And now the board adjourned as a board of canvassers and convened as a board of county commissioners. The following named persons were appointed to serve as judges of election for the election to be held January 14th 1901, the same being the second Monday thereof, to elect justices of the peace and constables in the several precincts in said county.

The short session of the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States convened in Washington last Monday and established a record for itself by the promptness with which it has gotten down to business that will be hard for future congresses to come up to. There was an utter lack of the tiresome delays in getting down to work that has heretofore characterized the assembling of that great body. The work of the session had been outlined by the various committees before hand and the first day found both houses ready to take up the actual work of the session. It now remains to be seen whether the party in power is as prompt to redeem the pledges it has made to the people as it was to enter upon its duties.

THIS DISTRICT GETS A JUDGE.

Present District Attorney Appointed to Succeed Judge Leland.
Hon. Silas Alexander, of Socorro, was appointed an Associate Justice of the Supreme court of New Mexico by President McKinley this week. He will assume the duties of judge of the Fifth District immediately upon his qualification.
Judge Alexander has been a resident of New Mexico for many years and during that time has held several positions of honor and trust, among them that of Secretary of New Mexico. At the last session of the legislature he was appointed district attorney for Lincoln and Socorro counties, and has made a fine record in that position.
The appointment of a New Mexican is the first step towards home rule for this territory. While many Lincoln county people would have been pleased to see Colonel G. W. Pritchard of this county appointed, there is no man outside of Lincoln county who would be preferred to Judge Alexander. The appointment will leave a vacancy in the office of district attorney for this district to be filled the next session of the legislature.

Notice.
We, the undersigned, hereby give notice to all persons, that we will file complaint against any person or persons who in the future may peddle beef or any kind of meats in this county without license.

There are few people who decline an increase of salary, but the Rev. George C. Lorimer, pastor of the Tremont Temple in Boston, is one of the few. His congregation recently voted him an increase of $1,000 a year, but he has declined the increase, stating that his present salary of $7,000 a year is quite enough.

A collection of political curiosities would properly include President Pierce's cabinet, the only one in the history of the country which remained unchanged during the four years of an administration. It is remarkable that the cabinet of Lord Salisbury, which consisted of nineteen members, had not suffered a single change in the five years since the summer of 1885, when the present government took office.

In some grottoes in Algeria French explorers have recently discovered stone implements mingled with the remains of extinct animals belonging to Quaternary times. Further explorations indicate that during the age when grottoes were inhabited the coast of Algeria had a configuration different from that of today. Among the animals associated with the ancient human inhabitants of Algeria were the rhinoceros, the hippopotamus, and various species of ruminants.

"The Bright Side of Humanity," a new book by Dr. Edward Litchell Pell, is said to be the first serious attempt that has ever been made to present the characteristic noble traits of all races. In the preparation of his book Dr. Pell examined one thousand works of travel and although all of them set forth with considerable detail the vices and disagreeable traits of the people which they profess to describe, only two hundred dwell at any length on their virtues. To supply the compensatory happy thoughts and must have been a pleasant task.

Little has been said, and probably a little thought, of the beneficent work done by the railroads in aiding and promoting the measures set on foot for the relief of stricken Galveston. Thousands of refugees from that city received free transportation to any part of the country, and immense quantities of supplies were rushed forward without charge. This ready response to the cry of human need characterized all the great railway systems of the country, the express, telegraph, and telephone companies. The cash value of the services thus rendered is as impossible to estimate as the amount of human suffering and misery they helped to alleviate.

One of the most peculiar suits at law ever brought before any court is soon to be tried in Van Buren county, Michigan, between two neighbors and old friends. One of the men, H. D. Hurrell of South Haven, keeps about sixty colonies of bees. The other is a peach grower. A few months ago the latter complained of the former's bees destroying the early Crawford peaches, claiming that the bees came into his orchard in large numbers, bit holes in the fruit and rendered it unmarketable for which he demanded $200. A Last Gift.

BY KATE M. CLAWRY.

(Copyrighted, 1900, Daily Story Pub. Co.) The click-click-clatter of her busy typewriter ceased. She looked across the room at the man stretched on the lounge. A tablet lay beside him. A pencil was held loosely between the idle fingers of his right hand—a thin, languid, transparent hand, with tapering finger-tips and a sure vein. He had lain so far an hour, during which the metallic clamor of her machine had never ceased. Occasionally he had coughed, and now and then his eyelids had closed in the drowsy lassitude of invalidism.

"No inspiration, Duke?" she questioned gently. "Not an idea. I'm wondering how I ever wrote the stuff I did last year. Every one said it was good. I don't feel fit to do the commonest reporting now. One of these days," he concluded with a wan smile, "you'll be gathering the laurels—not I."

"No," shaking her head decidedly. "Never that. I can grind out medical essays, and nice little stories with happy endings, and dull, instructive, perfectly proper articles the accuracy of which is vouched for by the cyclopedias. But the divine spark never burned in my brain."

A tablet lay beside him.

