Blind Man May Convict Killer

Hearing Voice Alone, He Picks Accused From Among Suspects

Montreal.—The "God-given gift that the blind possess" may prove the undoing of Henri Bertrand, who now awaits, in Bordeaux jail, trial on a charge of murdering his employer, business associate and benefactor, Joseph Beaudry, editor and publisher, who was found dead in his office chair with two bullet wounds in his back.

The shooting took place late in the afternoon in the business premises where Beaudry conducted his prosperous publishing enterprises and where Bertrand was his trusted secretary-treasurer and manager. The crime was not discovered until several mornings later when the body of the murdered publisher was found seated in his chair before his desk, a pen still clenched in the hand, stiffened in death.

The police were at sea. The assassin had left no clue behind him. There was no trace of the manner in which he had gained admission to the office. The direction which the bullets had taken lent color to the theory that the murderer had fired through the transom over the door, but this theory had to be discarded as untenable. Beaudry had remained alone in the building on the afternoon he was murdered, telling his secretary that he expected a visitor. He did not say who this person was.

Police Are Stumped.

Every avenue of inquiry followed by the police led to a blank wall. Then a blind man placed in their hands a thread which, they believe, has led them to the secret of the labyrinth. Henri Bertrand, the dead man's manager, had been closely questioned. He denied having returned to the office on the fatal afternoon. He denied that he even possessed a revolver.

Was his denial, they ask, prompted by the fact that the only revolver he ever possessed had been bought but a few days earlier from a blind man?

It seemed impossible that the vendor of the revolver could ever identify the man who had entered his store, with few words, had struck a bargain, paid the money and taken away the weapon. But James Mulholland of 102 Anderson street remembered the transaction, and when the news of the murder was read to him by a neighbor he got in touch with the police.

It was a dramatic moment at police headquarters when the blind man was confronted with the few suspects whom the police had retained for questioning. Mulholland and Bertrand both betrayed little signs of emotion, but when the latter spoke in answer to a question put by a detective, the blind man started.

"That is the man who bought the revolver," he declared.

Bertrand was arrested, charged with the murder, and in court the men again confronted each other.

"Do you know what size Mr. Bertrand is?" asked the crown-prosecutor.

"Not exactly. I know he is a big man. I think he is bigger than I am. I have a pretty good idea of him."

"How do you size him up?"

"In the God-given way the blind have," Mr. Mulholland replied. "We have a particular way of weighing people. It is a kind of secret among the blind people. It is a gift—our way of knowing people."

Questioned about the interview at detective headquarters when he had picked out Bertrand from among several others present, Mulholland was asked:

"Did you meet Mr. Bertrand yesterday?"

"Yes, in the presence of detectives."

"How many people were there?"

"I didn't count—four or five, I think."

"Did anybody tell you he was Bertrand?"

"I got up and shook hands with him when he came in."

"Is that the same man who bought the revolver?"

"Absolutely the same man."

Until Mulholland came forward with his assertion that Bertrand had purchased a revolver, although he denied ever having owned one, the detectives had hunted in vain for a clue that might point to a motive for the murder of Beaudry.

The murdered man had many strange things in his life. He had made two trips to Russia and had been in communication with the Soviet authorities in Moscow. The purposes of these trips he confided to no one. After his return from the firm one he had engaged a firm of private detectives to keep him protected from some danger which he did not specify, but he evidently was in fear of some attempt on his life.

The promising looking lead came to nothing, nor could the police discover any among Beaudry's business associates who would have gained by the murder. True, Beaudry had made many enemies. He drove hard bargains and was abrupt, even surly, in his manner toward associates and those with whom he had business dealings. Hundreds of people were questioned, dozens of seeming clues followed up in vain.

No Woman Involved.

The suggestion that a woman had something to do with the crime had to be discarded. Beaudry was happily married, and no intrigue with other women had come to light.

With the arrest of Bertrand, the police set to work to establish a motive, and when the accused comes to trial evidence will be presented by the crown showing that the former manager had resented the big profits which the publisher was taking out of his business. Bertrand had proposed to certain capitalists that they should help him get control of the business which, as he himself stated, could be made a very profitable affair.

"He told me that if there were no Mr. Beaudry taking large amounts, the business would be excellent," testified Noel E. Lanotz, one of the capitalists who had been approached by Bertrand.

A few days after the discovery of Joseph Beaudry, and before the funeral of the murdered man, Bertrand had again mooted the matter to Mr. Lanotz, according to the witness who appeared at the preliminary hearing of the accused.

"Did he make any suggestion to you as to buying the business?" asked the crown-prosecutor.

"Since the murder, he asked me if

Public Wedding of Seminole Chief

"Be good, love each other and live together," said John Osceola to Chief Tony Tomasi and Miss Edna John Osceola. The couple with joined hands were proclaimed married. The entire ceremony took less than two minutes. Thus did 2,000 whites witness the first Seminole Indian wedding ever staged in public at Miami lake on the east coast of Florida. There are only 700 Seminoles in existence in the Florida everglades, and the majority were present at the marriage of their college educated chief.

there was any possibility of my being able to return and aid him."

"When was that?"

"Some days after the murder."

Rely on Blind Man.

At the approaching trial the crown will recall this witness and others in an attempt to prove that Bertrand, in cold blood, assassinated his employer in the hope that, with him out of the way, there would be a possibility of the salaried employee becoming, with the aid of friends, the controlling proprietor of the business. They will attempt to prove that Bertrand made an appointment to meet Beaudry at an hour when he knew all the staff would have left the building.

When Beaudry was sitting at his desk, having turned to work after dismissing peremptorily his visitor, the latter, the crown will allege, had turned as he reached the door of the office and, putting a revolver from his pocket, had fired two bullets into the body of the publisher from behind. Then the crown will ask the jury to believe that Bertrand calmly closed the office door, left the premises and proceeded to his home to have lunch with his wife and son.

To support their case the prosecution will rely principally upon the identification of Bertrand by the blind storekeeper. The revolver has disappeared and probably is resting at the bottom of the St. Lawrence river. But before the weapon was sold a friend of Mr. Mulholland tried it out by firing into a fence post in the rear of the blind man's store. From that fence post a bullet has been recovered and it bears certain scratches made by the barrel of the revolver which, the crown's experts will testify, are identical with marks on the bullets recovered from the body of the dead publisher.

First Time in History.

Perhaps for the first time in the history of crime, a case is being built up on the evidence of a blind man. Upon the decision of the jury rests the life of a man and also the future of a great business. Bertrand, acquitted, might confidently count on the backing necessary to gain for him the control of the publishing house which issues various periodicals and trade papers widely circulated through French Canada and the French Canadian populations in the New England states. The crown will try to prove that the motive behind the murder of Beaudry was the ambition of Bertrand to wrest control away from the man whom he believed was drawing too heavily on the business and thereby endangering its continued success.

Back of the fight are to be seen the figures of two women. One, the widow of Beaudry, childless and burning with desire for revenge on the man who snatched her husband from her. The other is the wife of Bertrand, fighting to defend her husband against the charge against him. She has one son whose future is involved in the case. He is on the verge of manhood. He might embark on a business career as the son of a prosperous man controlling a profitable business. In the alternative, if she loses her fight, her son enters life branded as the child of a criminal.

His wife believes in Bertrand and so do many of his business associates who have rallied to provide bail for him. If the law in Canada permits the enlargement of men charged with capital offenses.

