Tuesday last day to register to vote in Ruidoso election

People who want to vote in Ruidoso's $6.5 million bond issue election must register at the county clerk's office by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

To vote at the Aug. 22 election, people must also be residents of Ruidoso, or be Lincoln County residents who own Ruidoso property that they paid property taxes on last year. County residents outside Ruidoso must file a certificate of eligibility with the village clerk by Aug. 7, said Village Clerk Tammie Maddox.

Thanks to a law passed last year, citizens can start voting now without a reason. Early voting began Tuesday and will continue at the clerk's city hall office through Aug. 17.

Nuke opponents stop here for weekend protest

Caravans demonstrating against nuclear weapons plan to make a stop in Ruidoso Friday and Saturday.

The Caravan to End Nuclear Weapons, led by the All Peoples Coalition, began its journey at the Trinity Site Sunday, the anniversary of the first nuclear bomb explosion there at White Sands Missile Range.

The coalition of 13 groups opposes plans to bring nuclear waste to New Mexico, including a plan to store waste on the nearby Mes-calero Apache Reservation.

The caravan includes information about the history of the nuclear age for public viewing.

Special Ruidoso School Board meeting Monday

The board will review final adjustments to the 1995-96 school district budget and make final recommendations for employment.

The special school board meeting is open to the public and will be at the administration office at 200 Horton Circle in Ruidoso.

Downs postmaster misses surprise party

by DON HIXON

Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Guests waited to yell surprise at a party celebrating Postmaster Shirleen Roberts' 35 years at the Ruidoso Downs Post Office Monday.

And they waited.

There was one small glitch in the plan: post office employees had kept the party so secret that the guest of honor failed to show up.

"It was certainly a surprise to find out about the party later," Roberts said. "I was helping a friend and wasn't where they thought I'd be."

When it became obvious that the guest of honor wasn't coming, the cake and ice cream were stored in the freezer of the Circle K store next door.

"They just put everything on ice and we had the party on Tuesday," Roberts laughed.

Roberts was presented with a commemorative postal service lapel pin to mark the occasion.

Roberts' career with the Ruidoso Downs Post Office began on July 16, 1960 after she passed her civil service test. She served as a distribution and window clerk for several years before being sworn in as postmaster of Ruidoso Downs on Jan. 31, 1976.

"It was certainly a surprise to find out about the party later. I was helping a friend and wasn't where they thought I'd be."

SHIRLEEN ROBERTS
 POSTMASTER

"I'm only the second postmaster since the establishment of the post office in Ruidoso Downs," Roberts said. "Dorothy Parnell was the first postmaster for many years, and then I worked for her until she retired."

Roberts must have learned her job well: she was named Postmaster of the Year for the Western Region in 1991 and Postmaster of the Year of New Mexico in 1992.

Her involvement beyond the call of duty is one reason Roberts receives such awards. Currently, Roberts is the editor of The Chaparral, New Mexico's publication for postmasters. From 1992-93 she was editor of The Postmaster's Gazette, a national publication, and served on the National Postmasters Editorial Board for six years prior to her editorship. Last year, Roberts was the co-host of the 90th National Post Office Convention in Albuquerque the first time the convention was held in New Mexico.

Her charity extends beyond work, too. Roberts is the president of the Ruidoso Downs Auxiliary and the coordinator for the annual All-American Arts and Crafts Fair. She was voted her sorority's (Beta Sigma Phi) Woman of the Year twice and Sweetheart of the Year once.

Celebrating 35 years at the post office brought on memories about past decades.

"I think that probably one of the neatest things that has happened during the years is watching the kids grow up," Roberts said. "I've watched them since they couldn't even see over the counter to now, when they've grown up and married."

But watching the post office grow from 300 postal boxes to 1,800 boxes over the years — while still keeping a small-town atmosphere — is what Roberts likes best.

"We've grown, but we are still small enough to know a lot of customers by their first name," Roberts said.

Roberts has no plans to retire, so it's just possible that the children peeking over the counter today will still be seeing her when they are grown, too.

Jury finds local not guilty in elk's death

by KATHLEEN McDONALD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Ruidoso resident Jeff Morgan has been found not guilty of the unlawful killing of an elk.

However, Morgan, 30, was found guilty of the petty misdemeanor charge of firing a deadly weapon in city limits.

The case has drawn unusually high public interest, with hundreds of people signing petitions supporting or opposing Morgan's actions.

A jury of six Lincoln County residents made the ruling in magistrate court Tuesday.

Morgan was charged with the crimes by state game warden Ron Moore and Ruidoso police on April 28, the day the 700-pound bull elk was shot in his backyard.

Morgan had admitted to shooting the elk, but pleaded innocent because he said he did not intend to hit or wound the animal.

Sentencing for the negligent firearm use charge was delayed for at least five days at the request of Assistant District Attorney Viola Rhodes.

The firearm charge is punishable by a maximum $500 fine and/or six months in jail. Morgan faced a maximum six months in jail or a $1,000 fine on the misdemeanor charge of unlawful killing of an elk.

Rhodes' argument that Morgan is an experienced hunter and firearm user, and was placing the safety of others in danger by firing the .22 rifle in a populated neighborhood, convinced the jury to convict Morgan on one charge.

The jury's 30 minutes of deliberations Tuesday afternoon followed nearly five hours of testimony from 13 witnesses regarding Morgan's intentions when shooting at the elk.

"I'd just like to thank the people who were behind me through this," Morgan said after the trial, adding, "Maybe, now the truth is known."

Morgan and his wife Kathy told the jury the elk had become increasingly aggressive and territorial on their property over a four-month period, had cornered their daughters in their playhouse twice, and wouldn't flinch at the usual scare tactics of loud noises or tossed rocks.

Rhodes had the burden to prove Morgan had intended to kill the animal.

She unsuccessfully argued that Morgan had never attempted to contact police or the game warden about the nuisance elk, and that he wasn't the one who reported his misdeed to the proper authorities, "but his father-in-law, who knows people in the game and fish department in Roswell."

She added that he shot the elk when it was not hunting season, and when his wife and children were safely in bed. Rhodes also charged that one of the witnesses had heard the gunfire the night before Morgan reported the shooting, and that his father-in-law "told the game and fish (department) that he heard it happened the night before."

County, firefighters hash out differences

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

All of Lincoln County's rural volunteer fire departments should operate under the same procedures, policies and by-laws, county officials say.

County Manager Carol Cooney and Emergency Services Director Connie Hopper met last week in Capitán with fire department officials to resolve disagreements and work out those procedures.

"We are hashing out a set of umbrella policies under which all the departments will operate, the same with the by-laws and operational procedures," she said. "The county will set a minimum, but if the departments want to go higher they can. For example, (it will be determined) what is the minimum number of firefighters needed on site to enter a burning building."

Cooney met Friday in Santa Fe with George Chavez, state fire marshal. In general he agreed with the direction of policies being worked on by both sides, Cooney said. However, she asked for written comment on two situations that still elude consensus.

When a fire department has an auxiliary organization, is there any requirement for that group to make quarterly written reports to the county manager?

"Our position is, you wouldn't make the Red Cross submit a report to you," said Chris Denne, safety officer for the Bonito Volunteer Fire Department.

"There have been decisions in the past that when funds are contributed to firefighters for their use, then the county has no authority over those funds," he said. "When the money is contributed to the fire department for departmental use, the money should be placed directly into an account over which the county has full fiscal authority."

"We have problems with them saying that they have some kind of reporting requirement. We have firefighter funds and we spend the money on uses they wouldn't always approve, like buying bottled water for fire stations or if we spend it for brisquet to have a summer picnic with our families. We also spend the money to buy bunker gear and to send people to training. Some uses the county would approve and others they wouldn't."

Cooney said Chavez has recommended accountability for money raised by auxiliary groups.

"But what do we do if we don't have control over it?" she asked him in writing.

The other area centers on the role of first response vehicles and whether they can be driven for personal use. Recently, Hopper issued a policy with county commission approval stating the vehicles cannot be driven on personal business.

That's not practical, Denne said. Their department has a couple of vehicles and they should be able to drive them to work if they respond to fire calls from work, he said.

Siren abuse?

The abuse of sirens and emergency lights on the personal cars of volunteers responding to calls has been another source of complaints and problems, Cooney said.

"I had gotten complaints from Capitán and Ruidoso that volunteer fire personnel were not using due care when they came through the municipalities with their sirens and lights on," Cooney said.

However, prohibiting responders to use sirens and lights outside of their home districts doesn't seem to be the answer, she said. That procedure was part of a policy summary put together by Hopper, approved by the county and sent to the departments.

"They're in and out of their districts when they respond to a fire as backup," Cooney said.

Two proposals emerged from the meeting last week to resolve the problem.

Under proposed rules, personal vehicles would be allowed to use sirens and lights only under code three (top) emergencies, but the drivers must obey all traffic laws. The warning devices may induce other drivers to get out of their way, but those citizen drivers won't be required to pull over.

Dispatchers will be encouraged to find out from a caller the degree of emergency involved and then alert police that fire engines, ambulances and response cars will be passing through their borders. The police may even be able to offer an escort, Cooney said.

Cooney insisted the county isn't trying to tell firefighters how to run their fire departments. Denne said that acknowledgement from Cooney is important.

"One thing decided during the meeting was that Lincoln County officials were going to focus on policy. A lot of the things in the document (from Hopper) were not policy. They were such things as operational procedures. Some might put them under the heading of regulations," Denne said.

