory Committee.

"The commissioners oppose the proposed ruling based on local economic considerations, basic principles of forest ecology and sustainable ecosystem management, and questions of public land ownership within the county," the committee wrote in its draft response to U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Under economic impacts, the committee wrote that the proposal would result in a significant loss of revenue and jobs; it could result in loss of grazing areas and changes in water distribution; new fences and water lines could be required and would be costly; and it could limit recreational activities during breeding season.

Under forest ecology, the committee stated that due to lack of management for the last 20 years, the forests in the county are beginning to collapse in terms of general health.

Severely restricting management in those areas will only continue to harm the forest, committee members contended.

They also noted that federal ownership of the public land within the county has been challenged by the commission.

Montes said he thought the response was excellent and included technical information and economic aspects that would impact the county.

Rex Wilson, chairman of the PLUAC, said the diversity of backgrounds on the board ensures that decisions are representative of the county as a whole.

"The objectives were defined and approved by everyone," he said of the board, which was formed two months ago. "We have diversity in perspective and have strong disagreements and discussions, but we find common ground."

Members of PLUAC include five ranchers or farmers, David Koch of the U.S. Forest Service, barber Bob Hillis, attorney Don Dutton, and Carl Stubbs of the state Environment Department.

Endangered Species Act exemptions considered by feds

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

A proposed new approach to enforcement of the Endangered Species Act would grant exemptions to small property owners on single home residential tracts and parcels of less than five acres.

Secretary of Interior Bruce Babbitt and Dr. D. James Baker, undersecretary of commerce for oceans and atmosphere, have proposed a set of 10 principles designed to balance endangered species protection with economic development.

"These principles are guideposts for reauthorization should this Congress decide to move forward on endangered species issues," Babbitt said. They illustrate the administration's willingness to cooperate, but refusal to stop species protection, he said.

"Under this plan, states would have greater ability to guide species protection and recovery within their borders," Baker said in a news release from the Interior Department. "Science would be assured a stronger place in decisionmaking. Small landowners would encounter more flexibility and less regulation. And all landowners would be encouraged to provide good habitat for listed species and not be penalized for doing so."

In some cases, the principles can be put into action administratively, but others would require congressional or other action, Babbitt said.

As listed by Babbitt, the 10 principles and proposed reforms are:

— create incentives for landowners to conserve species by insulating them from restrictions if they later need to bring their land back to its previous condition;

— base decisions relating to the act on sound and objective science;

— make effective use of limited public and private resources by focusing on groups of species dependent on the same habitat;

— promote efficiency and consistency;

— provide state, tribal and local governments with opportunities to play a greater role in carrying out the act;

— minimize social and economic impacts;

— provide quick, responsive answers and certainty to landowners;

— treat landowners fairly and with consideration;

— prevent species from becoming endangered or threatened;

— promptly recover and delist threatened and endangered species.

Species

$125,000 in federal money that will be used by the department to manage the new program.

Counter license plates

Also part of the agreement was approval of another bill sponsored by Jennings that allows for people, most likely farmers and ranchers, to buy special, higher-priced license plates dedicated to cattle and sheep.

The money raised will go to the state's Animal Damage Control program, which is used to control predators on cattle and sheep.

The license plate bill was approved in response to an environmentalist-supported bill that would allow special license plates to raise funds to protect wildlife.

Jennings said he was motivated to introduce the bill because the Endangered Species Act was not saving animals, but only harming rural communities.

The bill would:

— Place animals on the state's Endangered Species list only after thorough scientific review by a panel of scientists from the state's universities.

— Require that recovery plans are developed, not only for the animals, but to help mitigate the economic and social impacts on communities affected.

— Require a series of hearings around the state on the listing of the species, the supporting science and the recovery plan.

was signed into law by Gov. Johnson. The bill contains about $75 million more than last year's spending and provides an average of $4,500 per student.

The bill includes sufficient funding for an average of up to 4.5% raises for public school teachers, although Johnson and most educators recognize that most school districts cannot afford to provide raises in this amount.

Johnson struck language in the bill that requested school districts to provide at least 3% teacher raises. The bill allows for school districts to spend the money on programs or salaries.

In signing the bill, Johnson questioned what portion of the school money is lost in bureaucracy and how much actually benefits students.

"Is a significant share of that money getting to our kids, or is it tied up in bureaucracy?" he asked. "I am not convinced that this money is getting into the classrooms. As parents, I invite you to join me in keeping a closer eye on the education of children over the next year."

Another of Johnson's cuts included $1.3 million in additional school supplies that would have given each teacher $75 to buy paper, pencils, crayons, etc.

The veto upset legislators and the House attempted to override the veto, but the override failed by one vote.

STATE BUDGET

Johnson also signed a nearly $1.5 billion state budget bill that limits spending to about $165 million more than last year, and funds

Four appointed to new terms on Lincoln P&Z Commission

Familiar faces have been appointed for new two-year terms on the Lincoln County Planning and Zoning Commission.

Rancher Nancy Duley was appointed at the county commission meeting earlier this month to serve in the commission district 2 seat on the board, after being nominated by Commissioner L. Ray Nunley. She previously served on the board about 1.5 years, but left prematurely when she was appointed to the county/Ruidoso Extraterritorial Zoning Commission.