Children Prefer Poor Mother to Rich Father

New York.—Ten days with their mother in a small apartment with no servants and few luxuries convinced Sally Miles, eleven years old, and her brother, Edward, ten, that they would prefer to live with her than with their father in a big house with many servants, costly toys and a private school.

Their decision was registered in court here when they went, on the witness stand in the trial of a suit for increased alimony, brought by Mrs. Eleanor Miles against William Roy Miles. On their testimony the court decided that they should live with their mother in Orange, N. J., and visit their father in Babylon, N. Y., six weeks each year.

In the fall, after they had spent the summer with their father, the children told the court they preferred their father to their mother. The court gave them time to consider the matter carefully and sent them home with their mother.

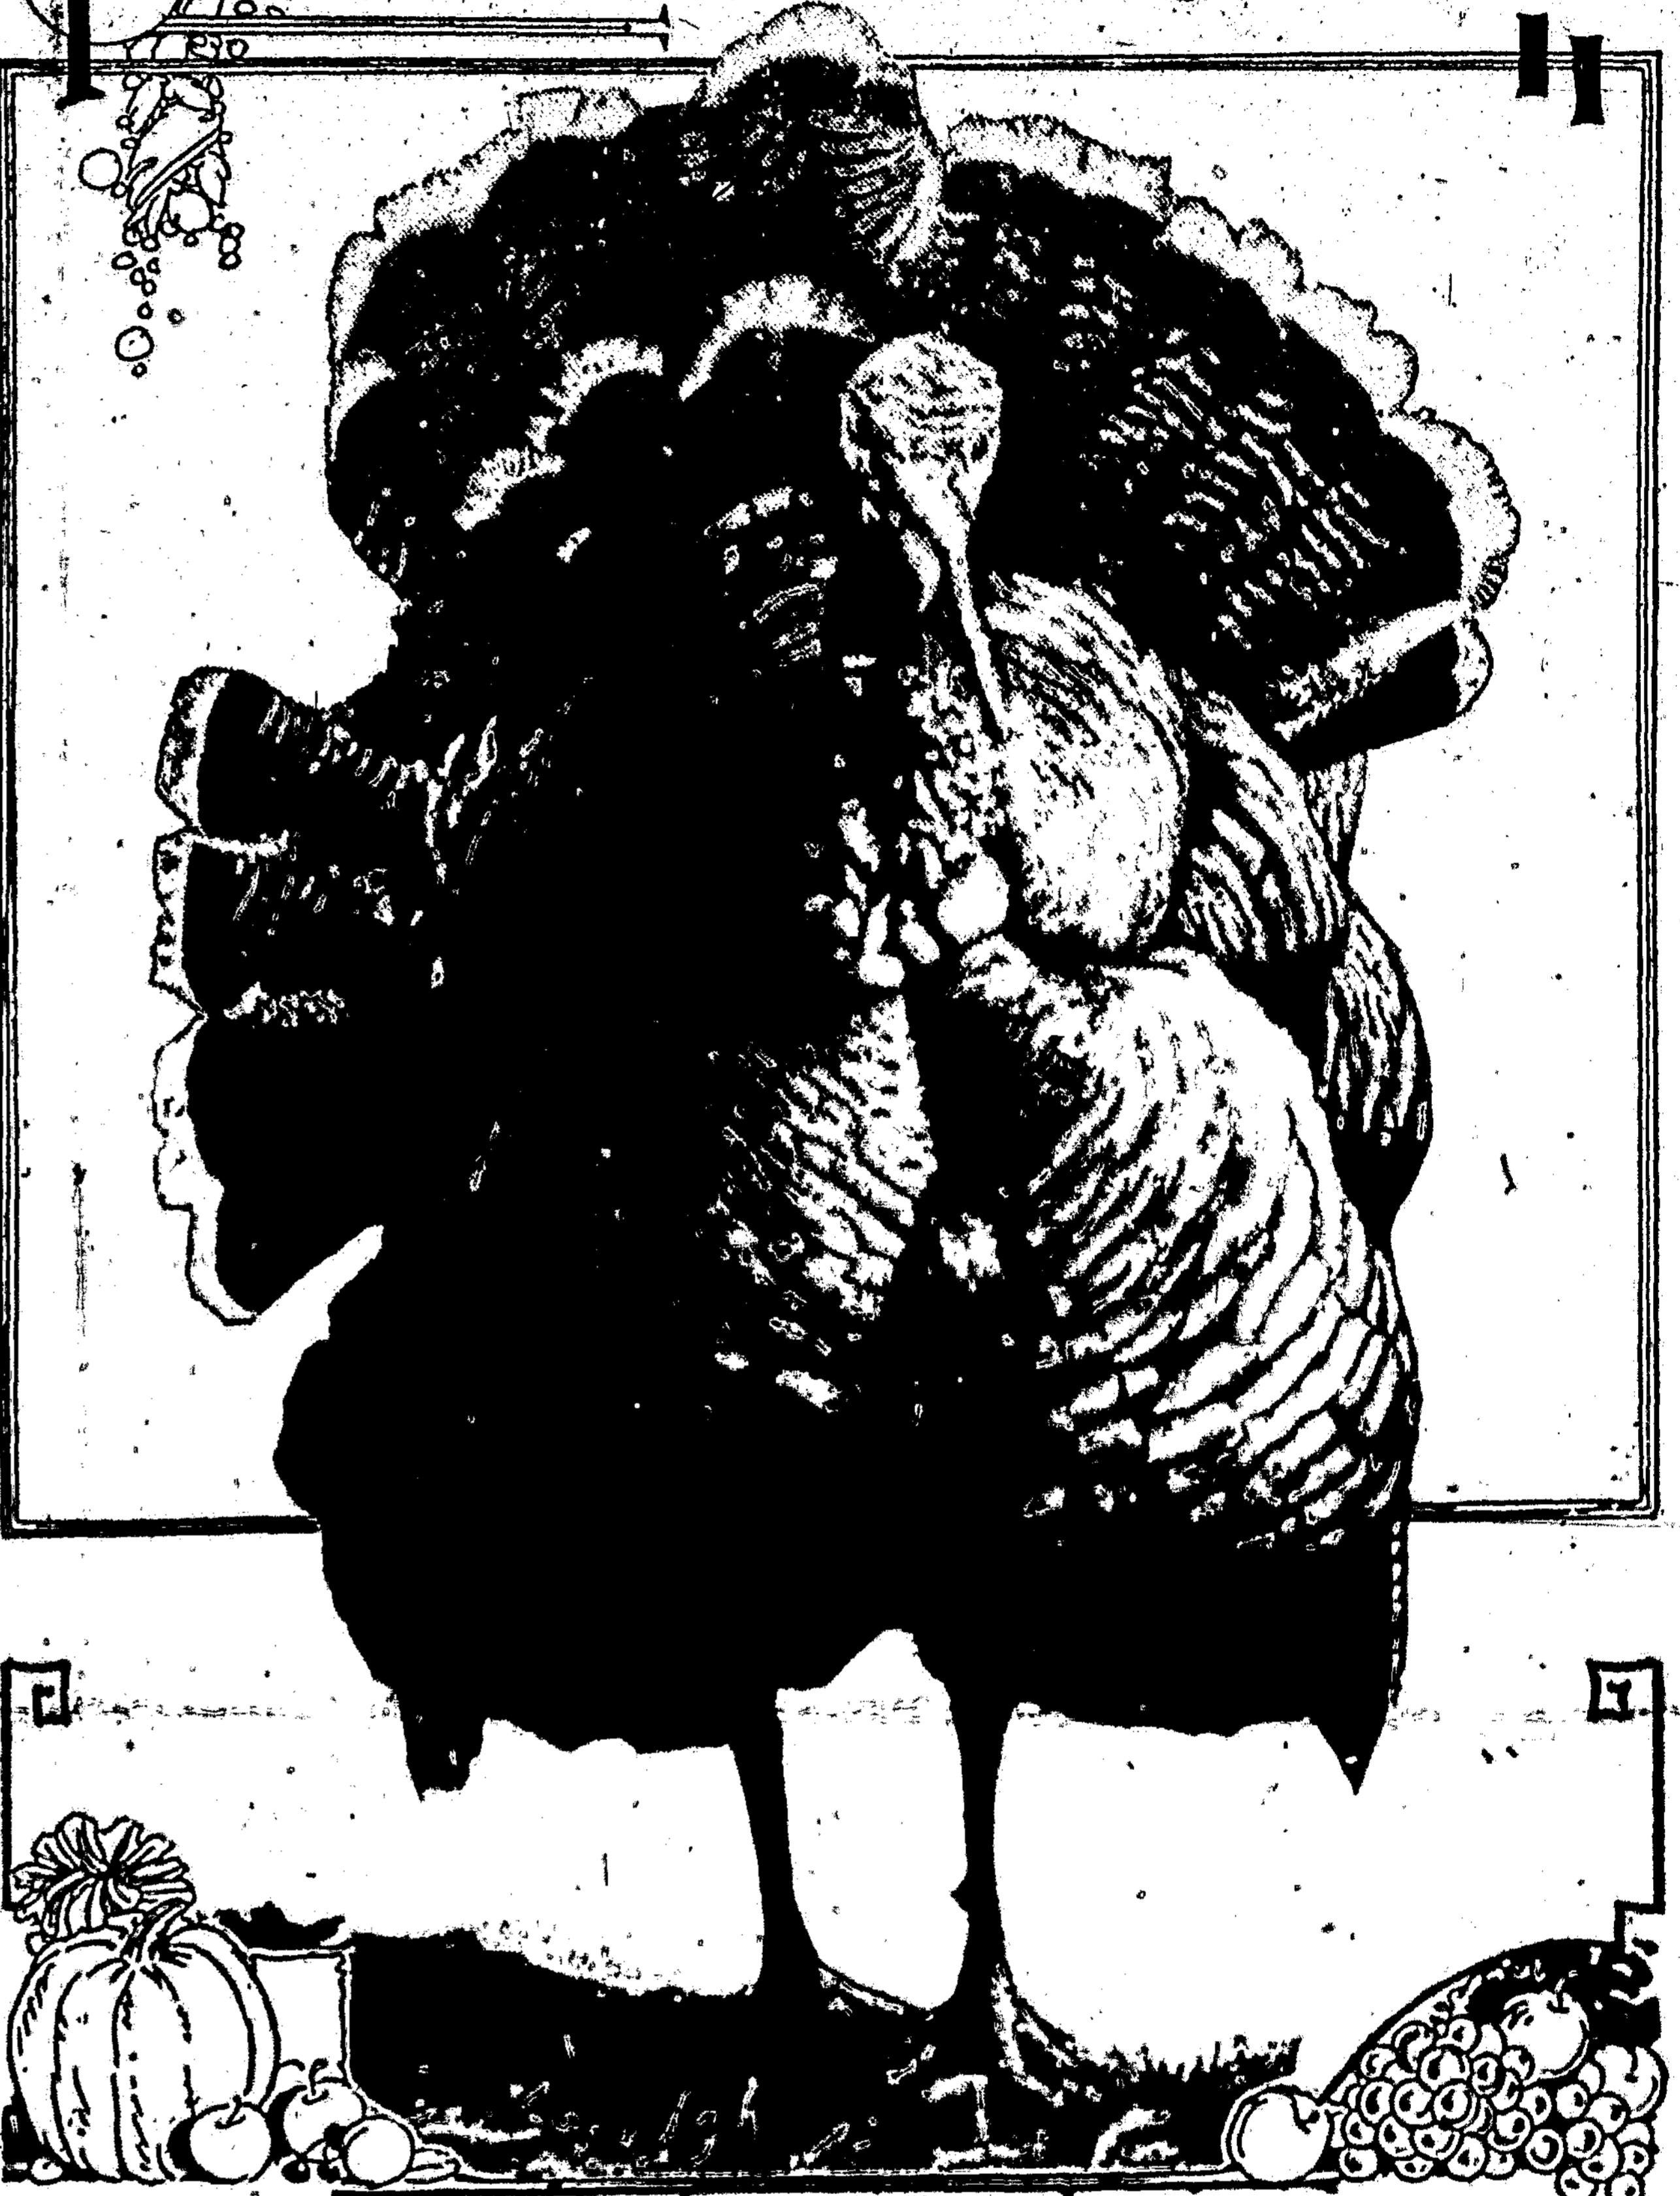

Women Poisoners' Club Revealed in Belgrade

Belgrade.—A club of women poisoners, under the guise of a charitable organization with the significant name of "Lueretta," has been raided here.

Police assert that at secret meetings the club members were taught the medieval art of mixing and administering poisons. Six women unhappy married were declared thus to have found means of ridding themselves of their husbands. The remains of these were examined and in two cases toxicologists have determined the presence of poisons.

Five women were arrested charged with being the ring leaders of the organization.

Thanksgiving, 1926

The festival of harvest time is upon us. We are anticipating the good fellowship and the prospect of the happy reunions which are accompaniments of this annual celebration. Perhaps, then, it will not be amiss if we dwell a little upon the deeper significance of Thanksgiving.

It is always an interesting adventure and often profitable to trace a word back to its derivation, and a very cursory research with the aid of a dictionary will reveal to us the suggestive fact that the words "thanks" and "think" have a common origin. The former, indeed, is an obsolete form of the latter, and required only in course of time and usage its special significance of pleased or grateful thinking.