Several items were tossed out of the discussion, because they are covered under the New Mexico State Fire Marshal's codes and rules, Denne said. Instead, county guidelines could say firefighters will adhere to those rules.

"We hope to resolve a lot by coordinating bylaws and other regulations and standard operating procedures," Denne said.

Volunteer departments operate in the settlements of Fort Stanton, Lincoln, Glencoe, Nogal and Hondo, and in the Bonito area around Alto.

Building owner Ken Bloom (right) listens as design consultant Dave Thomas explains how highway construction may affect his access.

U.S. 70 plan laid out

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Designers for a U.S. Highway 70 widening project face the challenge of providing access to businesses along U.S. 70 while preserving its usefulness as a thoroughfare from Roswell to Alamogordo.

About 40 land and business owners showed up Tuesday at the first meeting on the project to peer at highway maps and dicker with project officials over questions of access, drainage and right-of-way.

Questions centered on the area east of the border of the Mescalero Apache reservation through the intersection of U.S. 70 and Sudderth Drive.

The 5.5 mile project would expand the two-lane section of the highway west of Ruidoso to four lanes. It also includes improvements to the intersection of Highway 70 and Sudderth Drive in Ruidoso.

Proposed construction also includes straightening the road, installing drainage curbs and gutters, enlarging shoulders and removing hazards, said Luis Alba, project engineer for the New Mexico Department of Highway and Transportation (DHT).

The section was not included in a previous four-lane project because the state ran out of money, said Herrol J. Skidmore, project manager for environmental assessment with the firm of Louis Berger & Associates, Inc. in Albuquerque.

The meeting Tuesday was held to allow people to review the maps and offer input, Alba said. The first public hearing on the project probably will be scheduled in mid-November. The design is slated to be submitted to the state in December, Skidmore said.

The project is unusual in several respects, said Jim White, who heads the design team for the Albuquerque firm of Leeds-Hill-Herkenhoff.

The road crosses through a wetlands, something not often found in New Mexico, he said. The pastures and cattail growth begin just west of the village limits.

Unstable hillsides also present a problem, he said.

"As proposed, the project would involve considerable cutting into the hillsides, mostly on the north side and on the (Mescalero Apache) reservation, but that earth is not too stable," White said. "It will be a challenge to do the slopes. As one of our staff put it, we're between a rock and a wet place."

Even in the less populated areas along the highway on the reservation, easements may become a problem. Nine cultural sites were discovered within the project right-of-way on the reservation, during preliminary searches by consultants Tuesday, Skidmore said.

Only one of the nine appears to be significant, with a stone structure, he said. His archaeologists will consult with the state, but little latitude exists for moving around the site, he said.

Although four-laning is the proposed option, alternatives exist such as creating a continuous left turn lane, which would require less right-of-way, White said. But that option primarily is being considered for the urban area, according to a plan summary.

Drainage may be another problem, he said.

"The roadway follows the valley and it's a major drainage course. The road parallels and crosses the path," White said. "It could become a real problem in the urban area and we have to ensure it all moves through and is channeled into the Rio Ruidoso," White said.

Those attending the meeting spoke to project personnel individually about some of their concerns. Existing problems with drainage and future access for businesses dominated the exchanges.

At the November public hearing, property owners will see specific driveway designs on paper, White said.

To be notified of hearings or to submit written comments, write Alba at the DHT, P.O. Box 1149, 1120 Cerrillos Road, Santa Fe, N.M. 87504-1149. Call White at (505) 982-1036 for more information.

New events will see tourist tax dollar aid

by KATHLEEN McDONALD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

New special events in Ruidoso may receive a substantial amount of funding from the Lodger's Tax Committee (LTC) this year.

Up to 50% of the committee's approximately $30,000 in funds may be geared toward the promotion of new events, Ruidoso councilors decided last week.

Previously, LTC policy allowed for up to $5,000 for the promotion of a special event that meets key funding criteria.

The council's 5-1 vote on the changes followed recommendations made by the LTC on July 5. Councilor J.D. James voted against the change, saying he thought the policy was fine the way it was.

"We were seeking flexibility to support something new," LTC Chairman Bill Chance explained later.

Proven events may still receive as much as $5,000 in LTC funds, Chance said. And as before, approved applicants must match funding by 20% the first year of the event and by 50% each subsequent year.

Applications for event funding are accepted by the committee beginning March 1 of each year.

Events chosen for funding must meet an "acid test" of adding lodgers to motels and hotels in Ruidoso, and boosting gross receipts, Chance said. Applicants must provide information regarding how many people they expect to draw and their anticipated budget for the event.

The five-member LTC approves funding for about five to seven special events each year, Chance explained, and passes its recommendations on to the council for a final decision. Chance said about a half-dozen events were denied for funding last year.

"It must be a legitimate, do-able event, and not some pie-in-the-sky, off-the-wall idea," he added.

Upon approval of an event's funding, the Convention and Visitor's Bureau will serve as the contractor for the advertising and promotion, as well as the coordinator of the event.

The Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce is serving as the village's CVB after being awarded the new contract late this spring.

In time, Chance said, the CVB will handle selection of events without the intermediary efforts of the LTC.

"We're serving as a vehicle to eliminate the political pressure on the CVB when saying 'yes' or 'no' to a special event," Chance explained. "The contractor doesn't really want to take on that responsibility right away, so the Lodger's Tax Committee has been kept in the loop to have the CVB make the execution (of funds) and not the decision."

He added that all those who responded to the village's request for proposals for the CVB contract had requested a delay in handling the responsibility of recommending special events for funding.

Chance said that the chamber will "hopefully be comfortable" with taking on the responsibility next year.

Building debris won't be left out of dump plans

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Building contractors will not be left without a convenient place to dump their debris when the landfill in Capitán closes, local garbage collection officials say.

The landfill is scheduled to close as early as July 1, 1996.

In a short meeting Monday, Joe Lewandowski, manager of the Lincoln County Solid Waste Authority, assured the SWA board that other dumping sites will be created for the contractors.

Although no builders showed up at the SWA meeting, Lewandowski said County Commissioner Wilton Howell told him contractors were worried about their options. Lewandowski attended a commission meeting earlier this month to assure Howell that special containers will be placed around the county for builders to use. They also will be able to haul their debris to the transfer station on Gavilan Canyon Road in Ruidoso.

The SWA intends to buy a special grinder to reduce the debris to a manageable material. That equipment, along with recycling programs, should eliminate the need for the landfill, which now handles yard trash, construction debris and large appliances, Lewandowski said.

Tires can be stored on the land even after the landfill is closed, he said.

The SWA board, comprised of representatives from the county and its five municipalities, has asked Lewandowski to investigate a possible 1996 closing and to start the process in an attempt to avoid costly new federal financial requirements. Those requirements are scheduled to be imposed on small landfills such as Capitán within the next five years.

In other business, Dr. Bernie Reimann was elected as the new SWA board secretary and Monroy Montes, chairman of the county commission, was welcomed as the county's representative. He replaces Commissioner Bill Schwettmann.

Capitan student cheating policy debated

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The beleaguered disciplinary policy of the Capitan school board is under scrutiny again. Last fall, parents complained that the section on cheating was too lenient. The board responded by approving tougher punishment, but by the end of the school year other parents were yelling that the penalties were too stiff. Last Thursday, a committee of school officials and parents came back with a recommendation to drastically reduce the punishment. But several school board members said the committee went too far in the other direction and they favor a compromise of a three-day, out-of-school suspension for a first offense, six for the second and 10 for the third.

Step by step

second and 10 for the third, according to School Supt. Diana Sonnamaker Billingsley. When students are out of school, they receive zeros on any assignments that day and they cannot make up the work. The tougher punishment approved by the board for the 1994-95 school year required a five-day suspension for a first offense and expulsion for the second offense. But after several students were accused of cheating near the end of the school year, some parents had second thoughts. A committee formed to take another look brought back a recommendation for a one-day suspension on a first offense, three on the second and five on the third. Board member Tim Worrell noted last Thursday that the new proposal's punishment is less than the punishment for using profanity in the school hallway. High School Principal Darrel Stierwalt said committee members thought teachers would be less likely to enforce the policy with a five-day first offense suspension, because that could be devastating on a student's grade. "They felt it was a little more lenient, it may be enforced," he said. "I don't know if that would happen." Board member Russell Shearer worried about what would happen to students who are kicked out. "I don't think a student should be thrown out for cheating," Shearer said. "We're here to teach. Expulsion would be playing into (the student's) plan. He may want out. Give them punishment and appropriate justice. That's teaching them something. Throw him out and you've lost him. I know they throw out students who cheat in college, but this is the public school system." Jody Roberts, who ran unsuccessfully last year for a seat on the school board, said he disagreed. "A thief is a thief," he said, comparing cheating to stealing a grade. Board Member Freda McSwane said she doesn't want students to think they can cheat three times and still be in school. That's why she liked the idea of expulsion on the second offense. Worrell suggested posting the penalties for cheating in the school hallways, just as the state posts speeding violation fines at its Texas border. Another option would be to require the students to attend school on the suspension days, but not give them credit, Stierwalt said. That way they wouldn't fall behind in material covered by a teacher and they wouldn't be able to enjoy time away from school, he said. Another committee is looking at a separate policy to cover cheating on final examinations, Billingsley said. One student last year was not allowed to participate in his graduation ceremony after he admitted to cheating on a final exam. The board will consider adoption of the cheating portion of the discipline policy at its Aug. 10 meeting.