She wrote the commission that she had worked closely with her late husband when he was a member of the Coconino County Planning and Zoning Commission that created that county's original zoning ordinance.

For district 3, radio station manager Jerry Wright was reappointed. Buddy Guthrie, an employee with the Otero Electric Company, stayed in district 5 and landscaper Ralph Romero, board chairman, remained as a member-at-large.

County road maintenance list 170 miles shorter this year

The Lincoln County Road Department takes care of 818.17 miles of roads, according to a certification report to the New Mexico Highway and Transportation Department.

As one of his last official acts before he resigned as road manager, Bill Cupit submitted to the county commission last week a copy of the report he is sending to the state.

Under the total, he noted 113.6 miles are subdivision roads; 70.68 are U.S. Forest Service roads the county maintains under a cooperative agreement; and 633.89 are basic county roads. He noted that 170 miles were eliminated last year from the list, mostly in subdivisions that were never developed or roads not used by the general public.

Services were held March 15th at La Grone Funeral Chapel for Viola Hinkle, who was called home by our Lord on March 12th.

The Reverend Wayne Joyce read from the gospel according to Saint John: "I go to prepare a place for you...that where I am, there you may be also."

He also read from the second letter of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians: "And he said unto me, my grace is sufficient for thee."

The Reverend Joyce reminded us that God's grace is sufficient for us in the hours of salvation, sin, trial and suffering, sorrow and death.

Special Music

Norma Phillips played prelude music on the organ, including "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." She also sang "Amazing Grace" to the accompaniment of her own organ music.

At the graveside the Reverend Joyce read from the first letter of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

March Full Moon

On the 15th while the gold and crimson colors of the sunset still were glowing in the west, the round moon appeared here in broad daylight — a silvery-gold medallion over the pinons on top of the eastern hill.

Soon a handful of small clouds found their way around from the north and settled right next to the moon. Here they caught the last of gold and rose colors of the west, presenting a moon-and-sunset early evening sky picture.

As the moon rose higher in the sky and darkness moved into the vale, the moon became decorated with circles of purple, light green and airy crimson, casting its gold and rainbow beams down the hillside into the valley, now already peacefully dreaming in the light of the full moon of the month of spring.

Showing love seven days a week is goal of Gateway Baptist Church

by DON HIXON
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Pastor Robert Lee Huffman has been in impressive European cathedrals, but he felt closer to God in a tent in Vietnam.

Huffman is the pastor of Gateway Baptist Church, a new house of worship in Ruidoso, located in the Gateway Shopping Center at 446 Sudderth.

"I gave my life to the Lord when I was 19 years old," Huffman said. "It was in 1987 when I re-dedicated my life and accepted the call to preach."

Gateway Baptist Church is dedicated to pursuing the Biblical truths taught by Jesus, Huffman said.

"I think that a lot of today's preachers are not preaching Jesus," he said. "It's easy to fall into a comfort area."

Nine charter members, those who pledge to help support a new church, have come forward, Huffman said.

"We have many plans for the church," Huffman said. "We are planning an outreach ministry and in beginning this new work, we believe that this house of the Lord is open seven days a week."

Huffman was project manager of housing and maintenance at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas before he retired from the Army with the rank of Chief Warrant Officer Three.

"My crew and I were responsible for 722 family units on the base," he said. "It was a stressful position, but one which prepared me well to lead under Jesus."

Huffman and his wife Janet moved to Ruidoso in October of 1992.

"Janet's grandfather had a rental home here," he said. "We decided that it was time to leave San Antonio and follow the call of the Lord."

Huffman said he has preached in Mesclero and Ruidoso Downs, and holds his license to preach from the First Baptist Church in Ruidoso Downs.

"I can do everything except marriages," he said, because he has not attended seminary school.

Huffman said his church is dedicated to demonstrating the same love during the week that is demonstrated in Sunday services.

"We want people to know that they are welcome regardless of their position in life, race, or any other external factors," Huffman said. "We are here to give the love of Jesus."

Gateway Baptist Church has Sunday school at 9 a.m., worship services at 10 a.m. Sunday, night services at 6 p.m. Sunday, and another night services at 7 p.m. Wednesday. A nursery is available. The phone number is 257-3859.

Ruidoso's GAMBLING HEYDAY

"The road was always so full of people, that most people would park one car at one end of town, and another at the other end so they could get home at night."

JOE REINHART

by KATHLEEN McDONALD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Half a century ago, Ruidoso had a thriving gambling operation similar to the high roller casino halls in Las Vegas.

The only difference was these monied games of chance — played in the front and back rooms of six Sudderth Drive bars between 1943 and 1949 — were highly illegal according to state law.

The reason the law looked the other way was because of the economic boost the games provided during the post depression and second world war years, says Joe Reinhardt, the man who supplied the bars with slot machines before and during the village's gambling heyday.

"Our economy was real bad and the gambling brought so many people to town that the state law enforcement all had good jobs," Reinhardt says.

He speaks of a time when the village only had one constable and no jail, when neighbors took care of neighbors, and state police had little or no authority away from the highways.