With this in mind we may turn to a passage in the letter which Paul wrote to the Christians in Philippi—a letter which is keyed to a high note of spiritual rejoicing, and breathes throughout the gladness which should mark the life attuned to the purpose of God. You will find it in what we call the fourth chapter, in the farewell words addressed by Paul to his friends. We quote from Doctor Goodspeed's translation of the New Testament:

"I have no anxiety about anything, but make all your wants known unto God in prayer and entreaty, with thanksgiving. Then through your union with Christ Jesus, the peace of God, so far above any human thought, will guard your mind and thoughts. Now brothers let your minds dwell on what is true, what is worthy, what is right, what is pure, what is amiable, what is kindly—on everything that is excellent or praiseworthy.

Then God who gives peace will be with you."

It is at once apparent that Paul understood the intimate relation between "thinking" and "thanksgiving." His admonition to the thoughtful life is manifestly the underlying basis for the thankful life. And the thankful life is the assurance of the guarding and companionable peace of God. Paul sets forth the things upon which our minds should dwell—the true, the worthy, the right, the pure, the amiable or lovely, the kindly. In his philosophy it was vitally important that our minds should be occupied with such thoughts as these. He understood, as we understand better today, that what is in a man's thinking will determine the character of his life. He understood, also, that in order to keep one's thinking on a high and wholesome plane there must be effort and discipline.

It was not easy in Paul's day to do this. The world in which he lived was superficially provocative of much bitter, evil and unclean thought.

In a city like Philippi there would be many things happening to the Christian and many things under his observation to evoke thinking on the base level. Even in this joyous letter he felt it necessary to warn his friends with tears against those whose appetites are their god; who glory in their shame, and who are absorbed in earthly matters."