Dixon, a former Roswell police officer. Dixon and his daughter Kathy testified she called him around 6:30 a.m. immediately after the elk had been shot, and within 15 minutes he had contacted the district supervisor for the state game and fish department, Pat Barncastle. Barncastle did not testify at the trial and is away on vacation, Rhodes said. Dixon told the court that Barncastle said he would notify officer Moore about the shooting and that Morgan shouldn't worry about any penalty, because "most people don't turn themselves in when they do something wrong, anyways." Moore testified that he received a call about the elk shooting at 9 a.m. April 28 from his boss in Roswell. He arrived at the Morgans' house around 9:30 a.m., finding the "prime bull elk in velvet" alive and suffering with a broken back. Elks aren't normally aggressive or territorial, he told the court, but they become nuisances when learning that people are a food source. Moore said Morgan told him that he shot at the animal to scare it away at 6:30 a.m., but didn't realize he had hit it until 8:30 a.m., when he looked out back and saw it on the ground. Morgan disputed Moore's comments, saying he realized he hit it immediately and that his wife called her father immediately. Moore said upon his arrival at the Santa Anita Drive residence, he found the elk paralyzed in its hind quarters due to the bullet wound. The Morgans said they had heard their two daughters screaming the night before the shooting, and they went outside to confront the elk, which was about 15 feet from the playhouse. "It had its ears back, showing its teeth and snapping them," Kathy said. Morgan then grabbed a rock and threw it at the elk, hitting it in the head, he said. At that point, Kathy said, "It stomped, and turned around and bared its teeth at us." Morgan then grabbed a pellet gun which Kathy said he shot in the air four times to scare the animal away — noise which the couple said explained the testimony of neighbor Chris Connally, who testified to the sound of gunfire the night before. Connally testified the elk would run away when he tried to approach it, and it didn't appear aggressive. Morgan testified that the morning he shot the elk, he had done so after his wife attempted to scare it away by banging on the window. "I was going to shoot at the tree behind it," Morgan told the court. "He dropped immediately — I totally freaked out 'cause I didn't know what to do." Morgan said if he had wanted to shoot the animal he could have simply shot it in the woods and left it there, or he could have claimed someone else had shot it and it then fell wounded on his property. "If I hadn't of called it in, nothing would have happened," he said.

Livestock judging procedures scrutinized

by DON HIXON
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Agricultural teachers from across the state met this week at Ruidoso High School to discuss livestock and produce issues. The 55 teachers were attending the New Mexico Agricultural Education Teachers Inservice Seminar, Monday through yesterday. "We have an agenda full of important items," RHS Agricultural teacher Mike Gaines said.

With the New Mexico State Fair in Albuquerque scheduled for September, a major agenda item was livestock shows and judging procedures. The discussion centered around four major areas regarding unethical behavior at the shows: false ownership and identification, illegal drugs, physical alteration including physical abuse, and professional fitters (those who raise and groom an animal for show, claiming it was actually raised by a student).

False ownership
Lying about the true ownership of show animals will not be tolerated, officials agreed. "Even the seemingly harmless fudging about having an animal on feed on a certain date should not be tolerated," Texas agricultural extension agent Jeff Goodwin said. "If we teach students that it is acceptable to lie and not follow rules as youth, we pave the way for lying and not playing by the rules as adults."

Illegal drugs
Use of illegal drugs in livestock shows, especially usage of the drug clenbuterol, is an ongoing problem and one which must be addressed, Goodwin said.

Clenbuterol is used to build muscle mass in show animals and is illegal in the United States and food animals worldwide.

"There should be no tolerance and no second chances for those who dare to play this substance," he said. "Exhibitors who dare to use clenbuterol must receive swift and severe punishment."

Physical alteration
Practices like injecting vegetable oil under the skin and changing the color pattern of an animal is unethical, Goodwin said.

"There is a huge difference in showing an animal to the judge at its best visual advantage and engaging in deceit and deception," he said.

Fitters and groomers
Professional fitters and groomers, commonly called jocks, have been at the center of many incidents of unethical activity, Goodwin said. They are often the middleman in securing a livestock project animal and helping with its training and exhibition, he said.

"Do we really want turn-key projects for a students just to lead, hold or drive in a show ring?" Goodwin said. Goodwin's suggestions to address the issues included increased parental and teacher involvement, education about ethics in everyday life, and not ignoring unethical behavior.

Other agenda items
Other items on the conference agenda dealt with such topics as the vesicular stomatitis outbreak (a livestock disease affecting New Mexico), forestry judging, animal welfare, FFA award applications, nursery landscape judging, and entomology (the study of insects).

For more information about the agricultural programs available in the Lincoln County area, call Gaines at 258-4910.

The True Rainy Season
Arrives in the Mountain Land
The very welcome rains of late May and early July gave us a running start into the true mountain rainy season, which moved into the mountain land on the 16th. The earlier rains came in sudden showers lasting from 15 minutes to half an hour, accompanied by thunder, lightning and hail. The showers were scattered over the county. The true summer rains, on the other hand, are quiet, steady rains — often light — lasting most of a day, all day, or day and night, spread over a wide area. On the 16th, a slow, quiet, steady rain moved into the vale and kept falling off and on most of the day and some of the night — over the mountain, the Mescalero reservation and most of the rest of the county. The earlier hard showers, falling on the dry land, brought the land back to life. Yet much of it ran off into the arroyos and river. Not so with these recent rainfalls. Thanks to the slowness of the rain, and abundant new grass, every drop soaked into the ground, much to the joy of Mother Earth, who is all smiles today on the 17th.

The Kid thanked the Governor, but said, it was too late — if he went unarmed, his enemies would kill him. The Kid knew whereof he spoke. At a presentation of the Oscars for Motion Picture Excellence one year, the question came up of which movie had received the most Oscars. It turns out that the most successful motion picture of all time was Ben Hur, starring Charlton Heston, and adapted from a novel with the same title written by Lew Wallace, former governor of New Mexico. In closing, let us thank our Lord for the arrival of the rainy season and all our other blessings.

Allen, Becker resign positions at Capitan

Two of Capitan's shining instructional and coaching stars are leaving the district for different pastures, although one definitely is not greener in terms of vegetation.

Long-time volleyball/track coach Pam Allen, who consistently propelled her Capitan teams into state competition, is headed to Artesia. At Artesia, Allen will teach physical education at Zia Intermediate School, will coach the junior varsity volleyball team, and will assist with the Bulldog girls track and field program.

Supt. Diana Sonnemaker said the school district only has a few weeks to find a replacement. Allen joined the district in 1987, and has been teaching and coaching for 25 years.

While at Capitan, Allen's volleyball teams won seven of eight district championships and posted a 154-19 mark during her tenure. The Tigers won the state championship in 1988, and played in the state tournament seven of eight years. Twelve of her players played in the North-South All Star game. Her track teams won three consecutive state team championships, in addition to numerous state relay and individual titles. The Tigers captured the district title seven of eight years while Allen was their coach.

"It's not painless that I have made this decision to go on," Allen said. "I just feel that there was a need to make a move." Allen added she was in the "twilight" of her teaching and coaching career, and the amount of her contract with Artesia played a role in her decision to leave Capitan.

Ron Becker, head of the district's gifted program and boys basketball coach for the past three years, is realizing a dream shared with his wife, Gretchen, to live in Alaska. Both have been hired to teach in the Kenai school district. Kenai has a population of 6,350.

In a letter to the school board last Thursday, Becker wrote that the couple had been thinking about the move for some time.

Becker will teach social studies, U. S. history and world history, and coach boys basketball and assist with the girls basketball team.

"I've wanted to go there for 20 years," Becker said of Alaska. He described the job as a "window of opportunity" adding, "I need to seize the moment."

Becker's posted a 39-36 overall record, and his Tigers participated in the state tournament once in those three years.

"I feel good about what happened at Capitan. We established some sound foundations for the program and hopefully those will continue," Becker said.

The unwanted Run Em Up has quickly made a name for himself in his short racing career. The 2-year-old gelding was bypassed in the Ruidoso Yearling Sale, but has gone to win three of four starts.

Unheralded Run Em Up chases Rainbow Futurity

The rags to riches story of the talented 2-year-old quarter horse Run Em Up could take an even more incredible turn if the powerful gelding wins the Grade I $472,000 Rainbow Futurity, this Sunday at Ruidoso Downs.

The uniquely colored dun gelding went through the ring at last year's Ruidoso Yearling Sale without being purchased, but was eventually sold after some keen bargaining by trainer Tim Guidry.

In less than a year Run Em Up has gone from a virtually unwanted horse to one of the most highly regarded 2-year-olds in the nation.

Run Em Up has won three of four career starts including the Grade I West Texas-Sun Country Futurity at Sunland Park in April.

His only setback came in the Grade I Ruidoso Futurity Trials when he stumbled at the start and threw jockey Ken Hart.

The gelding made up for that escapade on July 6 with a victory in a division of the Rainbow Futurity Trials which qualified him to the 400-yard final with the third fastest time of 19.82.

His two-length domination of his trial foes should make him a strong choice to win the second jewel of the quarter horse triple crown.

Bred by Dr. Leon Scrutchfield, a veterinarian at Texas A&M University, Run Em Up was brought here last September for the Ruidoso Yearling Sale and failed to get the $5,000 minimum bid expected by his consignors.

