He-Man's Job to Climb Everest

Member of Former Expeditions Tells of Difficulties Involved in Reaching Top.

New York.—"Why did you want to climb Mount Everest?" This question was asked of George Leigh Mallory, who was with both expeditions toward the summit of the world's highest mountain, in 1921 and 1922, and who is now in New York. He plans to go again in 1924, and he gave as the reason for persisting in these repeated attempts to reach the top, "Because it's there."

"But hadn't the expedition valuable scientific results?"

"Yes. The first expedition made a geological survey that was very valuable, and both expeditions made observations and collected specimens, both geological and botanical. The geologists want a stone from the top of Everest. That will decide whether it is the top or the bottom of a field. But these things are by-products. Do you think Shackleton went to the South pole to make scientific observations? He used the observations he did make to help finance the next trip. Sometimes science is the excuse for exploration. I think it is rarely the reason."

"Everest is the highest mountain in the world, and no man has reached its summit. Its existence is a challenge. The answer is instinctive, a part, I suppose, of man's desire to conquer the universe."

"This is pure romance, call it what else you will, and every man recognizes its touch. It leads into jungles and over deep waters and up through the high, thin reaches of the air. Its glamour trails goes through the doors of moving picture houses and up one flight to the chop-ney restaurant. It is inherent in the 'dare' of childhood. It makes the timid boy dive from the pierhead, and it sent the British Royal Geographical society and the Alpine club's expedition across the sky than any man had climbed before without taking into himself wings."

1,700 Feet Yet to Go.

The first expedition sent out by the Royal Geographical society and the Alpine club cost $20,000 and only got as high as 23,000 feet. The second attempt cost $11,000 and reached 27,233 feet. That leaves 1,700 feet to go, and there is no telling how much it will cost to make the last step. Moreover, it takes a long time to reach the place where climbing begins. The last stage of the journey is a two weeks' tramp across the Tibetan plains from Darjeeling, miles after miles of bare earth and rock, with meager patches of dried growth in the top of a ledge or in a slight depression, showing where a little moisture collected in the spring and summer. The pack animals live on this poor fare. The human natives, whom Mr. Mallory believes to be the least virtuous of the Mongols, pushed into this desolate corner by their stronger kin, fare hardly better on teams, a coarse sort of barley meal.

Plans for assault on Everest are laid as carefully as for a military campaign. That aside from the grit and stamina of the climbers, is the most important factor for success. The lack of a cooking pot, an oxygen tank, a canteen or a rope, at the right spot at the right moment, may doom the expedition. The party was able to go as high as they did by the establishment of a succession of base camps, the highest being at 21,000 feet. This meant that each camp must have supplies sufficient not only for the climbers, but also for the porters, who were to carry the equipment necessary to make the next camp. In all, the expedition carried something over twenty tons of equipment, baggage and stores. Pack animals, mostly yaks, were used across the plain and up the slopes as far as the glacier. Beyond that point the work was done by fifty porters, men from the native state of Nepal, whose splendid strength and endurance held out the hope of establishing camp at a still greater height.

Must Be Perfect Physically.

Other things besides time, money and executive ability were demanded of the expedition; the utmost quality of the climbers, for instance. Perfect physical condition is, of course, essential, for under the most favorable conditions the strain of effort in those av-ful altitudes is such that normal fitness is not regained for months after the ordeal. Good heart and lungs are the most important prerequisites. Even perfect organs would not avail without long mountaineering experience. The men were picked on their Alpine records, not so much on the written record of so many feet climbed in so many hours as on the reputations that grow up through the gossip of mountaineers: That so-and-so is a fearful fellow to keep up with, that another is fast and sure and never tires. They had need for every bit of their skill, experience and strength in this struggle.

Perpendicular travel is slow at best, but on the higher slopes of Everest it slowed down to 500 feet an hour—about the length of a short city block, the distance that a good runner can make in ten seconds. Twenty-nine thousand feet of that is no week-end sport.

For instance, no mountaineer experiences vertigo. He wouldn't be one long if he did. The reason the untrained mortal feels dizzy on the brink of a thousand-foot drop is that his eyes find nothing to rest on. The mountaineer's eyes are trained to hunt peaks all about, and particularly beneath him. There is rarely a vertical wall to be climbed. Almost always there is a slight slope, and here a few degrees mean everything to the eye. Mr. Mallory says that personally he can use with equanimity at the sky end of a few thousand feet of cliff or ice wall any footing that would serve him on lower levels.

A Useful Hint.

Here is a useful hint for incipient mountaineers upon conduct during an avalanche, or rather in an avalanche. If it is of rocks and ice, the affair must be left almost entirely to the avalanche itself. Its constituent parts become you are all right unless you conflict with a trajectory. There is little chance of dodging. Snow is another matter. Its tendency is to pull you under and crush or suffocate you. The point of endeavor is to stay on the surface and to keep your arms up above your head. In the avalanche which killed seven porters and halted his own attempt to reach the summit, Mr. Mallory found himself "swimming on his back." At the end the expert packed in such a way as to push him and others to the surface, instead of dragging them down.