It is not easy in our day to follow Paul's instruction and example—for he practiced splendidly his own teaching. What we do not actually see in the newspaper is brought to us in the news columns of the daily press—things that are evil, indecent, ugly, cruel. We cannot wholly ignore these things; Paul did not in his day. When necessary he spoke frankly of them, calling a spade a spade, in his letters. They are part of the world in which we live—or of the world we must help. But our effort must be to discipline our thinking so that they will not flood and overwhelm our minds, excluding or submerging thought of better and finer things.

Even more difficult, perhaps, is it to escape the peril of those "who are absorbed in earthly matters." The tide of materialism is strongly set against the influences of the spiritual. Unless the channel is kept clear which admits the flow of God's thought we will find ourselves presently with minds incapable of grasping His purposes and principles, with minds which cannot meditate happily upon His truth or which will not respond to what is right and pure and lovely.

The possibility of the thankful life, of the life which knows the comradeship of the God of peace, will be lost to us.

It is at once apparent that Paul understood the intimate relation between "thinking" and "thanksgiving." His admonition to the thoughtful life is manifestly the underlying basis for the thankful life. And the thankful life is the assurance of the guarding and companionable peace of God. Paul sets forth the things upon which our minds should dwell—the true, the worthy, the right, the pure, to your dictionary again. To "appreciate" means to "set a value." The man who has adopted God's standards of values, who sees the true and the good and the lovely and lovable as the worthwhile and abiding things, is the real appreciator, and for him there will always be occasion for the grateful thinking which is thanks.

If you find little of it in your mind today there is something wrong with your standard of values. You are erring in the practice of "appreciation." You have set your heart upon things that are unworthy, temporary, illusory, and they are disappointing you. Take Paul's recipe. Begin to think about all that is excellent and praiseworthy. Take your mind out of the material shadows and into the sunlight of God's thought and love. Make your wants known to Him. The spirit of thanksgiving will enter your soul, and the "peace of God, so far above any human thought," will come to stand "guard" at your mind's gate.

And so on this Thanksgiving day let all good Americans give thanks in the Pilgrims of Plymouth Rock; for turkey, cranberry sauce, and pumpkin pie; for their heroic struggle for freedom, and for their successful demonstration that their new land could be made to yield living.

For the specialties served up at all good Thanksgiving dinners, Americans must how to that friendly old Indian, Massassot. It was he who introduced the cranberry and the pumpkin to the American people through the Pilgrims. Massassot may have been a poor uneducated savage, but he and his people had a delightfully simple and fairly efficient agricultural system: Corn in the hill and a climbing bean; a pumpkin seed every five hills. Massassot showed the Pilgrims the cranberry growing wild in the marshes, and had no difficulty whatever in demonstrating that roast turkey and cranberry sauce was an unbeatable combination. The Pilgrims, of course, knew all about turkeys, which had been taken across seas from Mexico and had become common on English farms before the year 1000. But it was the friendly Indian who impressively brought together for the first time on any stage those three Thanksgiving stars—turkey, cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie."

This life of right thinking and glad thanks is the appreciative life. Go

Work and its Reward

By O. Lawrence Hawthorne

Do your work!
No matter what the task may be,
Attack it with heroic zeal.
Be not content until you see
Accomplishment, until you feel
That satisfaction gained alone
Through sense of duty nobly done;
So is your honest value shown,
Such appreciation won.

Do your work!
Not just the labor specified,
But with a willing heart do more;
Let loyal service be your guide!
The joys of life are waiting for
That man who never fails to do
His very best, and he will find
Unselfed reward in purpose true
And self-respect and peace of mind.

LOCAL NEWS ITEMS

One hunting accident was reported from Otero county—shot through shoulder.

Two deer passed through here this morning. The hunters came from points east.

It is said there will be a large shipment of cattle from here Monday to the markets.

Miss Howard, a daughter of Monroe Howard, of Bonito, is here on a visit with her folks.

Mrs. A. Andrews and children are contemplating a visit to their former home in Louisiana.

Ham Garrod, the hotel man at Carrizozo, stopped off here Wednesday on his return from Roswell.

Fruit, vegetables and other farm produce are being shipped from this station this week. Also some cattle.

Among the successful hunters from this season, so far as we could learn, were Frank Gherod, turkey; C. H. Dixon, a bear; and Fred Clark, a deer.

Two deer, 7 and 8 points, weighing 185 and 215 respectively passed through here Wednesday for Taxus. Both were killed in the Piatos mountain.

Sheriff Sam Kelsey has been around the Alto country the past week investigating the killing of young Elk Tower in that district on the morning of the 10th, but with what success we have not learned.

The Capitan basketeers went to Carrizozo Wednesday evening for an indoor practice game. A team accustomed to playing in an outdoor court are at a disadvantage in an indoor game. The fact is that the Capitan schools need a gymnasium. It could be used for meetings and entertainments for which a charge would be made, and would pay for itself in a few years.

The construction of the iron bridge has been suspended temporarily. The pay checks not getting here on time; the men ceased work. It is believed matters will be adjusted in a few days and work will be resumed.

On Wednesday next, November 24, a two year old thoroughbred Jersey filly will be raffled off for the benefit of the Capitan school athletic fund. Some one will win—it may be you. Take a chance or two. It helps the boys and girls.

Word reached here from the Tucson mountain that Henry Silver Jr., was accidentally shot in the lower part of the right leg above the ankle Monday while deer hunting. Monday, but whether with his own gun or that of an other we failed to learn. He was taken to Carrizozo for surgical treatment.

In speaking to an old timer this week in regard to shooting, he stated that the bucks are being killed off year after year, while the does are rapidly increasing. He noticed several herds of does later without a master. If this continues, the males will have to be protected instead of the does.

One turkey was the only wild game brought to Capitan during the ten day open season. Parties living outside town are reported to have bagged two bucks. How does it happen that the non-residents who visit the mountains at this season invariably return with a deer and a couple of birds of the bronze variety. Maybe they can shoot straighter than the local sports. We heard a suggestion this week which we believe is a good one, and should be submitted to the state game commission. That is that the cost of a license for a resident of the county be cut in two; outside the county it be slightly increased, and outside the state but it be doubled. Outside the state hunters out-number the local hunters, in this county at least, four to one.

American Legion Meets

The Robert A. Hague Post 79, American Legion, met in open meeting Wednesday evening. A large number of ex-service men were present. The meeting was called to order by Post Commander Jas. Cavanaugh at 7:30 p.m., who stated the purpose of the meeting, saying with other things that it is for the purpose of letting the ex-service understand that the local Post is squarely behind them in any matter which they may wish to take up.

At the close of the meeting refreshments, consisting of cake and coffee, were served to all present. The cake was a large one, displaying the national colors within a tri color fringe, name and number of Post, and was a credit to the baker's skill.

It is to be remembered that the Robert A. Hague Post 79 was organized about a year ago by some dozen ex-service men, and has had a successful year, gaining new members and, the confidence of all by its work in their interest; and with the beginning of the second year it has gained greater momentum with the assistance of its competent corps of officers and personnel, and it is the prediction of the writer that its scope for greater service will be larger as years go by. It is our opinion that each and every ex-service man or woman should identify themselves with this organization, working for their common welfare. Adjutant Sam Cox of Fort Stanton will be glad to assist you in the necessary requirements.