"The road was always so full of people," the 81-year-old Reinhardt recalls, "that most people would park one car at one end of town, and another at the other end so they could get home at night."

Reinhardt says the cooperative casino owners — Orland Bonaguidi of the Buckaroo Bar, Ted Johnson and Tommy Hicks of the Central Bar, Lloyd Davis Sr. of the Davis Bar, Heavy Drake (a state Representative) of the Mint Bar, Bobby and Ray Smith of Bob's Bar and Bobby Voice of the Navajo Lodge — had deputized sheriffs at every bar and "saw to it that there was no unlawful activity in Ruidoso" (outside the gambling, of course).

From his present home in Bent, which he shares with his wife Barbara, Reinhardt adds, "the record will show that there were no serious incidents in the seven years."

Also keeping the law off the gaming lords' backs was their redoubled efforts to help people in trouble — like rebuilding a person's burned down cabin or giving them a bag of food.

"Back in those days when we started (the gaming) there were a lot of destitute people. When a family would come through Ruidoso and was out of funds, they'd call on us (Reinhardt and the six bar owners) and we'd furnish them with a tank of gas and a meal — enough to get them to Roswell and the Chamber of Commerce there would do the same thing to help them get down the road. It's the type of community this was."

Operation Shut-down

The casinos were finally closed down in 1949, he says, because "after the war the economy became good and we were notified by the state that, realizing it was unlawful to operate gambling, we were not allowed to do it anymore."

"They indicated that they were clamping down on us, so we closed."

Reinhardt said he also helped institute the Ruidoso Downs

Racetrack with 14 other men, about three years before the village's six gambling bars were forced to quit offering craps and cards, roulette wheels and slot machines for good.

But, as the retired pool shark figures, without those same gambling attractions at the racetrack today — which he also owned a share of in its early years — it too will be a memory.

"The racetrack cannot exist if there's open gambling going on and it can't participate in it," Reinhardt, who later owned the Ponderosa Courts cabins, says.

Rather than prognosticate about those odds, however, he says he wants "to enlighten people in Lincoln County of the boom effect legalized gambling had for the county" way back when.

Many, like Dan D. Swearingin of Ruidoso, will say that the Democratic governors (John Dempsey and Thomas Mabry) at the time, the sheriff, and state legislators were paid off to look away from the crap shooting and blackjack, draw poker and seven-up.

"How else could you openly violate the law and get by with it for years and years?" Swearingin, who ran Dan Dee Cabins, asks rhetorically.

But Reinhardt, who was in the thick of the gaming, contends "That's all a myth."

Rather, the tale he tells of those high rolling years paints lawmakers and enforcers as penny-wise authorities who let Ruidoso play waging games because the draw on tourists seriously sparked the economy.

Police Raids

Reinhardt's lone slot machines of the 1930s were supplemented in 1943 with full fledged casino gambling tables placed in both the front and back rooms by the saloon owners.

"The governor called all of us together," Reinhardt says of a meeting around 1944 together with the six bar owners, "and complimented us on our operation, but warned us if there was any legitimate complaints made that the local law enforcement officers did not correct, that he'd send in his state police."

Newspaper accounts, as well as local lore, tell of occasional state police raids on the casinos. Whether they were staged raids or actual busts are left to question, as the gaming operations would reopen a couple of days later.

However, one raid in 1949 forced Hicks and Johnson to a jury trial (they were later found not guilty by county jurors), and 15 other gamblers were arrested.

A Dark Labyrinth

More folklore relates secret underground passages were dug to connect the bars and offer a quick means of escape during raids. A portion of a tunnel exists in the basement of a house on El Paso Street — behind where several of the bars were located — owned now by Bill Carrigan.

But this hole in the earth is not a tunnel, argues Swearingin, who adds that its supposed existence is "a load of crap." Rather, he explains, the former owners of the building in the 1950s, the Ferrers of Roswell, had dug the hole as a fall-out shelter.

"There was a time during the cold war that citizens were encouraged to build bomb shelters," Swearingin explains, "and the Ferrers started building one and never finished it 'cause the ground is too hard to dig here." He added that the Ferrers chuckled with mirth when seeing a newspaper account of the passageways.

Soldiers' Last Furlough

As Reinhardt recollects, the games were openly played and the main drag (an unpaved Sudderth Drive) became packed with people. Trucks and cars full of young soldiers, spending their last furlough in fun-loving Ruidoso while en route to war, were shuttled into town by government buses ("we all felt so patriotic — knew this might be it for them"), and escorted young, spunky fillies into the gambling halls.

The bars were open seven days a week with gaming lasting until 2 a.m. or 3 a.m., Reinhardt says.

Old Mill Books and Gifts owner Carmon Phillips, who was also about town during those days, recalls that because Sunday sales of anything — liquor especially — was strictly prohibited, each of the bars had a side door.

"So everyone would enter on the side," he says, "and drink and gamble."

People never locked their houses, Reinhardt recalls, but rather opened them up to the soldiers and other tourists.

Deviant Behavior

There was never any crookedness to the gaming, Reinhardt says. In fact, he'd hire elderly women like Sugar Lumpkins to make change for the gaming machines, and any gambler who was even remotely suspicious was pushed out of town.