Guidry, a trainer for 10 years, came to the sale and looked at Run Em Up. Run Em Up at the time was a colt, but Guidry did not think the horse was worth $5,000 because of the lack of racing experience on the female side of his pedigree. His sire, Runaway Winner, was a stakes winning earner of more than $350,000 who produced such 2-year-old greats as Deceptively and Treacherously, but his unraced dam Dance Em Up made the colt undesirable to many buyers.

"I went to the sale to look for a horse for the Segotta's (Don and Nelda Segotta of Springer) and liked this colt. I figured if he didn't run, he'd make a good roping horse or barrel racing horse," said Guidry, who was born in Lake Charles, La. but moved to Canadian, Texas as a teenager.

After the sale, Guidry went back to the stable area and saw a sign reading "For Sale" on Run Em Up's stall. Guidry struck a bargain with Scrutchfield giving $2,000 up front and $3,000 later if the horse ever earned any money on the track.

Scrutchfield agreed, but added a provision that he would also get

Rainbow week festivities start with seven live races

Thursday's racing card opens Rainbow Week at Ruidoso Downs, with four days of live racing action culminating on Sunday with the Grade I Rainbow Futurity.

The $541,200 Rainbow purse includes a winner's share of $194,687 and, as the second jewel of the Quarter Horse Triple Crown, is one of the most prestigious events of the Ruidoso Downs season. The $2 Million All American Futurity on Labor Day is the final gem in the trio. The Rainbow Consolation will be the marquee event on Saturday's card.

A field of nine older quarter horses will match strides over 350 yards in Thursday's $2,000 featured race, which will be the sixth of seven live events.

Kristens Dancer will try to capture her third straight win for trainer Bob Arnett in the weekday feature. The 7-year-old mare is undefeated since Arnett halted her out of a $3,200 claiming race at Albuquerque on June 25.

Dust of Diamonds is another top contender in the feature. A 4-year-old gelding owned by Gerald and Jerry Rogers and trained by Joel Marr, Dust of Diamonds has finished in the money in her last ten starts at Ruidoso and Sunland Parks.

In post position order the complete lineup for the feature reads as follows: Ryon N Roses (K. Hart 122); Precious Legacy (Estrada 117); Kristens Dancer (117); Babe Cannon (Madrid 114); Chrome N Brass (Roller 119); Master of the Wind (Danley 116); LHT Casady Bar (Cloud 119); Dust of Diamonds (Rodriguez 122); and Docs Kinky Girl (112).

The first race every day begins at 1:15 p.m. Ruidoso Downs also offers coast-to-coast simulcasting every day of the week, with Belmont Park beginning at 11:00 a.m. Other tracks featured on the simulcast venue include Arapahoe Park, Hollywood Park, Philadelphia

Park, Retama Park and Mexico City.

McArthur hopes to top dream day with trifecta

What are the chances of one trainer saddling the first three finishers in Sunday's Grade I Rainbow Futurity at Ruidoso Downs? 99-1? Astronomical? So high that even renown odds maker Roxy Roxborough would pass?

The answer to all three questions is 'yes.' But such a trifecta this Sunday is possible, if not probable.

James McArthur could accomplish the feat with three of the nine juveniles gunning for the $541,200 Rainbow pot of gold. The winner will take home $194,687 and the second jewel of the Quarter Horse Triple Crown which began with the Ruidoso Futurity in May and concludes with the $2 million All American Futurity on Labor Day.

But McArthur has never been afraid to go after his dreams. He already overcame phenomenal odds by qualifying three of the finalists from the 141 2-year-olds that ran in the Rainbow Trials July 6. He's also enjoying one of his best seasons in years, overcoming a slow start. He qualified Inouciance for the Rainbow Derby, and the sophomore also won an allowance test over a talented field last weekend.

Feet Down First posted the fastest Rainbow qualifying time of 19.78 over the 400 yards. She along with Winners Bash and Temerity Wrangler are all from the veteran conditioner's barn.

The 55-year-old native of El Paso sent out seven starters in the trials. In addition to his three finalists he saddled Dash-ing Polly, a qualifier for Saturday's Rainbow Consolation.

"I wouldn't say I was surprised that we did so well in the Trials," said McArthur from his barn. "We were as ready as we could be. I had a gut instinct that my horses would run well by what they had shown me from working with them.

"They've all got a good head, good conformation, a good eye and a good mind. They'd also shown lots and lots of talent beforehand," added McArthur, who broke the trio at the training track on his Elgin, Texas farm last winter.

He helped owners Charlie and Dixie Patterson select Feet Down First and Temerity Wrangler from the Ruidoso Sale last fall. Winners Dash was bred by her owner Jerry Windham.

"Most of my career I've always gone for the Futurities," he said. "It's not the brainiest thing to do, but it's what I enjoy."

He has achieved considerable success sticking to that goal. He is one of the few trainers who has trained two All American Winners. His first was Easy Date in 1974, the same year he met his wife, Donna, who is a trainer at Sam Houston Park in Houston. Ten years later he was back again with Eastex.

"I always said I'd win the All American," McArthur said with a smile. He trained in California for more than 20 years before he returning to Texas to establish his home in Elgin and spend summers at Ruidoso.

"In 1972 I brought my first horse over here from California. They laughed at me. Everyone was telling me how tough it was to even qualify a horse for the All American," McArthur recalled. "But I flew Pocket TV over, and he ended up winning the First Consolation. After that I said I'd be back and win the All American."

"The first thing I look for in a horse is an intelligent eye," McArthur said. "If they don't have that, nothing else matters." McArthur took his cues on selecting horses from Calvin Mims, the conditioner he worked under at Los Alamitos before he got his first trainer's license in 1966.

"Nineteen sixty-three was the year I got the bug to come to the racetrack," said McArthur, who majored in Animal Husbandry at Fresno State University.

"I'd been working at a farm breaking colts and prepping horses for the racetrack with a friend of mine while I was in college," he said. "I took the job on the condition that I could still compete in rodeos on the weekend."

Bareback riding was his forte, an event he says makes "breaking yearlings a piece of cake."

After nearly three decades as a trainer, McArthur considers himself fortunate to have the same enthusiasm as he had when he was 16 years old and took his first show steer to the Cow Palace in San Francisco.

"Back then taking a steer to the Cow Palace was like winning the All American," he said. "When I got there I told myself I was going to win it."

"The judge told me I over-showed a little bit," he recalled. "But all my life I've been like that. I've always been extremely enthusiastic."

What can railbirds expect from his Rainbow trio on Sunday?

"Well, we've got the horses," he said. "Now all I need is a little luck."

"When Dr. Scrutfield added the 10% provision, I said 'I hope I have to give you lots of money,'" Guidry said.

Owned by a partnership which includes Guidry's wife Susan and her mother, Margaret Musso, of Pueblo, Colo., as well as the Segotta's, Run Em Up has turned into a wise investment.

Run Em Up has now earned just

"Tim and I believed in him from the start and it's a blessing," said Susan Guidry when asked about Run Em Up's phenomenal campaign. "We've spent a lot of hours in the barn with him and it had definitely been worth it."

Although the horse cannot share in the fun of spending the money he

Christmas in July Saturday

Episcopal Church of the Holy Mount in Ruidoso will have its annual Christmas in July Bazaar beginning at 9 a.m. on Saturday, July 22.

The bazaar will feature food booths selling homemade jams, jellies, pickles, vinegar, sauces, homemade baked goods, toffee, and the church's famous Episco-Pasta.

The Episco-Pasta is handmade by church members and is available in 11 varieties, including Heavenly Herbs, Spiritual Spinach, Divine Dill and Gabriel's Garlic.

"The pasta is one of our most popular items," church member and pasta maker Terri Flores said.

One person's trash is another's treasure, and bargain hunters attending the bazaar are bound to find something to take home at the bazaar's day-long White Elephant Sale.

"We always have a great turnout for the White Elephant sale," Flores said.

From 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., lunch will be served at the event. Tickets for the lunch are $5.50 for adults and $3.50 for children under 12. The lunch will consist of Sicilian

Western Swing topic of lecture

A lively discussion entitled "Western Swing, Music of Big Bands from the Land of the Open Skies" will be led by an eclectic expert this Saturday, at the Museum of the Horse.

Lecturer John Feldman has a masters degree and rabbinic ordination from Hebrew Union College. He's also a lawyer with a juris doctor degree from the University of New Mexico. In his spare time, he is a consultant, lecturer, and steel guitarist. He has played music with various bands and accompanied the legendary Hank Thompson.

The 7 p.m. program is free and everyone is invited.

Western Swing is a music form that grew out of cowboy, New Orleans jazz, Big Band and Southern white and black traditions. The swing sound flourished in the American Southwest from the 1930s through the 1950s.

Feldman shows how the innovations of the legendary Bob Wills continue to influence commercial country music today.

Feldman's lecture is sponsored by the New Mexico Endowment for the Humanities Speakers Bureau.

LIVING ON LESS
 5 WAYS TO CUT

HOUSEHOLD EXPENSES

1. Use the 24-hour rule. If you have your eye on an item that's $100 or more - wait 24 hours before buying it. You'll probably make a smarter decision.
2. Stop at stores that will refund the difference if an item goes on sale after you buy it. Usually, the time limit is 30 days after your purchase. Remember to keep your receipt.
3. Buy from the floor. Look to buy display models of furniture and appliances - and ask for a discount. Items that require assembly can also help you cut costs.
4. Share and save. For example buy a lawnmower with your neighbor and share it.
5. Carry less cash and plastic. Unless you're traveling or making planned purchases, leave your cash and credit cards at home. This will reduce your chance of impulse buying.