Early American History

The Continental Congress was in session at intervals from September 5, 1774, to October 21, 1783, at Philadelphia; Baltimore; Lancaster, Pa.; Princeton, N. J.; Annapolis, Md.; Trenton, N. J., and New York City and was served throughout its history by 16 Presidents, including John Hancock, elected thirteenth President in 1785, but who was sick and did not serve.

Inspiration

If you ever get to feeling conceited about what you have accomplished in life, read a little biography and find out how some others with half your opportunities have won world-wide recognition before they were anywhere near your age. And if you should feel depressed your might note the number who have won both fame and fortune after they were far older than you.—Carthage Press.

Boston Has Leaning Tower

The Old South church in Boston, is that city's leaning tower of Pisa. The only difference is that to the untrained eye the tower of the old church does not appear to lean, yet engineers and architects maintain there is a considerable lean, which is increased from year to year. The inclination has increased three-quarters of an inch in the last 12 years. The total lean at the top is said to be between two and three feet.

Lion Has Lucky Bone

Like the children's wishbone, the lion has a "lucky bone," which natives in Africa always present to the hunter or other distinguished visitor who comes among them and let whom they wish to express good will. The natives have great respect for the king of beasts and do not tolerate "lion chaps" in their meat rations. They white hunters say lion chops are poor eating.

Importance of Color

Color proportion is more important than color harmony. For the largest areas in the room such as the walls, floor and ceiling use neutral tones, and as areas decrease in size, use brighter colors such as curtains and upholstery pieces and brighter colors perhaps for runners, lamps, pottery, etc.

A VISIT TO WHITE OAKS

SOME REMINISCENCES OF A FAMOUS GOLD CAMP

Mr. Lambert, school superintendent, and Mr. Sam Wells, spent Sunday afternoon in White Oaks, looking over the historic old mining camp, where millions of free gold was extracted from the ores in the near by hills in the past, and where, it is said, by those familiar with the camp, that more millions lie awaiting the necessary capital to uncover them.

Mr. Lambert was shown over the "diggings" by Mr. Wells, who is acquainted with every phase of the development in that camp for more than a quarter of a century, and who is conceded to be one of the best posted men on rock, ores and mineral formations in the west. They visited the Old Abe and North and South Homestake mines (the big producers when White Oaks was perhaps the largest and best town in New Mexico), but time limited them seeing some of the other mines which contributed their quota of the yellow metal. The late Governor W. C. McDonald of Carrizozo, and Harvey B. Ferguson of Albuquerque (afterwards Delegate to Congress, but since deceased), were prospectors in the White Oaks hills in those days, and many other notable men, including Judge John Y. Hewitt, of White Oaks, who discovered the Old Abe, and who still lives there and is enjoying tolerably good health, notwithstanding he has passed his ninetieth milestone on life's highway.

It may not be generally known that the late Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," "North of Forty Three," and other popular stories, edited the first newspaper published in Lincoln county; at White Oaks. While there he wrote and published that beautiful story, "The Heart's Desire." So it will be seen that White Oaks, now looking like a deserted village, produced more than yellow stuff in the past. Those most familiar with the district feel confident that White Oaks will come to life again, and that in the very near future, and that with modern mining machinery and electric power, will produce more of the precious metals in the future than it has in the past—and at perhaps one-fourth the cost than with a pick and shovel and a gold pan, as in the old days.

The famous Billie the Kid, during the Lincoln county cattle war, was a frequent visitor in White Oaks, where he混ixed with the miners in the dance halls, was considered a good sport and inoffensive, notwithstanding his reputation as a man killer. A few of the old ones still remain waiting for the tide to turn. It would take the pen of Emerson Hough to picture White Oaks, as it is today and as it was at one time.

CAPITAN HIGH SCHOOL

ATHLETICS AND MENTAL DEVELOPMENT

D. Lambert, Supt.

The basket ball game Friday afternoon was a little disappointing. Capitan went into the game with crippled team on account of sickness of some members of the team. The score ended with the Hondo team 5 in favor of the Hondo team, but it was none the less a game, and the girls were ladies. We will play them again soon at Hondo, and expect another time, when we hope to reverse the score. Capitan was cut in half forward, but we learned them a lesson. Our team must not do so much scrimmaging, but train up about four good forwards, four guards and four centers, and then if any member of the team is not in condition it will not make much difference as a substitute can take his place on the team.

Our school needs a gymnasium so that we can practice in all kinds of weather, and we will have to have one to have a first class school that is an attraction to the school and community, as from now on the weather will greatly affect the athletics, on account of the conditions we have to contend with.

The state high school course of studies, is made out to include athletics and literary societies, and other activities. All the students can participate in the extra activities and also do a school work with ease, if it is well handled by the teachers. Some people do not seem to understand the value of the outside activities of the high school. It is to give the teachers and students a common ground to meet on equal terms. It is to encourage students to unite for a common purpose—to learn the students to work with others to develop citizenship and ultimately to take an intelligent part in our republican form of government.

A republican form of government is not as effective in law enforcement as other forms of government that enforces the obedience to law at the point of a bayonet, regardless whether the law is right or wrong. But the citizen of a republic, after a thorough discussion, which takes time, finally sees the principle, and law becomes a part of the soul and consciousness of the individual, which is a stronger enforcement of law than an enforced enforcement. In fact a republican form of government is based upon individualistic individuals who are willing to work together for the common good. This principle has never been understood by the people of Europe, who said that the American soldier would not fight, but they learned something.

The basket ball team expect to play the Lincoln team next Friday, to show them that we can play basket ball.

One of our patrons has shown a good spirit in that he has offered a two year old halter to be put up auction, raised off or otherwise disposed of, the proceeds to go to the school athletic fund. The high school heartily thanks Mr. Ferguson.

Card of Thanks

Our most heartfelt thanks are extended to all those who assisted us during our bereavement at the untimely death of our son and brother, Carl Hightower.

We especially wish to thank the doctors and the kind people of Fort Stanton, whose kindness in our distress will linger in our memories forever.

Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Hightower and family.

FIRST CASUALTY OF THE HUNTING SEASON

SHOT THROUGH STOMACH

Word reached here Wednesday morning that Carl, the 14 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Hightower, of Alta, had been dangerously wounded by what is believed to have been a stray bullet from a high power gun. It being the first day of the hunting season, the hills were filled with hunting parties, who made camp the previous evening in order to have an early start.

Young Hightower, his father and some others were hunting in the vicinity of their home when the accident occurred. The boy rushed back to the house bleeding profusely, and after telling his mother he had been shot through the stomach, he fainted. He was rushed to Fort Stanton hospital and operated on that afternoon.

The bullet passed through his liver, stomach and arm.

TWO IN THE DARK

By H. M. EGBERT

"I'D LIKE to see you in the library, old man," said Munson, the host, to his guest, Fremantle.

"Alfred Fremantle looked rather vaguely at Munson. The middle-aged blunderer's voice was a little unreal; The man was flushed, not with wine so much as with good living. Munson had the best cook in Milland, and gave the best dinners.

The house party was such as Munson loved to give. A round half-dozen of blundering magnates had sat at his table. At their head Edith Munson had watched over the affairs of the table. She was a beautiful woman, even at thirty-five, and much admired. Fremantle was the only nonblundering guest present. He was rich in his own right, and a famous traveler. He was an old friend of Edith's, too; before her marriage there had been some talk about them. Fremantle had often wondered whether Munson knew.

Munson paused irritably in the passage. Voices came from the billiard room.

"All show, old man," one of his guests was saying. "Just to keep up the pretense of affection between them. Everybody knows how he's neglected her."

"I wonder whether she knows about that dancer?"

"She'll know soon," answered the other.

