A $$ 200$ million financing package for A $$ 200$ million financing package for Apache Inn of the Mountain (iods and Casino was approved Tuesday in a 6-2 vote of the Tribal Council.
The vote came a day after tribal council members decided $5-3$ to table the issue for more study.

Construction on the project never was interrupted, Moreno said. This agreement will allow the tribe to move forward to develop the complex "into a

The bonds, which do not pledge any Mescalero property as collateral will mature Nov. 15, 2010, Moreno said. The payments will come from current income, he said. The financing partner is Citigroup and 12 percent interest will be charged. The council did restructure some existing funds to put together the package, he said.
"Council members acted very deliberately and thoughtfully and exercised one-day delay of action on the complex proposal, he said.
The council, which governs the reser vation in Otero County that abuts Ruidoso in Lincoln County, first met Friday to look at the package. No vote was taken then and members were given a chance to review the information over the weekend.
After the vote to table on Monday, Tribal President Sara Misquez was concerned that the financing issue would

When school buses stop, everybody helps

To the editor:
We are writing ... to say thank you to the communities of Ruidoso Downs, Ruidoso, Alto and Mescalero.
By now everyone is aware of the vandalism that happened to the Ruidoso school buses. It was an unfortunate and disgusting attack on our vehicles by cowards whom I am sure will eventually be brought to justice.
During the days that followed we were blessed by wonderful support from the communities we serve. We have always live and raise our families, but now that opinion is set in concrete.
The people of this area showed noth ing but respect and support for us as we worked to get the school buses back into working order. Many residents offered their help and some even came by our office, ready to work

Pathetically, our state's politicians and judges are more concerned about the welfare of our adult prisoners and pedophiles than about the well-being of our young dependents.

If our county's state legislators were truly concerned about our children, they would submit op-ed commentaries or letters to all of New Mexico's newspapers every time that they or others introduced Their comments would urge the to contact their legislators read demand that all child protection etc. leg dimand that all child protection, etc. leg-

Finally, our county's legislators ar good at obtaining state funds for our "Republican" county from the "Democratic" legislative and executive branches of our state government. Im for the state funding most of southeastern New Mexico's projects, programs, etc.;
however, our elected officials however, our elected oficials seem to our children's rampant problems. money was the sole solution, then all of our youth would be living in an Utopia and almost every student would be acing the standardized tests.

So bars are allowed on the main streets of Ruidoso, but maybe not churches. Hmmm.
I think churches and bars should be placed side by side. That way drunkto reel so far to bet a would not have churchgo far to get a blessing, and hour on Sunday listening to spent an sermon would not having to a numbing get a drink.

Defending the Care Center

I respectfully disagree with Miss Lopez. My husband is in the Alzheimer's Unit at the Care Center. I visit him very day. I am deeply impressed with the hard-working ladies in that department. They are concerned and caring for each resident; they listen to them, help given to drink.
The Care Center has never been shut down, has never been fined and is always commended by the State Survey which is placed by the front door for everyone to read. Furthermore, you can check this out by going on line: memberofthefamily.net/usregistry .html.
That will give you the National Registry, listing all the state names. Click on the state you want, choose the name of the nursing home, and follow e information listed.

Board allows cell tower co-location despite appeal  Zoners say this option is  vilage building permit summary shows better than building anothe tower for a single antenna.

BY DUAME STALIMRS RUDOSO NEWS STAP WRITE

Although she didn't win her appeal, Barbara wilard waked out of a zoning meeting earier this month thinking she at least raised some issues that may help shape official perspectives on cellular towers in the future.
Willard appealed a decision of the Lincoln County-Ruidoso Extraterritorial Zoning Commission to allow a second cellular company to co-locate on an existing Verizon tower on Squaw Trail. But in a $2-0$ vote with member Earl Hobbs, a county Hobbs, a county commissioner, absent, rejected her argument clearing the way for Alamosa Personal Communications Service to hook up at a point 15 feet below Verizon's antenna. The appearance of the tower will not change, but some additional equipment will be added at the foot of the tower.
Willard contended the predesign for from the outset was to bring another cel Lular company onto the tower to collect rent. Without that co-location accommodation, the tower could have been short er, she argued. She also questioned why a temporary tower behind Radio Shack had not been removed by condition of approval for the company's tower on Squaw Trail near the squaw Trail near the subdivision she is developing.
Maury Maury St. John, chairman of the board and a Lincoln County commissioner, and Ruidoso Councilor Councilor Hardeman, Hardeman, Hardema authority when the Verizon tower was and allowing for co-location. "We discussed greater heights and 70 feet was a compromise," he said. He added that the end-of-the-month on Sept. 23 to take down the tower behind Radio Shack.
"There will be no change in height or appearance of the tower near you"" told Willard. "Because of "Bou," he the the topography of the area and the lack of industrial zoning' disI believe the ordinance is I believe the ordinance is being revised again to being revised again to require co-location and shorter (disguised) towers. We don't want $200-$ foot to 300 -foot towers with many co-locations. "People want service and we're required by law to accommodate cell thern in their back warts them in their back yard, but we have to recognize that someone wits not too bad."
St. John said living in a tourist area visitors with cellular telephones need to be assured of service that can keep them in touch with families and businesses.

Although she would like not to see any towers in the county, "I think we any towers in the county, "I think we have to think of our economy and the things that keep it going," St. John said. As technology has changed, the ordinance has been updated consistently since it was approved in 1982, she said. "The only thing that will change here (with a co-location) is that"there will be more screening on the ground to shield the pad, which is about the size of an SUV", she said "As to whether there will be any more, I can't say. All I can say at this point is that four other sites didn't work. This is a very difficult area The mountains cause problems, 'd hat to see them have to build another tower just for one antenna."
Before the vote, neighbors, who said they didn't oppose the tower, brought up two complaints. They pointed to drainage problems that create deep and muddy areas of flooding during rain storms because of the steep road leading to the tower. They also wanted Verizon to remove tree remnants left lying in the Korest after clearing work on the five fire hazard for their cabin.
St. John directed Chris Basista, consultant for Verizon, to contact the county road manager to determine what ty road manager to determine what changes are needed to eliminate the changes are needed to eliminate the runoff problem and to finish the clearing. project by removing the slash.
Willard urged St. John to encourage the county commission to hire experts to handle future cellular tower applications, from which the county potentially could earn permit revenue, or if on public land, lease money, She quoted from the firm's presentation to the county last month that while towers can't be zoned month that while towers can't be zoned out, the height and character can be controlled. While asking for the board to support her appeal, she said allowing the co-locabecause the original tower approval was based on a conditional use permit. If so many exceptions are allowed, why have any rules, she asked.
She also pushed for a re-evaluation of conflicts between ETZ rules governing cellular towers and those in the village of Ruidoso. The ET zone extends for three miles outside the village limits tion standards under a separate set of regulations.

Another football game, another close loss for New Mexico State

LAFAYETTE, La. - This time it was Louisiana-Lafayettes time to shine.
After losing back-to-back games by last-second field goals in 2001 and 2002 to New Mexico State, the Ragin' Cajuns returned the favor Thursday night as Sean Comiskey nailed a 21 yard field goal with eight seconds left to give UL-Lafayette a $26-24 \mathrm{win}$ at Cajun Field in Sun Belt Conference action.
"This was a great win for us," Comiskey said. "We've battled hard, weve hung in there. It was a great feeling when that field goal went through the uprights."
New Mexico State falls to $1-6$ overall and 0-3 in league play, while UL Lafayette is now 1-7 and 1-3.