She was a thin, brown little woman. She had luminous hazel eyes under straight, black brows, lots of straight, soft, black hair, and a nervous way of smiling. "You've made more money in the past three months than I have in six," he declared. There was a note of irritation in his voice.

She laughed. "The wages of mediocrity," she commented. She left her typewriter table with a bang of orderly printed MSS upon it, and the bulging envelopes propped against the wall at the back. "It's no use," she said, "you've got to go away somewhere. Chicago is killing you. You're burning out. We must manage it—somehow."

She knelt beside the lounge, putting one hand on his hot forehead. He was a handsome fellow even in his run-down physical condition. The brow was broad, the nose perfect, the line of jaw long and sweeping. In the sea-blue eyes was a look at once intimate and lingering, which had flattered many susceptible women.

"That's my life," she said. "I don't see how it can be done." "It must be done," she said. "Where would it be best for you to go?" "To Colorado, I suppose—if you can manage it."

"I'll try," she took the tablet and pencil away. She slipped a small volume into his hand. "Don't think about work just now. Here's Hockett. Read that."

She went back to the machine. For another hour her fingers danced over the keys. Then it was time to rock their little supper. She looked across the bed with a pensive smile of home-coming. Their brief year together had had been a happy one. She had loved her brilliant husband dearly, and had been proud of his literary achievements. She could only believe when his unusual ability extinguished and overshadowed her best efforts. It would be very desirable with him away, but there would always be work, heads of work. And work is a wonderful passion.

superior was not... to read him the... of these days. Of course it was pleasant to be able to move about, and enjoy the numerous beauties of this bewitching Colorado. The women had started back away—April had cried her approving heart out—Molly had pined, a cool, fair maiden, all blue and gold,—"the deep, red June" had drawn her last lovely breath, and July was drifting towards sultry extinction, before Maraudine Fernald forsook the fantastic beauty of western altitudes, and came back to the calm sides and pleiad plains of Illinois.

Doris met him rapturously. She was radiant—almost beautiful—with the joy of welcome long-deferred. Tall, erect, bronzed, smiling, he was handsomer than ever. He accepted her eager greetings complacently. Yet, it was good to get back. He had never felt so fit. He hoped she was all right. She must have worked hard to get so much work written and accepted. But, somehow, despite his caresses, Doris felt more forlorn the night of his homecoming than she had during his months of absence. She fought the strange conviction that he had changed, but it would not be downed.

They were apparently as close chums as they had ever been. He talked freely of his journalistic aspirations—frankly, it seemed, also, of his personal experiences in the Rockies. He praised her numerous late successes, which had been social as well as artistic. But there was something she missed in him—something which of old he had, which now he lacked. Or, was it the intrusion of a new and alien interest which she noticed? Was it the introduction of an unknown personal interest in his life which had wrought the subtle alteration? Or was she merely imaginative—unduly apprehensive?

"I fancy," she said to him one day, "that you are doing better work than hitherto—deeper, richer work. It seems to have a new element."

He looked beyond her with narrowed, dreamy eyes. "I should not wonder," he answered. "One night he was going to a dinner—a function of importance. Doris was getting his clothes together for him as was her habit. A pair of cuff buttons he treasured—an heirloom—she could not find. Perhaps she had forgotten to remove them from his dress suit case when he returned. She found the buttons in the case—also a picture. It had been thrust between the lining and the leather of the case—a space cut to permit its passage. She sat a long time looking at it. The photograph was that of a woman in the full maturity of sumptuous beauty. The pose, the bared bosom, the lovely, languorous face recalled Meredith's Lady of Carabass:

"Gently she leaned on one round, white With that regal, indolent air she had so confident of her charms!"

On the back was written a line—just a few tender words. Doris Fernald's little brown face flamed. She carried the picture to her husband where he stood, ready-dressed save for the links she had gone to find.

"Who is she?" she asked. "Suddenly," before he replied, she knew that all which had perplexed her was plain and clear. In that moment, before the dumb, gorgeous challenge of that piece of card-board, she felt her own physical insignificance as she had never felt it before.

Doris Fernald flushed, stammered, was silent. "Don't ask me to—I can't tell you, Doris."

"You must tell me!" she insisted, quietly. Indeed, she frightened him a little, she was so quiet.

"It would be better if you were not to say any—"

She showed him the line on the reverse of the card. "Is this the woman you love?"

There was the alliance of the grave between them. She heard the ticking of his watch where it lay on the dressing-table.

"Doris," he said, one hand outflung, "you know I love you!" "Yes," Her fat bosom rose sharply. "You thought so—once." "I didn't mean that," he spoke hoarsely. "You have given me every thing—health, hope, new courage, opportunities. You are the best wife in the world, Doris, and—"

She broke in with a passionate exclamation. "I cannot accept gratitude," she said. "Oh, no. You love her, then, and she is not free?"

He bowed his head in shame at her.

"And you think you could be happy with—with her?" She was hoping with all her straining soul that he would make denial. But none came.