"Do you mean to say she's going to sue?"

"So they say. Of course there's an other reason."

"Premissile?"

"It's been her shadow while Jim Munson was away."

Munson overheard the whole conversation, and his projected talk with Fremantle which had been only vague in his mind, suddenly assumed the aspect of the irreconcilable. He must end all this. He had certainly neglected Edith. But how was it known? And did they know that it was because of the suspicion of her, his assurance that her love had failed him? And that dancer—Isola Ferrand? He shrugged his shoulders contemptuously.

He had met her just twice, at bachelor parties, and the smooth-faced, cupid little girl had affected him no more than a floating feather. He must end all this! A wave of blood surged into his heavy face.

"I'm ready, Munson!"

Fremantle, immaculate in his evening clothes, was standing in front of him. Munson felt taken at a disadvantage. He frowned, then said blandly:

"Come into the library. I won't keep you long, Fremantle."

It was not until he stood facing the other man beside the big fireplace that he knew Fremantle had sensed the purpose of the invitation. Munson stood with his back to the door; Fremantle watched him with a dawning sneer upon his lips.

"Now!" said Munson briskly, "what have you to say for yourself?"

"Is anything necessary, Munson?" asked the other.

"You came here as my guest—" he can Munson bitterly. Then he snorted himself. "No. Nothing is necessary," he answered. "But you did not know the type of man you were dealing with. You have made Mrs. Munson's name common gossip."

"That's a lie, Munson. It is your self," answered Fremantle furiously. "Let me pass."

"You are not going to pass," said Munson. "At least, one of us is not going to leave this room."

"Heroes, eh?"

"As you will. Will you fight like a gentleman, or like a tough?"

"Oh, like a gentleman, of course," said Fremantle.

He did not stir from his position as Munson, going to the wall, flung open a cabinet and brought out two pistols. Each had a curious arrangement fixed to the muzzle. Fremantle looked at them curiously.

"You mean it, Munson? May I ask what purpose these contrivances serve? To catch the bullet?"

"Silences," said Munson briefly. He threw open the French windows. "The winter steps out upon the lawn and gets away. You will have no difficulty. I have arranged my affairs. There is a train in twenty minutes. One shot suffice; at a yard's distance, in a thickened room."

"You seem to have thought it all out," said Fremantle, sneering still. "But before you begin, you may as well know—"

"Are you ready?" demanded Munson. He saw his enemy's face whiten. He was surprised at his own resolution. Fremantle let the muzzle of his weapon drop irresolutely, but Munson held his own covering the other.

"I shall switch off the light," he continued. "We will wait until the clock begins to chime the hour. Then we will fire together."

"You may as well listen to reason," suggested Fremantle.

Munson's hand went out and snapped the switch. The room was in complete darkness. The two men faced each other, but each could see nothing. Neither could hear the other breathe. Munson wondered if his pistol still covered his enemy.

There was a minute still, and out of the darkness came the voice of Fremantle.

"You may as well listen to me, Munson."

he said. "It won't prevent your shooting. Mrs. Munson knew that you had ceased to care for her. She did all in her power to win your love. At last I discovered what the trouble was. You know we were like brother and sister in the old days."

Munson set his teeth and strained his ears for the chime. His pistol did not waver in his hand.

"I suggested the scheme, Munson. I told her that you were not a bad sort of man, that if you realized what you might lose you would feel differently. I designed to make you jealous; but I did not mean anyone else to see. That's all."

"You lying hound!" snarled Munson. And at that instant he heard the quaver of the clock as it prepared to chime, and pressed the trigger.

There came no echo to the muffled sound of the discharge. For a fearful instant he hesitated. Had he killed Fremantle? He strained his ears, but could hear nothing save the clock striking.

"Have you fired?" he demanded as the chimes subsided.

There was no response. Nervously he stretched out his hand and switched on the light. Fremantle stood quite still, watching him, his pistol drooping in his hand.

"If that's all, Munson—" he began. Munson dashed his pistol down and burst into tears from the reaction.

"You've had your triumph, curse you!" he whimpered. "My life's yours. Why didn't you shoot? Why didn't you? I'm going—"

He stepped out through the window. He was going away. Fremantle had won; he had refused to shoot when he could have killed him. Doubtless he meant to make the most of the triumph, and he meant more to him under the circumstances than it would if he were a murderer or a fugitive.

At the edge of the lawn Munson hesitated and looked back. Fremantle was still in the library. He stood beneath the light of the electric bulb. He had wrapped a handkerchief about his hand and held the pistol away. As Munson watched him he saw the door open and his wife appear upon the threshold.

Munson had never gazed upon his wife, but at the sight of her a madness rose in his brain. Fremantle would tell her of his triumph. A love scene was imminent. Why should he not kill them both?

He acted upon the thought. He crept toward the window again, halting in the shadow of a tall evergreen outside. As he did so he saw the gleam that Fremantle had laid down. It lay hidden from his wife's view, but plain in Munson's sight, behind a pile of books upon the library table. And Munson remembered that it had not been discharged.

His hand went out toward it, but was arrested by his wife's words.

"Where's Jim?" she asked.

"I think he has stepped outside," said Fremantle, unconcernedly.

Edith Munson hesitated, looked at Fremantle. Then she put her hand to her face and began to sob softly.

"I can't bear it any longer," she said. "Harry, it has failed. He doesn't care for me. You can't win love by any such trick as that. He is tired of me, Harry."

"No," said Fremantle, bravely. "It was a misunderstanding on both sides."

She looked up quickly. "You have been talking with him!" she cried. "How do you know that? How do you know?"

Fremantle stood before her. "Edith," he said, "tell me one thing: Do you love your husband?"

"With all my heart and soul," she answered.

The fingers of the man outside, which were groping for the pistol, fell as it paled to his side. He shrank back from the window as Fremantle came out. Fremantle turned, and their eyes met.

"Harry!" Jim Munson began.

"Go to her," said Fremantle, seeing that he had overheard.

"Harry, I wronged you. Will you forgive? A man doesn't often have such a friend, and to wrong him—"

Their hands met. "Go to her," Fremantle answered, and strode swiftly across the lawn in the direction of the railroad station.

"You mean it, Munson? May I ask what purpose these contrivances serve? To catch the bullet?"

"Silences," said Munson briefly.

He threw open the French windows. "The winter steps out upon the lawn and gets away. You will have no difficulty. I have arranged my affairs. There is a train in twenty minutes. One shot suffice; at a yard's distance, in a thickened room."

"You seem to have thought it all out," said Fremantle, sneering still.

"But before you begin, you may as well know—"

"Are you ready?" demanded Munson. He saw his enemy's face whiten. He was surprised at his own resolution. Fremantle let the muzzle of his weapon drop irresolutely, but Munson held his own covering the other.

"I shall switch off the light," he continued. "We will wait until the clock begins to chime the hour. Then we will fire together."

"You may as well listen to reason," suggested Fremantle.

Munson's hand went out and snapped the switch. The room was in complete darkness. The two men faced each other, but each could see nothing. Neither could hear the other breathe. Munson wondered if his pistol still covered his enemy.

Prominent churchmen from all parts of the Southwest attended the annual state convention of the New Mexico Baptist church at Las Cruces.

Emilio D. Tafoya, town marshal of Magdalena, was wounded three times by his wife, from whom he had been separated for a week. Tafoya, in a hospital in Albuquerque, is expected to recover.

A complaint signed by Regino Gonzales has been filed in the office of the district attorney at Las Vegas, charging Frederico Jacoby with the murder of Valentino Gonzales near midnight on Nov. 1 in San Augustin.