"It's easy enough to breathe," he explained, "and while you keep perfectly still you feel all right. But when you try to move, you have a bad time getting started. Then you have to pump so hard to keep going that you wear yourself out. When I came back from the expedition, the muscles of my diaphragm were tremendously developed just from breathing." (N. B. Why wouldn't breathing rarefied air be splendid training for opera singers?) Oxygen, inhaled in small doses, will

Grave of Pocahontas in New York

Photograph shows a general view of St. Anne's Episcopal church at One Hundred Forty-first street and St. Anne's avenue, the Bronx, New York, which is said to be the resting place of Pocahontas, the Indian maiden who saved the life of Capt. John Smith. It was believed that the body of the Indian girl was taken to England and buried there. A research party was to have sailed for England shortly in an effort to locate the grave, but it recently became known that the body had been brought back to New York and buried in the graveyard of St. Anne's church, which was built originally by Governor Morris, one of the earliest executives of New York. The body is said to rest in a vault in the graveyard.

Railroads will no longer be required by the Interstate Commerce Commission to route freight shipments over the most direct lines from their points of origin to their destination. The orders requiring such routing, vacated by a decision recently, the only remnants of the emergency measures taken during the coal and rail strikes of 1912 to avert a transportation stupor. The original emergency orders by which car supply, railroad routing and priorities in service were put under a degree of federal control had been gradually modified until the only direct routing requirement, remained. Hereafter shippers and railroad officials may exercise an unhampered discretion in routing freight.

White Line Mail and Passenger Service.

There is a change made this week in the White Line Company's advertisement which is printed on the front page of the Mountaineer. It can be said that the White Line mail and passenger service is the best in the state. We have personal of the operation of the mail and passenger service which passes through Capitan and will say that we have never known such regularity and promptness carried out by any person or persons acting as public carriers as has been done by this company. Not an accident has occurred since this company has had charge of the line. Their drivers are men long experience, courteous to passengers and trustworthy in every respect.

Educational News.

(By Louise H. Coe.)

The County Board of Education has requested that teachers file their applications with the local Board of Directors where they wish to teach for the coming year. These applications with recommendation from the Board of Directors will be forwarded to the County Board of Education for consideration at their meeting on May 10th.

Due to the fact that a large majority of the teachers in Lincoln County are planning to attend summer school, the State Board of Education has given me permission to waive my County Institute.

Only two teachers examinations will be given this year. The dates have not yet been determined but will probably be held in June and July.

The attendance banner for the month of April was won by the Corona High school.

The Rural commencement exercises for the week beginning May 14th are: Hondo, May 16th, Glencoe May 17th, Lincoln, afternoon May 18th, and Picocho, evening of May 18th. The County School Superintendent will deliver the address and present the diplomas.

WHAT IS IT?

It is called a Spencer Turkey fowl. This name was given to it by Mr. Z. T. Spencer who claims to have developed this remarkable bird. It is said to be a cross between a Turkey gobbler and an Orpington pullet.

The picture on the opposite side was taken of a bird brought to Santa Cruz by Spencer, with several others of its kind, from Northern Washington in the Fall of 1921.

I purchased the bird from Mr. Spencer last May and have since bought a number of females, besides raising several hundred.

I shall offer for sale a limited number of Turkey baby chicks, also hatching eggs for delivery in 1923, but no older birds until I have provided myself with all the breeding stock I need.

SAW ONE IN SNAKE'S VISIT

Reptile's Appearance in Seminoles Indian Camp, Induced Tribe to Accept Government's Offer.

Old Indians relate that in the illustrations which led to the emigration from the Florida lands to their homes in the West, the Seminole chiefs were still stubborn and rebellious, and the sentiment was entirely against accepting the proposition of the government. At this time a large snake entered into the council grounds and slowly coiled himself and looked around upon the gathered tribesmen, as though hesitating them to take council of his movements. For a short time he stayed, and then slowly uncoiled himself and leaped took himself to the westward.

This was taken as an omen by the chiefs and the medicine men, and upon a vote being taken it was unanimously voted to accept the terms of the government and go westward as required. Thus many lives and much expense were saved.

Another curious legend among the very old men is that the "Mingolose," the redcoats, will some time come and help the Seminoles to regain his lost lands. This came about probably on account of some old promise made by the British during the fighting days of the Revolution or the War of 1812. And even as late as the Green Peach war, in the early 60s, the old Seminoles proclaimed that the Great war had come and that the "Mingolose" were coming with great guns to aid the Seminoles in whipping the white men and regaining their lost lands.