"If there was someone crooked in town we'd find out about it and have them arrested for vagrancy and bring them down to the justice of peace in Carrizozo," he says. "The justice would say, 'Well, our jail cell is full and we have no place for you, so we're releasing a couple prisoners tomorrow. So, I want you to appear at 9 a.m.'"

"Sure enough, that would get rid of the guy — when morning came he was gone, probably to another state."

Reinhardt also says there was never any seedy behavior or call girls soliciting in hotels.

Swearingin, however, recalls this a bit differently.

"Basically there was no prostitution in town because too many girls were putting out for free — any prostitute couldn't have made a living," Swearingin swears.

Swearingin adds that more than a little drunkenness was observed during those days and nights.

"I had one guy come up to me (wanting to rent a cabin) and say, 'I've seen a lot of drunk people before, but I've never seen an entire town drunk before."

Swearingin also says "there were plenty of brawls," but not the lawlessness that many contend.

"We had a jail tree just west of Center Street," Swearingin recalls with a chuckle, "and people who caused trouble were handcuffed around the tree."

Still, as Reinhardt argues, games of chance need not lead to moral decay. In fact, nothing gets the Mississippi native more riled up than the suggestion that gambling in Ruidoso will spawn unscrupulous behavior.

"You can have all these people opposed to gambling and what not, and they don't know what they're talking about," scoffs the former Lincoln County coin machine supplier and owner of Reinhardt Music Company. "The (negative) effects they claim are not right — not in resort towns like Ruidoso!"

Sleepy Mountain Village

Before the gaming, Ruidoso was considered a two-and-a-half-month town with virtually no tourist attractions except for cool, pine-covered relief from the hot desert and dusty plains.

"There was nothing after Labor Day, you couldn't get anything to eat — every place was closed," Reinhardt recalls. "The economy all over was bad."

The village was not incorporated until 1945. There was no water system, police or fire department, cemetery or bank.

Reinhardt says he was the first to install gambling machines, in the late 1930s.

"I put in a few slot machines in the back rooms," Reinhardt says of the pull handle, three fruit machines he installed at bars throughout Lincoln County, "and they brought so many people to town that I finally put them in the front rooms just like in Nevada."

The bar owners took Reinhardt's lead, and soon they had a mini Las Vegas reeling in tourists' dollars.

It was at these village bars, Reinhardt says, that the high stakes "World Poker Tournament" began — a competition later adopted at casinos in Las Vegas. The approximately seven-week-long, seven-table tournament would score one sole winner with as much as $490,000 in his pocket.

"It was all on the up and up," he says. "Huge crowds would come to watch — the tables were all roped off so the players would not be disturbed."

Gambling Legislation

Gambling was and always has been legal on the federal level, he explains, and would take a constitutional amendment to ban it.

Reinhardt says a detailed legislative bill legalizing gambling with a local option was presented in Santa Fe around 1947 ("We knew that we couldn't operate illegally forever.") However, it was ultimately killed by its own authors after being drastically altered by bribed drafters in the legislative council committee, Reinhardt alleges.

"We had a lobbyist hired and he

The line of cars on both sides of the street in 1948 is testimony to the popularity of illicit gambling in downtown Ruidoso in the 1940s.

reported to us about strangers at La Fonda Hotel flashing rolls of $100 bills. We didn't know what it was about, but when our bill came out of the legislative council it was not our bill!"

"At the time (we drew up the bill) we didn't realize that Las Vegas, Nevada had a multi-million dollar fund to keep any other states from legalizing gambling. It's the only way they could stop it. I'm not sure how much money exchanged hands to get the bill down, but it did," he says.

He adds, "I know that if (our) proper bill was put up for the local option in Lincoln County, that we'd have no trouble passing (gambling) legislation now."

From The Ruidoso News
Sept. 26, 1947

"Tommy Hicks and
Ted Johnson are Acquitted Monday"

Monday afternoon, September 22 in Carrizozo N.M., Judge Lewis Armijo of Las Vegas, N.M. in San Miguel County dismissed the case against Ted Johnson of Ruidoso, and announced the jury's verdict of not guilty in the case against Tommy Hicks of Ruidoso, who were both being tried by the state of New Mexico for illegal gambling.

In the case of Ted Johnson, after hearing the complete testimony of various witnesses for the defendants and for the state, Judge Armijo dismissed charges. The case of Tommy Hicks was tried before a jury of 12 Lincoln County men and after four ballots were taken they returned the verdict of not guilty.

CARRIZOZO — Fifteen persons charged with gambling at Ruidoso have entered pleas of guilty and three others will face trial Sept. 15-17.

District Attorney W.T. Scoggin, Jr. said the pleas were accepted by District Judge J.L. Lawson of Alamogordo, and gave this report on other actions in the cases which grew out of raids at Ruidoso by State Police in June and July.

District Judge C. Roy Anderson of Carlsbad, sitting for Judge Lawson, granted nunciations restraining Tommy Hicks and Ted Johnson from gambling in the club room of the Central Bar and Cafe, and Buford Fisher from gambling in the club room of the Mint Bar and Cafe.