LINCOLN COUNTY SCRAPBOOK

A glimpse into Lincoln County's past, compiled by Polly E. Chavez with excerpts from "A History of Lincoln County Post Offices."

Ruidoso

Frank Leaset was Ruidoso's first postmaster in 1882 in a building across from the Old Down Mill. Leaset sold pigs, grain and various products to increase his earnings. The Leasets moved the office to the still-standing Old Down Mill, where they lived upstairs. Postmaster Prude moved the office into a building on Highway 70. During this time the mail was brought from Fort Stanton by stagecoach or pony express. Isaac N. Wingfield, who became postmaster in 1921, was the son of Charles Wingfield, the third postmaster. During his term the post office was moved to upper Ruidoso across from the Wingfield home. Wingfield rode horseback to and from Fort Stanton to get the mail. In 1937 there were 12 postal boxes. The box use in 1994 was nearly 6,000.

The other two stars of the triangle are Deneb to Vega's lower left and Altair to Vega's lower right. Hold your fist out at arm's length from Vega, and Altair is about three-fifths the way down. Vega, Deneb, and Altair are the leading lights of the constellations Lyra, the Lyra, Cygnus the Swan and Aquila the Eagle, respectively.

Witnesses, who arrived at an accident late Sunday night before emergency personnel, try to help three teenagers get out of a vehicle that had flipped over on Sudderth Drive in Ruidoso. The teens escaped serious injury in the accident.

Three Ruidoso teenagers escape serious injury during rollover

Three Ruidoso teenagers escaped serious injury after their speeding car hit a phone pole, skidded about 266 feet, and flipped over on Sudderth Drive Sunday night.

Michael Jacques, 18, the driver of the 1979 Chevy, was taken to the hospital complaining of pain in his head, but was later released.

One of his male passengers, a 15-year-old, received treatment at the hospital for a broken collarbone. Police said the other passenger, a 17-year-old male, fell in and out of consciousness after the crash, but was also released that night from the hospital.

Police said Jacques claimed to have been traveling about 40 mph, but witnesses to the accident told police the car was racing west on Sudderth Drive.

Jacques apparently negotiated the curve near the Ruidoso State Bank, hit his brakes, sideswiped a telephone pole and completely flipped over before landing right side up near the Park Avenue area, police said.

Police have not filed charges in the accident.

Wildland firefighting taught

by YVONNE LANELLI
The News Correspondent

If you saw smoke in the trees as you drove down the highway, what would you do?

Fifteen members of area fire departments found out last weekend in a unique class held at the Bonito Fire Station in Alto.

Volunteer firefighters from Bonito, Carrizozo, Fort Stanton and Tularosa fire departments as well as the New Mexico State Forestry (NMSF) took the basic wildland firefighting course taught by NMSF. They learned how to size up a wildland fire, attack it and keep themselves and fellow firefighters safe.

"This is basic stuff," emphasized Bill Rogge, fire management officer for the Capitan District of State Forestry. He teaches Introduction to Wildland Firefighting for Rural Fire Departments throughout the seven counties that comprise his district. Specific topics in the 12-hour course included fire behavior, locating the fire, size up, suppression, mop up, prevention, safety and terminology.

Learning wildland fire techniques is essential for local firefighters whose districts encompass residences and businesses surrounded by forest or grasslands. This is called the wildland/urban interface. Fires in the wildland/urban interface often involve structures and human lives, as well as large areas of forest or grasslands. Techniques and terminology taught in this class are used by all fire suppressors. Commonality is important in a county that depends upon mutual aid among local fire departments, the U.S. Forest Service, NMSF, Bureau of Land Management and other agencies.

"Everyone must be trained the same way," Rogge said.

Firefighters expressed their satisfaction with the course for which they gave up their weekend.

"Rural fire departments are now becoming more involved in wildland fire suppression. Our foremost objective is safety, which this training emphasizes," said Mark Stambaugh, deputy chief of Bonito.

Council plans for hospitality fair

by DON HIXON
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

The Lincoln County Tourism Council adopted a mission statement Monday and laid out plans for one of its biggest annual events.

Sixteen people attended the meeting at the Museum of the Horse in Ruidoso Downs.

"The mission statement for the Lincoln County Tourism Council is to promote tourism awareness in Lincoln County among its residents and visitors," council chairperson Virginia Jones said.

The council set the date for the Lincoln County Hospitality Fair and Exposition for Thursday, April 18, 1996 at the Glencoe Rural Events Center.

The fair will feature two separate programs, Jones said. The early day program will be geared toward schoolchildren with live demonstrations of sheep shearing, weaving, horsehoing and artist demonstrations, she said.

"We'll have lots of live history, Jones said. "Whatever appeals to the kids."

Students will be served a chuckwagon style lunch, she said.

The fair will continue in the afternoon by shifting gears to appeal to the business community.

"We'll continue some of the demonstrations, plus have business displays and representation from the various chamber entities in Lincoln County," she said.

The fair will also be the host of the April 1996 Business After Hours meeting, a monthly networking event sponsored by the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce.

The next Lincoln County Tourism Council meeting will be from 10 a.m. to noon Monday, Aug. 21 at the San Patricio Senior Center.

For more information contact Jones at 354-2316.

Public's comments on printing juveniles' names helpful to us

A while back, we asked people if they think we should print the names of juveniles charged or convicted of crimes. Our current policy is to print those names only if the crime was extremely violent, or if a deadly weapon was used.

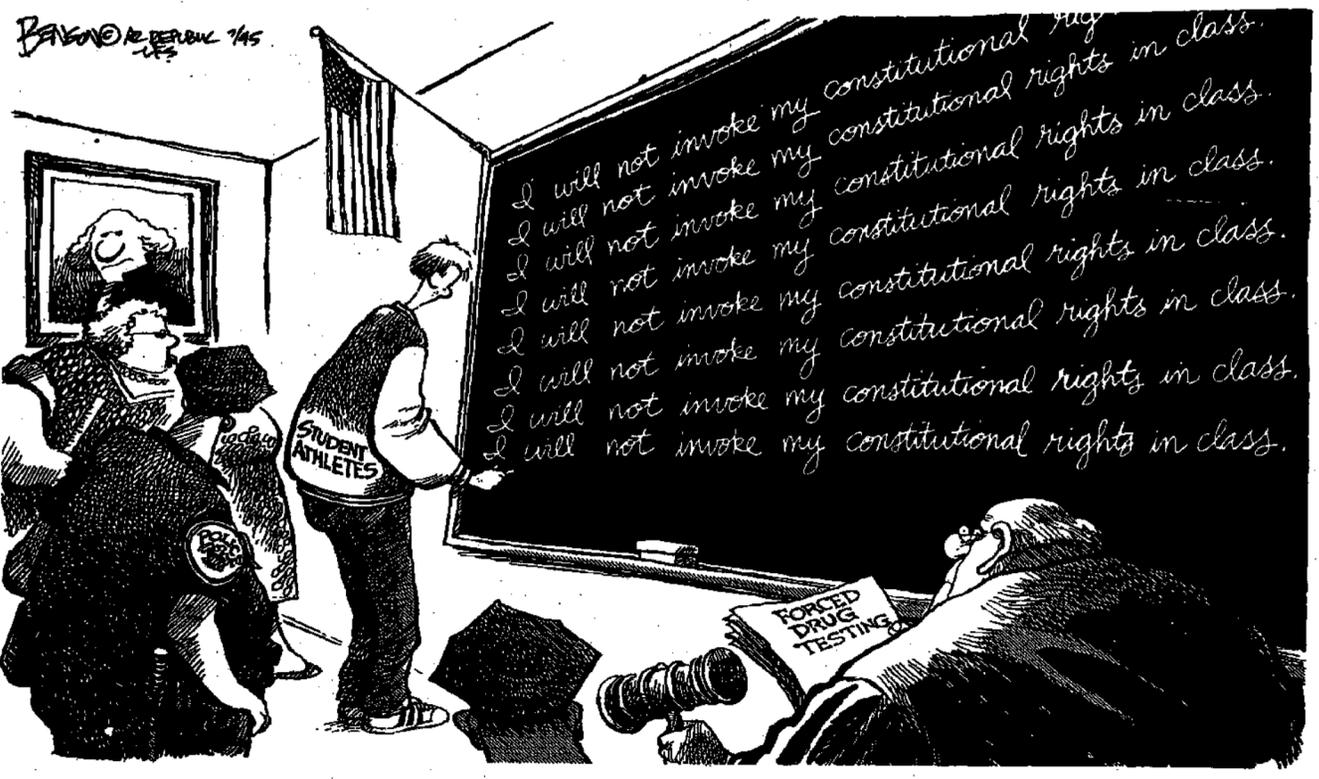

The majority of callers said we shouldn't change our policy.

Some callers noted that, in a small town, the juveniles could suffer more than necessary if their names are public knowledge. Some worried that, if we print the names of juveniles when they are charged, they could later be found not guilty, so they could be ostracized unfairly. Some thought the juveniles might continue committing crimes if their names are printed, thinking it's too late to help themselves. Others simply stated that our current policy seems to be working just fine.