UNUSUAL CHARITY.

The Boston Plan Known as the Farm- and Fruit Offering.

Boston has a unique charity which might well be patterned after by other large cities. It is known as the Farm- and Fruit Offering, and the idea originated with Edward Everett Hale. In the year in which the scheme was put into operation the farmers in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, as well as those in Massachusetts, sent to Boston as a gift the surplus of their fruit crop, and this was distributed among the very poor people of the city. A great many families were thus provided with fruit who never before had such a luxury in quantity. It was even said that a large number of children tasted fruit for the first time in their lives when they received that gift from the farmers. This year there is again a tremendous crop of apples, one that has made the fruit a drug in the market, unless it is of the best quality. That surplus is now being shipped to Boston for distribution through a charitable organization that works without pay. The railroads bring the stuff to the city without cost. This year, in addition to apples, there are coming considerable quantities of onions, turnips, squash, some pears, and a few potatoes. The surplus of the latter crop keeps the offerings of that sort down to the lowest. A few farmers who were lucky enough to get a good crop in this dry season are willing to give away their surplus potatoes rather than sell them, as they usually could. These gifts will aggregate several thousand bushels, mostly apples. Apple parties are organized to visit orchards when a farmer writes that he will give the fruit to the society if they will send men to pick and pack it. The young people who join these parties have a jolly time while engaged in this practical charitable work.

FLAGSTAFF'S ICE MINE.

An Inexhaustible Underground Supply for a Town in Arizona.

Flagstaff, a comfortable logging town on the Santa Fe Pacific railway in Arizona, has been provided by nature with the queerest ice-making plant known. During the past summer a large part of the town's ice supply has been secured from caves in the pine woods, nine miles to the southward. The caves are in lava formation, the geological capping of the entire country. Entering to the main cavern, through a narrow slit in the malpais rock, necessitates a vertical drop of ten feet to the floor of a passage that runs farther in, till blocked by ice barriers. The temperature in the caves, even in the height of summer, is about the freezing point. Many visitors have been prostrated by the cold after making too long a stay. The ice, which is as hard as ice can be, fills every nook and cranny beyond the short black hallway that leads inward from the entrance. When dug away to whatever quantity, it seems to grow again from behind in the manner of the creep of glaciers. The depth or size of the deposit is not known. It is even believed that there is an underground ice lake of immense dimensions. How the deposit was formed is a puzzle that has not been solved by the geological ice miners. The region is almost destitute of surface or well water and the mean temperatures are far above the thermometric figure that would appear to render such a deposit possible. But the ice is there and the product of the unique mine has been sold daily in Flagstaff.

Healing Malaria Malaria.

It is announced that Prof. Koch, bacteriologist, of Berlin, who has lately been hunting the microbes of malaria in Java and other hot countries, has perfected a medicine which is to be of the highest value in all malarial countries. It is half quinine, is to be used hypodermically and also as a swallowable medicine, and is commended both as a cure and as a preventive of malaria. Malaria is very much on the minds of wise men in many countries just now. The disposition to blame it all on the mosquito is supported so far by many experiments. Not only has health been maintained in malarious districts where effective precautions against mosquitoes have been taken, but Italian mosquitoes fed in Rome on tertian-fever patients and brought to London and allowed to bite a healthy man have infected him with tertian fever. If the rule, "no mosquito, no malaria," be demonstrated, it will be a great gain; for mosquito bites are not so unavoidable as may be thought.

Boston's Ignorance of Colonization.

The Boston Athenaeum has long contained three busts which no one in that city was able to identify. The assistant librarian, a young woman, has just recognized them as excellent likenesses of Lewis Cass, the great statesman; Nicholas Biddle, one of the most eminent financiers of the century; and a Russian prince, known all over the world.

Turkey's Christian Mission.

Most of the Turkish ministers to the different countries are Christians. The present ministers to the United States and England are Greeks, and belong to the Greek Catholic church. One Turkish minister, a Christian, served Turkey for forty-four consecutive years in London.

Free Dinner 100 Years Old.

The oldest Free Dinner in the world is John Adams' Free Dinner of Boston, Oct. 20, 1789. It was the first, and it is the best. It is still healthy and popular.

Photographic Printing.

There seems to be a likelihood that before long movable types for printing will be done away with altogether, and their function, hitherto regarded as indispensable in the art, performed by ingenious photographic processes. The books of the near future, it is predicted, will be made by photography, and it is not improbable that even newspapers will be issued by methods in which the camera and dry plate will take the place of the font of metal letters and the stereotype from a paper matrix—Saturday Evening Post.

Self-Culture is Possible.

Self-culture is possible, not only because we can enter into and search ourselves—we have still a nobler power, that of acting on, determining, and forming ourselves. This is a fearful as well as a glorious endowment, for it is the ground of human responsibility. We have the power not only of tracing our powers, but of guiding and impelling them; not only of watching our passions; but of controlling them; not only of seeing our faculties grow but of applying to them means and influences to aid their growth.—W. E. Channing.