Judge Anderson also approved a motion to destroy $18,000 worth of gaming equipment seized by State Police June 27, but ordered it held until the September trials are completed.

T.M. Hicks and Walter S. Johnson are scheduled for trial before District Judge Luis E. Armijo of Las Vegas on Sept. 15 and 16. Trial of D.W. Davis is set for Sept. 18.

Special Olympians shine at Angel Fire

by LAURA CLYMER

Ruidoso News Sports Writer

Three Ruidoso Middle School eighth graders brought home gold and silver medals from New Mexico's Winter Special Olympics held in Angel Fire.

Sarah Russell, Jessica Gifford and Vincente Munoz participated in the giant slalom skiing competition. Their performances marked the first time Ruidoso students competed in the skiing competition.

Russell and Gifford, both products of the handicapped skiers program at Ski Apache, earned gold medals in their ability class. Munoz, who also learned at Ski Apache, took silver in his ability group.

The three-day event held earlier this month included opening ceremonies, the races, a dance and closing ceremonies.

"This way they get to compete. They are the stars. It's great for their self-esteem," said Sandy Emberlin, the special education aide who took the participants to Angel Fire.

Gifford has been skiing for a number of years. And although she likes it, she said her next goal is to learn how to snowboard.

"It's fun. You don't have to use poles, so you can fly down the mountain," Gifford said.

Ruidoso Middle School special education teacher Melanie Briggs said participation in Special Olympics helps students develop agility, gross motor skills and self-esteem.

Ruidoso students previously have participated in Special Olympics competitions for bowling and track and field.

It costs about $30 per student per event, said Emberlin, who has traveled with the Special Olympians for the last three years.

The school district provided the vehicle and gasoline to take the students to Angel Fire. Sponsors paid for the remaining expenses. Wal-Mart donated T-shirts to the team. SAHSA, Alto Ski Shop and Wild West Ski Shop loaned equipment to the team.

Fortunately for them, Gifford,

Munoz and Russell had learned to ski before this season, because otherwise they might not have been able to go to Angel Fire.

The school district dropped the handicapped ski program after the Mescalero Tribal Council decided to cancel the discount ski program for Ruidoso schools.

"They got in one practice this year with Lisa Maue (Ski Apache Handicapped Skiers Association director), but then our program got canceled," Emberlin said. In a typical year, the students would take six trips up to Ski Apache for lessons.

According to Briggs, the district decided it had to cancel the handicap program out of fairness to the district's other students.

"The handicap ski program was completely separate from the school district issue, but since it's during the school day, they felt that it would need to be across the board," Briggs said, referring to the district's decision.

Ruidoso Schools Superintendent Mike Gladden said he canceled the ski program because the message from the tribal council was, Ruidoso school students were "not welcome."

"I just felt that to be fair and equitable to everyone that we wouldn't be taking kids to Ski Apache," Gladden said. "We would not be taking kids to Ski Apache during school hours and school sanctioned activities."

Gladden added that the ski program enjoyed great community support and collaboration from the local ski shops, the parents of students, the teachers and administration and ski area personnel.

"I don't like to see kids held hostage," Gladden said.

Maue said she can see Gladden's point, but the SAHSA director has her reservations. Because of their physical and mental disabilities, Maue pointed out, these students don't have the same opportunities to participate in other activities like playing on an athletic team or being a member of an extracurricular activity.

"The only thing that they were able to do and to do well was taken away from them," Maue said.

Gifford and Russell were fortunate enough to have parents who took them up for practice before the trip to Angel Fire.

Others weren't so lucky. Briggs said not all the students attended the one lesson given this season before the program's cancellation.

There were a few that were absent, and only a few got to practice that one time, she said.

"So, it was kind of unfortunate," Briggs said with regret.

Maue was not alone when she concluded, "I hope that something good comes from all of it. I hope it's a wake-up call to open up communication."

Skier falls off lift

An injured skier at Ski Apache had to be airlifted to an El Paso Hospital after he fell 20 feet off his chair while riding the Capitan Lift-line late Thursday morning, officials said.

Alfred Ellis, a veterinarian from El Paso, Texas, fell out of his chair when other riders started bouncing their chair, said Ellis' brother-in-law, Mark Katzman.

Ellis suffered a crushed right shoulder, a broken left wrist and a broken pelvis from the fall, Katzman said. After he was transported to Lincoln County Medical Center, he was airlifted to El Paso.

Five-on-five hoop tourney in Capitan

The Capitan Tip-Off, a five-on-five men's basketball tournament, will take place March 25-26 at the Capitan High School Gym.

Ron Becker has coached basketball for 24 years.

Becker brings unique philosophy to coaching

by LAURA CLYMER

Ruidoso News Sports Writer

He has coached basketball at nearly every level from junior high to high school, from college to semi-pro for the last 24 years.

He is undeniably outspoken, and subject to misinterpretation. Some might think he's arrogant. Others consider him one of the best in the profession.

One thing is for certain. He has an opinion and he's not afraid to express it. He doesn't answer to his critics - only the inner voice that is an even tougher critic.