Of those who wanted the names printed, some said juveniles may be more responsible for their actions if they have such a consequence.

We appreciate people offering their opinions, because brainstorming in this way can help us understand the issues.

For now, we'll stick with our current policy. It gives juveniles a chance to redeem themselves without being labeled community-wide as troublemakers.

Kudos to police, fire department, ambulance crew

TO THE EDITOR:

We wish to compliment the Ruidoso Police Department, namely Officer Sabo. He investigated a traffic accident in which we were involved. His professionalism and dedication to duty in handling the situation was exemplary.

Also, we wish to compliment the ambulance crew and Ruidoso Fire Department. They all were very helpful and assisted the Turners (local residents of Ruidoso) in transport to the hospital.

Thank you very much.

Overgrazing isn't cause of forest fires

TO THE EDITOR:

A Roswell paper printed an article about "Grazing causes fires" recently.

The article goes on to say environmental groups want the U.S. Forest Service to consider shrinking the numbers of cattle grazing on forest land as a way to reduce catastrophic wildfires. Dennis Morgan, research associate for the Southwest Center for Biological Diversity in Silver City, a coalition member, says that scientific evidence is clear: "Overgrazing is the number one cause of poor forest health and increased fire potential in the southwest"

Such a statement is in keeping with Babbitt's contention that the rancher is on his last legs, he will be phased out in another generation.

What every good rancher knows is that in order to be successful it is necessary to be an excellent environmentalist, and the grade A ranchers were also grade A environmentalists. When the national forests were cut up into individual allotments, the ranchers immediately raised their calf weights to almost perfection, as well as percentage of calf crops. As well as deferred grazing, which protected our lands from overgrazing, and developed the waters needed. The identical procedure was followed on BLM lands.

In one generation we saw our percentage of calf crop go from 85% to above 90%, and weights from 345 pounds to 400 pounds. We went a step further in our operations. We personally installed a central weighing station at our ranch, and all our neighbors for 17 long years put $5 per head sold in their pockets from savings on shrinkage, and we let them weigh for free. We had the finest cattle deal in New Mexico, and our ranges were kept in A-1 condition. And something else: our wild game followed our herds when we moved from one pasture to another. They fully enjoyed the salt and waters just as our livestock did.

When you have lived your life that began on the open range, followed by individual allotments, and deferred grazing along with proper water development, finalized by a central weighing station and sales, you appreciate the livestock business.

Now comes experts with book knowledge only, who if given a free hand will not only set our wonderful country back a generation, but will most certainly destroy our forests. They are well on their way right now. Wander through our forests today. They are a disgrace to the American way of life, and will soon disappear thanks to our know-nothing experts who have never had their noses out of a book.

At the earliest possible moment we should take every able-bodied prisoner and put them to work cleaning up our forests. Don't mention to the people recently burned out near San Diego that overgrazing was the cause. Any idiot could see it was "undergrazing" that ruined them. We are going down the same path, I'm sorry to say. Wake up America!

Ruidoso streets are bigger problem than sidewalks

TO THE EDITOR:

I know that everyone who reads The Ruidoso News is sick of hearing about our sidewalk problems. Why not mention the condition of our streets?

Have you driven down Gavilan Canyon Road after dark lately or Paradise Canyon, or Highway 48 through Alto? Most of these streets and many others have no center stripes to separate the lanes. These are high traffic areas. This is not just a problem for tourists. Locals who know the roads well have trouble staying in their lanes.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I have seen a dozen or more cars veer off the road onto the dirt and gravel shoulders to avoid oncoming traffic, or just because they simply couldn't see the side of the road. Why are there no lane-dividing lines and white shoulder stripes? Most of Gavilan and Highway 48 is pitch dark with sharp turns. When it is raining, it's impossible to tell the road from the shoulder.

If our highway department is so concerned with saving lives, why not spend a few dollars on life-saving paint and stop holding us working folks up in mock road-blocks?

Sidewalk safety part of equation with skateboards

TO THE EDITOR:

At last someone has begun to think of the safety factor in the debate over whether to let the young people skateboard and roller blade in the downtown area. I believe that the young people of today are smart and reasonable and, generally speaking, they can think things through.

The first time that one of the tourists or locals, old or young, is injured by one of these contraptions, there will be a lawsuit. Now if the city gets sued, I am sure that the parent of the young person could possibly be sued also. We cannot sue the young person, but if the parents go under judgment it might just cause a lessening of the cash the young person can extract from the parent.

Now let us think about the injuries that the young skateboarder or roller blader might sustain if they had an accident. Come on, guys, things like that do happen. Just think about the skateboarder who hit a car just the other day.

I don't think that considering the safety factor is evidence that we are against the young people. We are trying to help them by keeping them all in one piece. We still have to think of the comfort of all concerned.

Our young people want to be considered as adults, let them start thinking as adults. Adults are not exempting the young from things to do. We have to consider the safety of all.

To the Editor:

I went to one of the best fireworks displays on Ms. Spencer's land, I have seen since I went to Capitan and Fort Stanton. I like the 4th of July and I am glad Ms. Spencer likes it too. I made my 4th of July memorable. She is a nice lady. Tomorrow my dad is going to Roswell to attend a gathering to honor those who died in wild fires last year at this time. God Bless America.

by KATHLEEN McDONALD
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

David Gill's award-winning photographs of flowers shimmer with light and movement, thanks to a technique he developed five years ago.

"I use distorted glass and refracted light that causes the photos to look like impressionistic paintings," Gill says.

The colorful images he produces will be brought to the 24th annual Ruidoso Art Festival — a festival where he has been a top 10 winner for the past two years.

"I use distorted glass and refracted light that causes the photos to look like impressionistic paintings."

PHOTOGRAPHER

Gill, who lives and works in Lawton, Okla., used to focus his Pentax 6X7 (a medium format camera) on landscapes with black and white film. But in 1990, he felt the need for a change.

"I just needed a break, and happened to be in a store that had the glass plate in it. I put my hand behind it and saw the possibilities."

Now he regularly utilizes refracted light and strobes inside his studio, producing moving images of blossoms saturated with life. He also continues to do portraits using black and white film.

Gill, 46, picked up his first camera in 1972 when in Korea. He was there for a year while in the Army, after graduating from college with a bachelor's in mathematics.

"Korea was the place to buy things like cameras and stereos," Gill relates, but "I really don't recall how I got into taking photographs."

Nevertheless, by the early 1980s Gill became immersed in taking pictures, finding the medium to be compelling and satisfying. It was also a nice antidote to his job as an insurance adjuster, work he hated.

Although self-taught, Gill recognized a need to evolve in the craft with instruction from noted professionals, so he engaged in studies with some of this country's best.

Among those talents are: urban landscape photographer Douglas Kent Hall of Taos; Linda Conner, who shoots antique religious sites all over the world; Jerry Uelsmann, who practices multiple negative printing, and Martha Casanave, a portraitist who also hand colors black and white photographs.

Gaining in confidence and talent, Gill acknowledged that photography was his true vocation, and opened a business in 1986 with a studio and darkroom.

"I actually like my job," he says with a chuckle.

Gill's wife Kris began framing his work and they enlarged the business in 1987 to "Gill's Custom Framing and Photolab." Kris frames all the images he photographs and prints them.

Among his first awards were "Best of Show" at the Junefest in Purcell, Okla. in 1989, and "Grand Award" in 1990 at the Oklahoma Centerfold in Lawton.

Some of his most distinguished awards are the 1992 "Artist of the Year" which he won from the Lawton Arts and Humanities Board, and the "1992 Award of Excellence, All Media" from the Okla. Visual Artist Coalition.

Gill regularly carries about 60 to 70 of his works to the 15 art exhibitions he attends annually. The shows are mostly in the central and southwestern U.S. His works range in price from $40 to $500.

Although Gill takes countless rolls of photos each year using negatives of 2 1/4 by 2 3/4, he says he rarely decides to print one as part of his portfolio.

"When I first began doing this, it was pretty easy for me to keep coming up with new images," he says. "Now I have difficulty keeping them from looking the same."

"I just needed a break, and happened to be in a store that had the glass plate in it. I put my hand behind it and saw the possibilities."

PHOTOGRAPHER

Those he chooses to print offer new dimensions and insights into his ever-present subject — flowers.

Although he once thought he may grow weary of his subject and his photographic technique, he hasn't. Yet Gill does intend to tinker with new approaches.

"I'll probably experiment with the same type of image but with a different process," Gill says. "I will continue with the glass refracted image — I like the feel of that."

"But instead of using photographic paper, I want to get images on water-color paper. That will be the process I will probably pursue."

Spontaneity important to top festival jeweler

by LAURA CLYMER
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Steve Kriechbaum firmly believes "an artist should not stay stagnant." The Texas artist best expresses this philosophy in his unique, three-dimensional jewelry designs.

"I do not have cookie-cutter rings," Kriechbaum said, explaining his interest is in continually changing styles as a way to stretch and grow artistically.

He does have some limited production and molded pieces, but prefers to work spontaneously sometimes without even sketching a design first.

"I start right in on a piece and let the piece dictate the direction," Kriechbaum said. "That freedom allows me to be really creative."

Since he tries to avoid repeating designs, Kriechbaum admitted he's a better artist than a businessman.

"I would rather sacrifice money, and do what I want to do," said Kriechbaum, who has his studio in Austin, Texas.