Total crop products in the state of New Mexico for the past year totalled $1,527,000 according to estimates released by R. F. Hare, agricultural statistician of the state of New Mexico. Mr. Hare estimated the value of the year's cotton crop at $5,280,680; wheat at $6,155,320; corn at $4,939,200; hay at $4,860,000; beans at a little more than two and a half millions, and oats, barley, rye, apples, peaches, pears, grapes, potatoes and other crops at under $1,000,000 each. The statistician's valuation of live stock sold during the past year placed $75,000 head of cattle at $9,850,000; 800,000 sheep at $3,000,000, and wool and mohair, poultry and eggs and milk products at various figures ranging from two to seven millions. The total was placed at $26,156,000.

According to the latest industrial survey for Arizona released from the office of Quince Record, director of the U. S. Employment Service of the U. S. Department of Labor at Denver, the labor supply and demand are quite well balanced in all lines, except for some shortage of cotton pickers, experienced metal miners and for a small number of competent farm workers and woodsmen. Harvesting of the cotton crop is under way in the Tucson, Yuma and Salt River Valley districts. Harvesting and shipping of the citrus fruit crop in the above-named districts are providing employment for several hundred male and female workers. Metal mining continues to show a gradual expansion, particularly of new construction and development work. Work is progressing on the new $750,000 concentration mill at Jerome, where a slight surplus of unskilled metal labor exists due to a heavy influx of miners from northern camps. A scarcity of both skilled and unskilled metal mine labor is noted in the Ajo metal-mining district. Building and general construction continues active in many of the cities and towns. Excepting a slight surplus of carpenters, building and construction labor of all classes reported quite steadily employed. Many industrial plants, particularly those manufacturing construction equipment, are increasingly active. Cotton gins are operating overtime. Manufacturing labor well employed and ample. Lumbering is increasingly active, especially in the Flagstaff and McNary districts; a night shift was recently added at the McNary sawmills. Increased employment noted on highway construction with sufficient labor available in the vicinities of the work. Railroad train service and maintenance employment slightly increased. Sufficient railroad labor reported available to supply immediate demands in all departments. For New Mexico the report states that while seasonal fall harvesting (excepting cotton) is practically finished, released labor is finding employment in general agricultural work, including cotton picking. Hundreds of additional cotton pickers are needed in the cotton districts in southeastern section of the state. Industrial plants are reported operating steadily; cotton gins working overtime. Metal mining is gradually expanding. Supply of experienced metal miners is inadequate to meet requirements. Coal mines are increasing operating time and forces. A slight shortage of coal miners is reported. Oil field activities show some increase particularly noted in northwestern and southeastern sections of the state; labor in connection sufficient. Lumbering is increasing in the woods, particularly in the Bernallillo district where a moderate storage of wood exists. General construction continues quite active in many of the cities and towns. A large sawmill and a large electric light and power plant are under way at Alamogordo. A gas and electric plant is being installed at Bernallillo. Building labor of all classes is reported steadily employed and ample. Highway construction is affording employment to several hundred men. New highway projects soon to commence, include approximately thirty-five miles of surfacing, eight miles of paving, five steel and eight wooden bridges. Railroad train service forces were slightly increased during October.

Protein, vitamins, and calories without salt were fed members of the Pecos Valley Medical Association at their gathering in Carlsbad, when they were guests of the Carlsbad Chamber of Commerce.

A total of $112,000 will be required to rebuild bridges in Ocieochee county, Ariz., which were damaged or destroyed during the heavy rains last month.

The forty-second annual convention of the New Mexico Educational Association was held in Santa Fe.

quests, those little final touches that make company a success!

But spread the wings of a beautiful screen in the doorway—and all is well. An atmosphere of delicious mystery is created. It is far more intriguing to fancy what surprises lie beyond those outstretched wings—than to have them folded back upon the pretty scene—than it is to march through the conventional door into the technically proper dining room of yesterday.

And what a flaming-aggressive beauty the screen may be—or what a denied the comfort and inspiration of good pictures, or the vista into rooms beyond that mirrors give.

Why, panels from the loveliest kind of a background for pictures of the right size and shape and framing. Panels are themselves glorious frames that invite lovely scenes to come and settle down within their bounds.