Capitan boys' basketball coach Ron Becker has taught students about basketball's Xs and Os, and more - he tries to teach them about life.

But it wasn't always this way for the former University of New Mexico basketball standout.

I sat down with Becker last week and asked him about teaching and coaching today, and the changes he's seen in the three decades. This is the first part of a two-part series.

Q - When did you start playing basketball?

A - "I played basketball for three years in high school. I started playing in my sophomore year and had never played organized ball before that. Basically I was insane. The game was everything."

"My father taught me that the most important thing in life was to be educated to the best of your ability, and that you should do it as well as you can do it."

"I took that idea of trying to be as good a student as I could be because my dad made me study 1 1/2, 2 hours a night and if I didn't have homework he made me read a book and if I didn't have a book he gave me one. So I was very directed. I wasn't a great student. I was B-plus student. I wasn't even an honor student. But I learned to do the best I could do."

"But then I took that idea and I got interested in two sports - basketball and golf - and then I was insane. If I wasn't studying, I was playing. And if I wasn't playing basketball, I was playing golf. My summer job was to work at the golf course. And then when I wasn't there, I was shooting baskets."

"We didn't play in a gym, we just played on the driveway, that was homecourt."

"My dream was to go to college on a scholarship because I didn't feel that I could go any other way. I felt that was my ride and I spent every waking moment that I wasn't studying doing one of two things, playing golf or basketball."

"When the scholarships came in from lots of places, it was like oh, this was worth it."

Becker recalls a story from a former neighbor who told him the whole neighborhood block was really happy when Becker went to college. Why? Because the neighbors were no longer awakened at 6 a.m. by Becker dribbling a basketball up and down the street or shooting at the goal.

"So, the insanity that I felt was real. It's not some kid's fabrication in his mind."

Q - What about college and playing Division I basketball?

A - "I had a really good career for me. I thought I was Academic All-American three years in a row. I was All-WAC academic team. And finished there with, I think I was fourth in the history of the school in scoring back in 1970 when I graduated."

"In college, basketball was a business. It was fun, but it was more business than fun even then."

"I can remember really good things and I can remember nights when I didn't play so well and being called a bum. I remember mostly good, but there were times when people were screaming at me from the stands."

"So that started kind of painting my picture of athletics from the very beginning."

"There were people that lost their scholarships. Sure. It was a business."

"The fun was getting to practice an hour before everyone else and shooting by yourself with no coaches and no one watching. And, you had the whole Pit and your imagination could make you do anything. I made a lot of shots to win games an hour before practice."

"The games were business and you knew it. It was the atmosphere created by the coaching staff. It was work."

Q - How has the game changed?

A - "The 3-point line changed the game dramatically. It's made it more exciting. It's made post play better because you can't pack it in. And I don't particularly like the 3-point line because it's too close, but it's always going to be here."

"I think the other thing that's changed is I don't see enough kids that are committed to being the best they can be. I don't think they work hard enough to be the best they can be."

Q - In basketball, in athletics or in everything?

A - "I think in everything. I don't think there's enough commitment to excellence. Commitment to doing just the best you can do. Maybe not excellence - that's probably the wrong word. Commitment to doing things well."

Q - Why?

A - "I don't think they are taught how to do that. And you're taught first at home. I don't think they're expected to do that. I don't think they're expected to mow the lawn to the best of their ability."

"My grandfather taught me that, because if I didn't do right the first time I had to go to it again and again. So I learned to do it right the first time because then I could go play ball."

"So, if I did the job right the first time then I got to go do other things. That's where I was taught to do my best from my dad, my mom, my grandpa and my grandma. Those are the people that taught me. It wasn't a coach. It wasn't a teacher at school. It was at home."

"So I don't know what's going on. I try to teach my kids to do their best, but I can't teach other kids at home - that's someone else's deal."

Q - Have we as a society lost perspective about the role athletics play?

A - "No doubt. Athletics is a game at the high school level or junior high level played by young people. The kids stay with it or play it because they like it. And then they continue to play it because they like to play it well, and some where in the line there, there's usually a break that occurs between I play this game because it's fun' and then I play this game because I want to play it really well.'

"And then that's where the breakdown occurs. Between the coaches, the teachers of the game, the students of the game and the fans of the game.

"You play because it's fun and then when you join a team and take that step, go from playing on the playground to stepping into an organized team, then you take a responsibility... That responsibility is to do what you're told. To do what you're asked to do and to do it well. As well as you can do it and give the effort so that will happen. An effort is physical and it's mental...

"Ten years ago, even today in some places, you can demand and kids will do it, but that's a rare thing anymore. I think kids don't want to be told what to do. They want to do what they want. And that's fine, but it's not fine on my team.

"What's fine on my team is to do what you're asked, do what you're told. A perspective is, people outside the program can't understand why you're expecting kids to do things correctly because, my kid doesn't always do what he's asked to do at home. That's no big deal, but it's a big deal on the team.

"There's a loss of perspective right there. I think that part of the athletics has never changed. What has changed is that we want to win at all costs. We want to do whatever it takes to win. If we have to bring kids in from other places so our team can be better, we'll do it.