Kriechbaum said he is looking forward to his eighth appearance at the 24th annual Ruidoso Art Festival as an opportunity to escape the Austin heat and show off his jewelry. Last year he was a top 10 artist at the Ruidoso show, and he has enjoyed similar success at art shows in Beaumont and Austin this year.

The 44-year-old Kriechbaum has been tinkering with jewelry since he was 14 years old. The El Paso native attended the University of Texas at El Paso where he studied fine art. But UTEP's art department offered only two jewelry-making classes. Kriechbaum took both courses, and then taught himself advanced techniques by reading books and by trial and error.

While at UTEP, Kriechbaum spent a majority of his studio hours sculpting, an influence reflected in his current work. Kriechbaum often casts three, four and five pieces together for a ring.

He describes himself as a three-dimensional person who still enjoys sculpture and likes to build boxes and other objects.

Kriechbaum believes his one-of-a-kind designs and his attention to fine details are the reason customers come back for additional pieces. The finishing of a piece of jewelry will make or break the design, Kriechbaum said, and patience is required to see that process through.

What are some signs of an "unfinished" piece? Kriechbaum said flat surfaces should be sanded in sequence before polishing, and all the gemstones should be set on the same level. Every piece should be soldered well, and there should be no "pits" or "waves" in the surface.

Steve Kriechbaum

This is especially true when working with platinum, one of Kriechbaum's favorite metals to use. The silvery-colored platinum, Kriechbaum noted, was the preferred metal of choice for jewelry before it became a "strategic" metal used in electronics just prior to World War II. Platinum is difficult to mine, which also limited the supply from South Africa, Kriechbaum explained. White gold then emerged as a jewelry metal when platinum became scarce.

But the metal has made a comeback; Kriechbaum calls it a "renaissance of platinum." He is using the metal again because of its durability, among other things.

"The beauty of it is that it outlasts gold twice as long," Kriechbaum said. "You can use less metal and get the same effect."

Kriechbaum works mostly with 14 and 18 karat gold and platinum. Rings make up the bulk of his work, but he does produce some earrings and pendants.

"I like to feature a colored gem accented by other colored gems or diamonds," Kriechbaum said.

As an artist, what's most important to Kriechbaum?

"Craftsmanship should be throughout the entire piece, a whole concept," he answered. "It must be comfortable and still make a statement."

"I believe my jewelry designs work with the natural beauty of the human form. My jewelry has depth and versatility of design to span the test of time."

Fain returns after top award

by DIANNE STALLINGS
Ruidoso News Staff Writer

Progressing from pencil drawing that dominated her youth, Melanie Fain turned to etching accented with watercolor to bring home top art awards.

Last year, she captured her first Best of Show at the Ruidoso Art Festival, after entering the show the past four or five years. She plans to be back this year for the 24th annual show staged at the Ruidoso Civic Events Center.

Although the 36-year-old artist drew as a child, her main interest centered on veterinary science. However, after attending Texas A&M for a few years, she decided that art was the stronger calling.

"I do a lot of game birds, dogs and other animals," said Fain from her Boerne, Texas studio. "I also do botanicals, because they're so colorful."

Fain's etchings were used to illustrate the Texas Game and Warden magazine and the Kleberg County Birder's Guide.

She started pursuing a full-time career in art in 1982. The early emphasis was in graphic art.

"I've always been drawn to details with pencil work and I found I was the most attracted to black and white pencil drawings," Fain said.

To leap into more profitable, but still affordable art, she learned to etch, then added watercolor.

"Etching is a time-consuming media, very tedious," she said.

Introduced in the 1500s in Germany and Holland to create decorative designs in metal armor, the process of acid etching an image into a copper plate etching is both a reproductive process and original art that involves the artist at multiple steps. Decisions include the depth of each line, which will translate into the darkness of the ink on paper.

Fain pulls a limited number of prints. Because she individually hand paints each etching, they become one-of-a-kind and allow subtle coloring only available in originals.

"With etching, I have found color is far more attractive than just the sepia tones," she said. "It makes my pieces more unique. So I go back and hand paint."

She described her work as realistic vignettes of subjects, attempting to capture the essence in a single way, focusing on the subject matter to show off its character.

Fain has shifted her base of operation to different parts of Texas, exposing her to more varied subject matter.

She credits her win last year to a new approach in presenting the etching and the original copper plate together.

"I had so many requests for the plate itself, I took the copper plate and framed it together with the etching," she said. "The copper plate mounted is art itself."

Recently, Fain has created some very individual pieces for fly fishermen.

"I take the fisherman's favorite fly and do an etching," she said. "Sometimes, I mount the actual fly with the copper plate and the etching. It becomes a very personal piece for the buyer. It's been something fun to do."

Her art continues to evolve, Fain said. While she will move ahead with producing the one-of-a-kind compositions, she also plans a foray into sculpture as a new means of expression.

Fain has gathered collectors over the years, but still exhibits in selected shows across the country, such as the Southeastern Wildlife Exposition in Charleston, S.C. She was the feature artist for the exposition gallery in 1991.

She has been selected to exhibit in many juried and museum shows, including The Plaza Art Fair in Kansas City and the Laguna Gloria Fiesta in Austin. She has won three awards for Outstanding Exhibitor and Gallery of

Melanie Fain

Honor from the Wichita Falls Museum & Art Center.

The Kennedy Memorial Foundation is listed among her collectors.

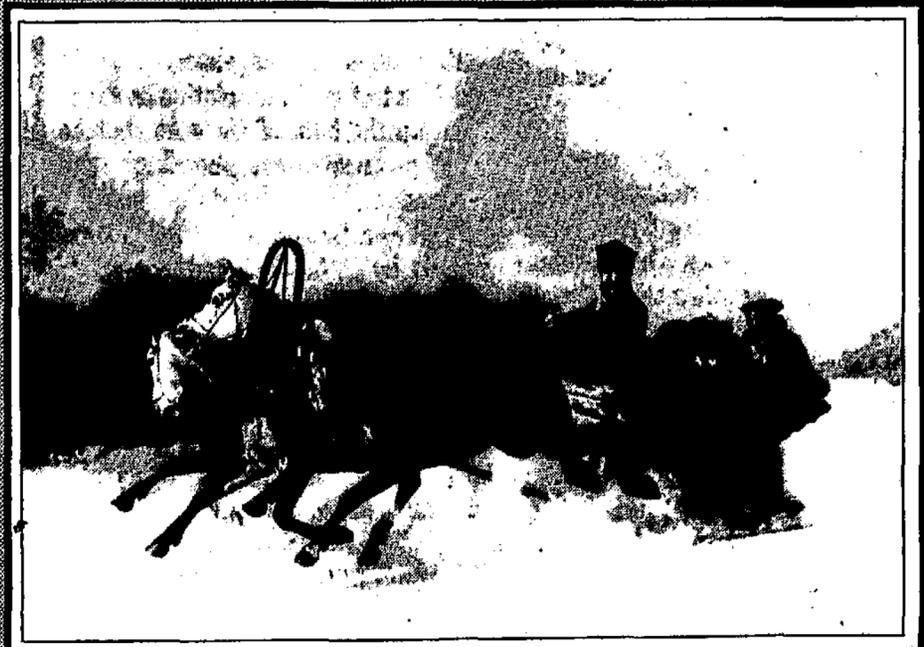

Many of her commissioned works were ordered after her art was seen at shows, but she also exhibits in galleries throughout Texas and has her own catalogue.

A master of photography and pottery

by JUNG WHA YOON
Ruidoso News Intern

Fred Hanselmann has been an artist for 25 years, and during that quarter century he has become accomplished in two completely different art forms.

Hanselmann was chosen as one of the top 10 artists in the 1994 Ruidoso Art Festival for his landscape photography.

Before he got into photography, he was a potter for 10 years, from 1970 to 1980. He and his wife managed a large production, selling to more than 300 galleries nationwide and in their own gallery in Albuquerque.

In 1980, Hanselmann turned to an art form he had long wanted to practice.

"Photography is what I've always really loved," Hanselmann said.

The pottery business had become such a large business venture that it got to be too much after a while. Hanselmann explained he didn't go into photography from the beginning because, if he had, he probably would have starved to death.

Hanselmann studied under photographer Bill Lucas, a professor at the University of New Mexico. He started with black and white and progressed into color.

Hanselmann came into his own when he turned to large format color photography in 1988. In large format photography, a large format camera is used and the negatives are 4x5 inches. Photographs from these larger negatives have a lot more clarity and sharpness, and have better tonality and colors, Hanselmann said.

In the last seven years, Hanselmann has gained success at art shows with his Rocky Mountain and Southwestern landscapes.

"Recently, I'm moving a little bit out of traditional landscape," Hanselmann added.

For his next subjects, Hanselmann has been thinking of shooting old homes and buildings in a way that conveys a lot of emotion.

"In one of my photographs, there is a single little church out in the middle of this really rugged landscape with a boiling storm cloud over it," Hanselmann said.

For now, he is concentrating on traditional landscapes.

His photographs never have people in them.

"I try to go beyond the subject matter. My photographs are pictures of the natural world that communicate or symbolize or portray human emotions and feelings," Hanselmann said.

Hanselmann has always been moved by nature and the West — mountains, rivers, forests. He is partial to aspens turning colors, moving water and, more recently, abandoned houses and churches.

What Hanselmann really looks for, though, is light. Good, strong light, dramatic morning light, evening light, strong shadows and light that is out of the ordinary.