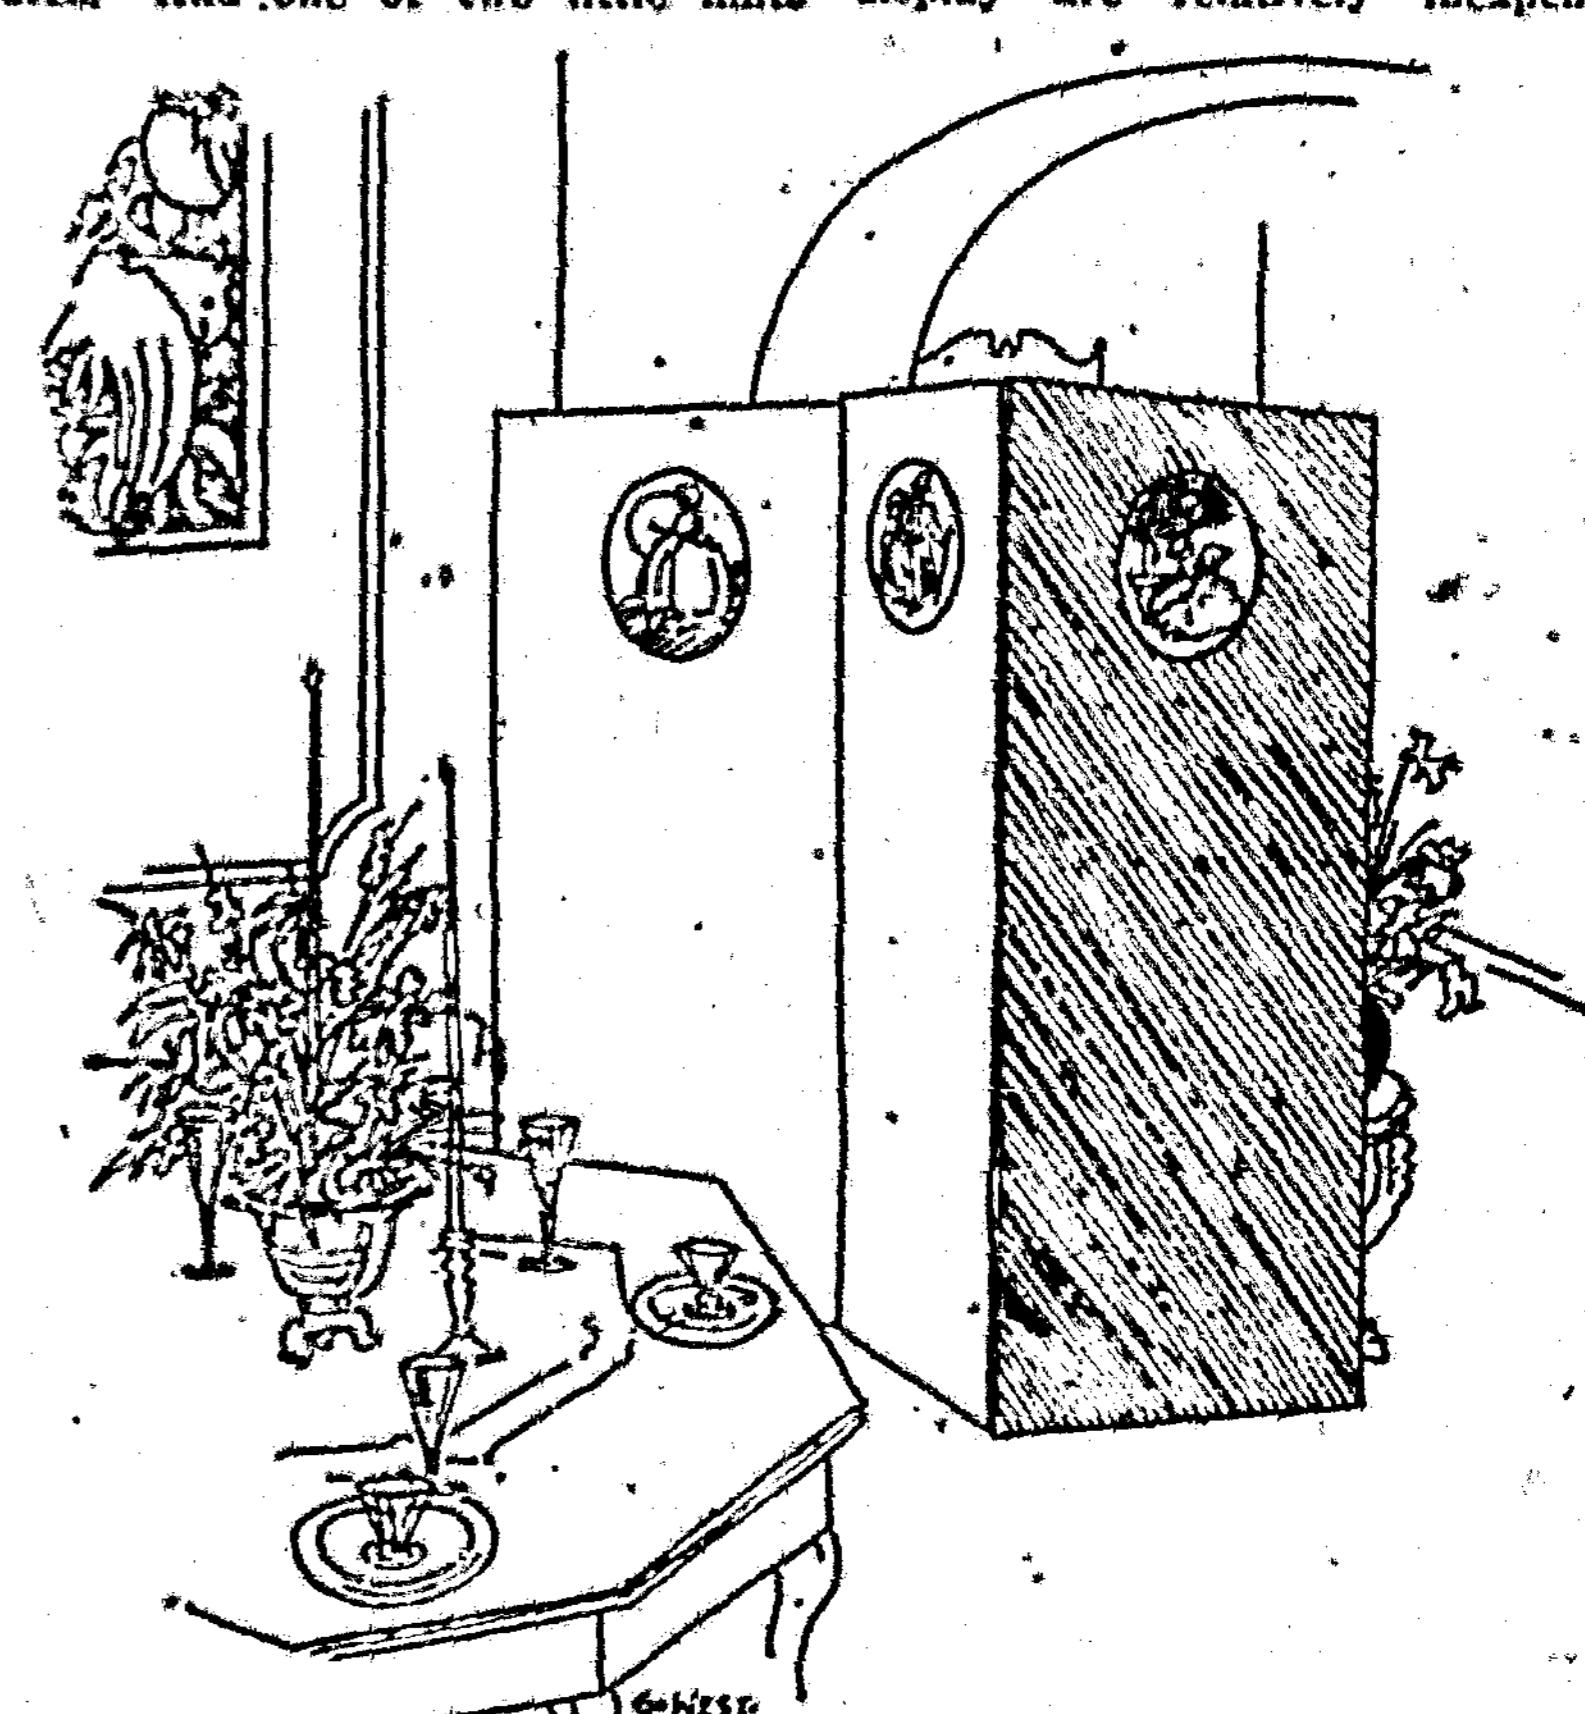

We have a splendid illustration of this truth in the sketch given above. Do you not feel in this development of panels and pictures a sense of completeness, a fine dignity that is lacking in rooms with plain walls?

Many other illustrations could be given to further emphasize the value of paneling as a background for pictures. And one or two little hints of paneling! One most satisfying development—beloved by the decorator and easy for the layman to plan—is the screen of prints, which so cunningly develops the personality of its room.

For this treatment prints are mounted on the screen base in groups, or simply at the head of panels, as you see illustrated above. Landscape prints suggest friendliness; ships lend dignity and formality to the room; silhouettes on a background of dull blue and ivory hint of Colonial days; hunting prints give dash and color; the flower and fruit medallions are very decorative, too.

Many of the lovely screens now on display are relatively inexpensive.

help to get the most pleasing results. As you contemplate the paneled wall spaces in your home with relation to pictures and mirrors, see that in size and shape they suit your panels, and you have complied with the first rule which, unbroken, might wreck your decorative scheme.

Another point of importance is the frame. Where there are panels, the picture frame should not be too heavy or too ornate. Better to have it one of those lovely, indefinite polychrome frames whose soft tones and tasteful carvings blend into both picture and wall tinting.

In the large rectangular panel, the picture should be fairly large, of about the same general proportions as the panel.

We are all in deep need of lovely pictures to carry us out into the world, away from our own little two-by-four doorway and its too familiar scenes into that boundless realm of beauty and adventure that lies beyond. Panels need not deprive us of this chance to roam if we make an artistic job of hanging good pictures on them.

In these days of dining "alcoves" instead of "dining rooms," decorators and country home-makers are not overlooking the double chance for service and beauty afforded by the screen. The splendid equipment in the shop alone would tell us that.

Though its decorative possibilities are obvious, even before we consider artistic details, the practical use of the screen in modern homes is suggested.

Without its friendly shelter the dining alcove would indeed be a make-shift for all but strictly family life. There are to be guests for dinner. As well think of fastening up one's dress in public as to administer to the table in full view of one's