We'll change coaches as many times as possible because probably the only reason our children aren't any good is because our coach isn't any good.

"I think that's out of whack. Places that change coaches all the time are never going to have consistent programs."

Q - Do people have unrealistic expectations for a high school program?

A - "I think so. What should you teach in a program? You should teach kids to work hard. You should teach them to work together. You should teach them to play with an intensity. You should teach them some discipline. You should teach them to maybe try to play with some intelligence because they understand the game.

"But do you teach them to win? I don't. I teach those other things and maybe we'll win. But if we don't, that's OK if we're doing things to our potential... The idea is to get them to play to their potential maybe only one time. If you can get them to do that 20 times that's great. But maybe the lesson you're trying to teach as a coach only happens once, and it's the last game of their career. And that's a lesson learned, that's what teaching is supposed to be, is that you teach kids to learn."

Q - But doesn't society measure success in terms of wins and losses?

A - "Yeah, and that's never going to change. Society is always going to demand that, but I don't really care what they want... What is correct is to teach kids some real values that maybe they can take with them.

"Corporate America right now is saying the thing that our kids need most when they graduate from college is to be able to work as a part of a team. Teamwork is something that can be taught in athletics - a loyalty that the team comes before me.

"I also think that they want people that will work hard. That's what we're supposed to be teaching in athletics is to work hard. And corporate America wants profit too, and I guess that's winning, but I think that comes from the other things. Winning happens to teams that do these other things well.

"But the perspective is mostly on winning, and I think it should be on what's being taught.

"Are our kids being asked to be good students? Are they expected to give the same level of intensity and effort in the classroom? Or, are we blowing that off?

"That's the thing that should be paramount, is effort.

"We do too much yelling at the officials. If you didn't have the officials there, you couldn't have a game, could you?

"People that come to games should be there to applaud good play. Even if the good play is on the other team. You should be able to appreciate well-played athletic competition. And enjoy that and root for your team, but appreciate the fact there are other kids that are human beings and in other parts of the state that are trying to do the very same things your kids are doing.

"Athletics is good stuff if we can learn to root for our team and applaud the other team's performance.

"At junior high, we have a little league team that plays. We put on the clock and don't even keep score. And when it's all over, everyone shakes hands and goes out to have a cookie or cupcake and a coke... Why is that wrong? Why can't that continue? But then when kids get to be 15, there's all this garbage that goes with it? Why?

"Well, something is out of whack. Maybe we want our kids to play so well that we don't care what happens to other people. Maybe all we care about is just our little world. Instead of learning to understand that there are all kinds of kids out there trying to do the same thing your child is doing. That's kind of a warm thought, isn't it really?

"They are all trying to work hard, to achieve something. And yet, when we put them together, we forget about the other people's desires and goals and dreams and ambitions and wants, and we only focus in on one person or one group of people, and we condemn the others. I think that's wrong."

THE RUIDOSO NEWS

B SECTION

EDITORIAL

Old newspapers offer glimpse of past, present

Talking with Ruidoso's oldtimers recently, we've come to realize just how strongly gambling is ingrained in this community.

We took a look at the haggard and yellowed copies of The News from 1947-49, to see if the men's stories were repeated there. We only found two stories about gambling in a three-year period, so although it was rampant, it apparently wasn't talked about publicly.

It was hard to focus just on what we were looking for in those pages. Once you open them up, your eyes stop constantly to glance at the ads of the day, or the stories about issues affecting those times.

One thing we couldn't help but notice was the higher level of cooperation and community existing between the Mescalero Apache Tribe and the Ruidoso area in the 40s.

Correspondents from around Lincoln County and the tribe had weekly columns about happenings in their area, similar to the Lincoln Trails column we run today in the Good News Reporter.

A few stories talked about what the communities did to help each other out. The local American Legions sponsored Apache dances to benefit a tribal fund to construct a gym.

The Mescaleros hosted whites on Thanksgiving Day for a big meal, the Dec. 2, 1949 edition reported.

The tribe had just begun charging a fee to popular outdoor areas on the reservation, such as the Upper Canyon area and Sierra Blanca. Tribal leaders announced they wouldn't initiate the fee without the approval of surrounding local governments, and those governments gave their wholehearted approval to the idea.

It's amazing how a short jaunt back in time, using the volumes of history available through people and volumes of The Ruidoso News, can teach us so much about the present. In some respects, it would be great to return to those days.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

It's time for Mescalero recall

TO THE EDITOR:

I've noticed that the opponents of the nuclear waste dump have been in the media recently, expounding their reasons for wanting/not wanting the dump. I finally heard one that demanded comment.

One of the pro nuclear waste dump supporters had the nerve to get an ad on the radio and blame opposition to the dump on the rest of New Mexico trying to oppress the Mescalero tribe and keep them in submission by keeping them poor. This type of propaganda is the type corrupt politicians and con men use to dupe their constituents/marks in order to draw attention away from the real reason they want something—that being pure, "personal" greed.

Mr. Geronimo, I sympathize with your plight, but it is not the white man who is trying to put the dump in our backyard. It's a desperate nuclear waste creator who knows full well the dangers and that is why they don't want it near them.