Hanselmann feels he is different from other photographers in that he works in large format photography. He also does all his own printing. He feels he has a pretty good eye for composition.

"I like composition. My photographs, I think, are very well composed. They are really studied and very precise. They are never real loose and spontaneous," Hanselmann said.

Last week, Hanselmann was approached by a large gallery in Vail that wanted to sell his photographs. He refused.

Most galleries today are either quick and dirty places that move a lot of stuff at low prices, or they move a lot of stuff at extremely inflated prices, Hanselmann observed.

Fred Hanselmann

"I don't think you need to sell a photograph for $4,000. I don't think that is what photography is about," Hanselmann said.

He also refused the offer because he likes personal contact with buyers.

"I get a lot of enjoyment out of selling pictures that are important to me that I've made carefully, to people I know will enjoy them," Hanselmann said.

Hanselmann sells his photographs in numbered, limited editions that range in price from $28 to $800.

Being colorblind doesn't stop Stephens

by JUNG WHA YOON
Ruidoso News Intern

Virgil C. Stephens, one of the top 10 artists in the 1994 Ruidoso Art Festival, is evidence that formal education is not always necessary for a person to become a successful artist.

Stephens does regret not having had the chance to learn "colors." He is colorblind. This wasn't a problem when he was concentrating on standard pencils, but since he moved into colored pencils, pastels and oils, he needs to use the color wheel.

"I have to study that color wheel in order to see what other people are seeing," Stephens said.

He's mastered the color wheel and furthered his knowledge by reading books and asking a lot of artists questions. But mostly, he has grown by looking at art he thought was really good and saying to himself, "How did he do that?"

"I then went home and tried my hand at it," Stephens said.

Stephens was born in Globe, Ariz., and raised as a cowboy. His father was a cowboy and that was what Stephens wanted to be. There was no money in it, though, so Stephens went to work for a copper mine right out of high school.

When the copper mine closed its doors, Stephens worked at a sign painting shop. He became a journeyman.

During his free time, Stephens visited an art show and thought, "I could do that." He had been drawing for his own pleasure since he was young.

In between sign jobs and during the weekends, he acquired pencils, paints and brushes and began drawing.

He met his future wife and business partner, Emily, at this point.

"Emily had studied art in college and she thought the next best thing was to be married to an artist," Stephens said.

Emily encouraged Stephens to become a full-time artist. That was eight years ago.

After starting out as a pencil artist, he has moved into color pencils, pastels, oils and even bronze sculptures.

Stephens describes his work as ultra realism, real realism.

"You can see the whiskers on a cowboy's face even when the face is only as big as a dime on my canvas. You can see the very wrinkles," Stephens said.

He uses a camera to recreate every nook and cranny and wrinkle.

Many of his drawings have humorous, Western settings and have children as subjects. Since he has four children, it seemed a logical choice.

He also does a lot of wildlife and hunting scenes.

Many of his drawings are cute and nostalgic in a humorous way because that's what sells, according to Stephens. Even a drawing that depicts a non-humorous subject might have a tiny, cute critter running across the bottom of the canvas.

"If I had my way, though, I would draw strictly hard-core cowboy," Stephens said. That's what he knows best.

He describes one of his drawings.

"This cowboy is riding up on an old rangy horse, a real cowpony that hasn't been washed down or had its hooves shined, and he's working cattle. He's got a cow that's decided to take her calf into this bush, and she ain't coming out. So he's got to get them out of there.

"Now the only people who appreciate that is a hard-core cowboy, because nobody sees that. Now I got a real problem here, because they ain't buying the drawings. Cowboys don't have money," Stephens said.

Stephens says the highest compliment he gets is when a cowboy he has drawn comes up to his work and says, "Hey, that's me!"

The second highest compliment is when someone says, "I'll buy that."

So Stephens has to keep his hard-core cowboy drawings to a minimum and draw what people want, to make a living.

Stephens has recently begun work on bronzes. His first two are works in realism, but his latest is his first step out of the norm and into what he calls "stylized art."

"You can tell what it is, but it's not realism," Stephens explained.

He put his calipers and scale drawings and all his thoughts on sculpture away, and just let his hands do what his mind told them to do.

"It's the first time I've ever done that and I'm really happy with it. I want to do more," Stephens said.

Stephens doesn't foresee any major changes in his work at present. In fact, he is currently in "limbo." He isn't a bit bored because of all the mediums he is working in now.

Stephens' pencil, color pencil and pastel originals range from $250 to $4,000, while his pencil prints run $10-$100. His bronzes range from $1,500 to $4,000.

Ruidoso potter inspired by surroundings

by DON HIXON

Ruidoso News Staff Writer

New Mexico's natural beauty is the inspiration for potter and Top 10 Ruidoso Art Festival winner Tim Wierwille.

"The environment and the mountains are a continual source of inspiration for my work," he said. "New Mexico's larger-than-life environment helps me attune to the mystery and beauty of Mother Earth."

Wierwille, who has been making pottery for 22 years, took an elective course in pottery when he was a student at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. That's when his fascination with creating useful and beautiful objects from clay began. He graduated from the university with a bachelor's in history but never lost his love of crafting pottery.

"There is a certain exchange of energy in bringing a lump of clay to a place where others can use and appreciate it," Wierwille said. "That energy touches something in me."

The right place and time

Wierwille was in the right place at the right time in the early 1970s, when Santa Fe master potter Frank Willett was searching for an apprentice.

"Frank is now about 70 years old and has scaled back his operation considerably," Wierwille said. "The only Willett pieces I have are for my private collection and are unavailable for sale."

Willett trained Wierwille in pottery techniques for four years. In 1975 Tim and his wife Nan, a fourth grade teacher at White Mountain Elementary School, moved to the Ruidoso area to establish White Mountain Pottery.

Top 10 artist

Wierwille's booth of pottery at last year's 24th Annual Ruidoso Art Festival was judged to be in the Top 10 among the more than 125 artists in attendance.

Festival goers will be able to see more of his pottery creations at this year's festival, including his White Mountain Series, Misty Mountain Series and Pit-Fumed Series.

Wierwille's White Mountain series was his trademark during his early years in Ruidoso. The series portrays mountains and a sun carefully carved into the pottery.

The White Mountain series is his expression of Ruidoso's unique beauty, he said.

"Folks who live in New Mexico have a different relationship with the land," he said. "It's more like a stewardship rather than use and abuse, and I respect that attitude and tried to reflect it in the series."

Wierwille put his attitude to good use several years ago when he adopted a mile of highway on Highway 48 after becoming frustrated with roadside litter in Ruidoso.

"The caretaking of our mountain oasis in the desert is everyone's responsibility," Wierwille said. "I want to contribute and be a part of maintaining Ruidoso's environment."

The Misty Mountain Series' distinguishing features are abstract landscape scenes with a hawk flying high above a mountainous background.

The Pit-Fumed series is one of Wierwille's most popular. The series is for decoration only because the pieces are not glazed.

"The outcome of each pit-fumed piece is determined by the fire set in a pit dug in the ground," Wierwille said. "The fire is fueled by dry weeds, pine needles and wood."

A new retail outlet

The Wierwilles recently opened a store, White Mountain Pottery, at 2328 Sudderth in Midtown Ruidoso to showcase his creations. The store also carries works by potters Conley Merick and Janice and Bill Cook from Truth or Consequences, Johanna and Wil DeMay from Albuquerque, Christopher Heede from Arizona and Steve Kilborn of Taos.

The store specializes in hand-thrown pottery, Wierwille said.

Prior to the opening of the new store in Midtown, Wierwille worked his craft from his studio on the Bonito River in the small community of Angus just outside Ruidoso.

A sense of harmony

Wierwille begins his pottery creations with clay from Georgia, Florida and Tennessee, mixed in Albuquerque to form potter's stoneware clay.

"I cut the clay into lumps and weights, depending on the size of the piece that I'm going to throw," he said. "After weighing, I form one or two dozen balls of clay and spin or 'throw' the pieces on the potter's wheel."

After shaping the balls of clay on the wheel, Wierwille allows the pottery to dry for 24 hours.

"After the initial drying process is completed, the pottery enters what is called the leather-hard stage," he explained. "That's when I trim, attach handles, cut the excess clay and basically finish making it."

The leather-hard stage means the pottery is still flexible and workable but not soft, he said.

"During the leather-hard stage, I use a hook tool and a wire loop tool to carve the artwork on the pottery," Wierwille said.

The pottery is then set aside for a week to dry completely before being put into a kiln and being bisque-fired at a temperature of 1750 degrees, a process that makes the clay hard enough for the glazing process to begin.

Wierwille mixes his own glaze and uses different formula combinations to produce varying effects.

"Glaze is powdered glass suspended in water, and depending on the formula of minerals like feldspar and dolomite that are added, you get different colors," he said. "Each glaze has approximately eight different ingredients."

Glazing can be done in several ways; dipping, pouring, spraying or brushing, he said.

"I primarily do my glazing by hand brushing or pouring," Wierwille said. Then the pottery is fired in the kiln for about eight hours and cools down for about another 36 hours before it's ready for sale.

"The focus of my work is on collectible, functional, hand-thrown stoneware," Wierwille said. "Harmony between form and glaze is what gives each piece its personal distinction."

Carrying on an old-time tradition while living in the Ruidoso community and doing what he loves has brought Wierwille a sense of satisfaction.

"I'm an absolutely satisfied potter," he said. "And I'm delighted to call Ruidoso my home."