To whoever the proponent for nukes was that placed the ad on the radio station, I have this to say. People aren't as stupid as you think they are. I especially want to refer to you repeatedly trying to pound home the comment that nuclear waste is "safe." If it's so safe why do they have to go all over the nation trying to find someone stupid enough to stick them with it? A couple of years ago I was in Nevada as they were trying to stick a nuclear repository in that state. I know it's called a repository but I guarantee you that what they are trying to do is to get you to bend over.

The power company greased enough palms in Nevada to create the Yucca Mountain repository and now they're afraid it's not going to be safe enough. It will never be safe enough. Ask them what the shelf life of radiation is. Ask them why they can't store it where they make it. Ask just what "temporary" means to them.

Tribal leaders are trying to tell their people about how much they stand to profit from this. Let me remind you of Manhattan Island. While they're telling you about how they are going to buy buses, fix roads, and buy things, all I have to say is, I'll believe it when I see it. That money will never make it to the "true" Mescalero Apache people. Instead it will go into those deep pockets that we all know so well.

I suggest your first investment to Mescalero be a Cancer Treatment Center. Check out what has happened in places where there have been nuclear leaks. Children die from cancer, babies are born deformed, and towns become wastelands. A couple off the top of my head are Chernobyl and Three Mile Island.

The person on the radio who kept repeating over and over about how safe nuclear waste is stated that there was no gas or liquid to escape. Well, it's the radiation that gets you. Radiation is rays like x-rays. It goes through glass, metal, concrete, plastic, etc. Lead will stop it, but is that all of it or just some of it? If this radiation is so safe, why do the power companies have such a hard time getting rid of it?

To Mr. Geronimo and Ms. Laws, I give you my complete support and appreciation. I ask you not to blame the white man for this. You see, there will always be money hungry people who do things without regard to anyone else. The power companies make a fortune off their nuclear power, and they don't care about the waste they create because they can buy people who in turn buy or dupe other people and in the end it's the same poor people who get it.

I believe that it's time the people spoke in the form of recall elections. These people were elected to represent the people, not profit personally. Dump China and nominate Rudin Laws to replace him. At least she cares about her people and their futures. Realize what these power companies already know. Don't defecate in your own back yard.

If you want money there are other places to look. The state wants another prison. Biggest money maker ever. Better yet, how about looking for investors to build here. Maybe a Six Flags or camp. Something our children can enjoy instead of die from. Nuclear waste will kill our children. New Mexico is not a waste land.

Other jobs more realistic than ones related to nukes

TO THE EDITOR:

This "MRS" thing has really become an issue. If it's such a good thing for the Apaches, why didn't the Seminole in Florida grab it up? Or any of the other tribes or states jump on such a big money maker? Why didn't Chino, Miller Hudson and the tribal council ask them why they didn't want it on their land? Why don't the power companies ask the federal government to store this high level waste in a place that is already contaminated with nuclear radiation, like the Nevada Bomb Test site(s), since we aren't doing any more bomb tests? They are far enough from any population centers that if there were an accident, it wouldn't hurt anyone except those there on the storage site.

Next question, how safe is our rail system that is to be used to transport this material? There has to be inspections of it to see if there is any possibility of a rail accident. Can the transport of it be guaranteed 100% accident and terrorist proof? How qualified will the people in charge of the MRS be, to make critical decisions at such a facility, or is Chino going to give up "sovereignty" of the land to "outsiders"? Third World countries would pay big money for a few pounds of it to allow them to carry out their terrorist operations. I'm paranoid! Maybe, but you can't rule out any possibilities. What motivates a leader to endanger his people? Money. Why not bring in other industries? Like metals or plastics recycling and make things to sell to other industries. This would bring more real jobs now for the Apache, not for the outsiders/specialists that are required to build/maintain the facility, and to handle the material. It requires years of specialized training to be qualified to do the many functions of a MRS, and it only a few weeks/months to be able to work in, or even manage, the other industries. Give more realistic, immediate and long-term jobs/benefits for your people. Give them a reason to live, not to run to their fallout shelters!

Let Chamber run visitor center

TO THE EDITOR:

(The following letter was sent to the Ruidoso Village Council.)

Dear village council members: I ask that you consider continuance of the village contract with the Ruidoso Chamber of Commerce for the visitor center and advertising dollars.

In almost two years of living here, I have been continually impressed with the cohesive and quality work and advertising put out by the Chamber. The visitor center always has someone there each time I have gone by for brochures or tickets, etc.

Please consider leaving this contract as is, for I believe this community has much bigger problems on the near horizon (water treatment plant, racetrack, needed recreation center, etc.).

Obituary for Mother Earth

TO THE EDITOR:

Mother Earth and Father Sky were pronounced dead at the scene, March 9, at Mescalero, New Mexico, by the Mescalero Apache Indians due to greed.

They have been our earth since the beginning of time, and have shared their every fiber.

There will be no services held for Mother Earth and Father Sky, because not enough people had been taught of their existence—so they won't ever know that they are gone.

Survivors are...no one! Pallbearers are those that said yes to nuclear waste.

No fund has been set up because there is nothing to save for, and all donations should be given to our children, for that is all that they have.
