Many have been killed in Venezuela in the recent battles there. That is not revolution—it is war.

Paying a young man $62.50 a month for handling a business amounting to $1,500,000 looks very much like an invitation to crime.

Won the Poet's Heart.

Passengers who go downtown on the Sixth avenue elevated train at a certain time every morning have long noticed the mutual animosity of Mr. Dolby and the man with prominent blue eyes and bushy red hair. Somehow those two always happen to find neighboring seats, and the way they used to exchange belligerent glances and sharp remarks prepared onlookers for a real battle at any stage of the game. Last week, however, the enemies appeared to fly a flag of truce. For the first time during their acquaintance they approached each other in a Christian manner. The passengers were mystified, and as they are still wondering over the suddenly developed spirit of brotherly love, it seems the duty of those who know to volunteer a brief explanation.

In the first place, Mr. Dolby's personality must be considered. He is a poet. As he is fortunate enough to get a few of his lyrics published he also reads them. When in a jocular mood he says he does this because if he doesn't read the stuff nobody else will. One morning Mr. Dolby left his boarding house in a dispirited mood. A poem of his had appeared in a morning paper and had afforded much breakfast table comment of a caustic nature. Mr. Dolby was still wrestling with the barbs thus lodged in his sensitive bosom when he entered the train and sat down beside the red-headed man. The red-headed man was aggressive. He gouged Dolby's side with his elbow. Dolby gouged back.

What the red-headed man said then was not intended for publication. The two men glared at each other for a few minutes, then subsided without coming to blows. The red-headed man opened his paper. Presently Dolby was astonished to hear the other fellow laugh. He laughed out loud. Dolby turned and looked at him.

The man laughed again. That time Dolby looked at the paper, and as he looked he gasped, for what he saw was the red-headed man deliberately cutting a short poem from the paper. Then he began to read it again, with an appreciative chuckle.

"Good Lord!" said Dolby. He clasped the red-headed man's hand.

"My dear fellow," he said, "I want to apologize. I have been a brute, a bear, a barbarian. Will you forgive me?"

"I don't know," said the red-headed man. "Why do you want me to?"

"Because you are one of the best fellows going. I—I wrote that—that little poem you just cut out. I want to shake hands and make up."

The red-headed man was not resentful. Having a proper awe for genius, he admired Dolby as much as Dolby admired him, and nowadays they are real cronies.—New York Press.

Man and the Hereafter.

Any one who has followed the course of practical religious thought during the last few years cannot have failed to recognize the gradual lessening of emphasis upon the resurrection both of Jesus and of men. Even hymns that speak about heaven are reserved for funerals. There has grown up a habit of treating all matters pertaining to life after death by way of allusion. We are told that the resurrection is present in the higher life, the moral uplift in human hearts. That is why we have trouble in our preaching. That is why we have preferred to turn our ministers into entertainers rather than to keep them prophets and priests. That is why men do not listen to ethical preachers unless they are "interesting." A morality that hesitates to speak of heaven and hell is a very delicate, hectic mother of saints. You cannot get a man to be good on general principles. He wants to know something definite as to the outcome of his career. For practical purposes if there is no hell we must invent one; if there is no heaven we must invent that, too.

You tell us, you writers of beautiful sentences printed on thick, cream-colored paper and bound in beautiful covers, your tell us that we should sacrifice for the benefit of the people. But why? Why should not they sacrifice for us? Is it not just as much their duty to be altruistic as it is ours? You urge us to lay down our lives for the benefit of the race and for human solidarity, and tell us soul-thrilling stories borrowed from Victor Hugo. But why? Why should we sacrifice ourselves for posterity? If neither we nor they have anything more than a life here, why should we be so keen upon preserving a race of bipedal animals who wear clothes? Existence between birth and death does not seem to most of us sufficiently attractive to warrant maintaining it at all costs. And it is very difficult to discover the basis of morality in a stock farm. Convince us that the story of the gospel is true, and that death does not close the book for us and ours, and you convince us that life has its great values in the newer stage for development into which men are going. Then we have something definite to think about, some hope worth acting upon, some motive that will lead to sacrifice. That sort of gospel will not be impotent.—Christendom.

The Heart's First Love.

In the utmost beginning of things—in that time when roosters were very large, and geese were fierce, and only mother could avert the thousand perils, heal the thousand wounds—existed a mythical partner established in family annals as "Your Little Sweetheart."

"Annie?" Don't you remember Annie? Why, she was your little sweetheart. You used to play together day in and day out. It was so cute to see you.

But, no. You may watch here a jot of blue ribbon, there an echo of a laugh, yet, try as you will, you may not recall her. Suddenly what your little sympathizer Annie was put about there with dresses and curls the like of which never was but she was the

THE GRASS.

The south wind bloweth power
I rouse ere on the tree
I come ere roves the bee;
I go not with the flower.

I climb the April hill;
I labor with the light;
I toil with hope and will;
I toil by day and night.

I crown the desert place;
I edge the meadow stream;
I look into love's face,

"If I But Knew"

Elinor glanced regulishly at the young man sitting dejectedly beside her on the sand at Milton point.

"You may have as many minutes as this sand takes to run through my fingers," she said, taking up a handful of warm, white sand from the beach. "And then if you continue to be disagreeable and cross, I'll—well, never mind, you'll regret it, Mr. Jack Robinson."

She let the soft sand trickle slowly through her sun-burned fingers like a minute glass as she hummed carelessly, softly, "If I But Know."

The young man turned impatiently and looked out across the broad expanse of water. How easily the white-winged yachts skimmed over the water. He wished his little craft of love would run so smoothly.

"Elinor," he said turning to her, "will you stop singing that song?"

"When your present fit of ill temper blows over," she retorted, watching the last few grains of sand fall from her fingers. "If I but know your heart was true," she hummed on, ignoring him.

"See here, what can I do to prove to you that I am sincere?" He watched her dust the sand from her pretty palm.

"Do? You make me feel like a princess of 'ye olden time.' Then brave knights won their ladies by acts of courage, but now—"

"Yes, now?" he said, looking up at her eagerly.

She Let the Soft Sand Trickle Slowly Through Her Sunburned Fingers.

"Oh, don't you like a man's [illegible]" she answered, [illegible] which chased away the frowns from Jack's brow. He could never be angry with her for long.

"Suppose we play we are living 100 years ago," she said, after a minute.

"I'll play anything you like."

"And do anything I like?" she asked, looking at him dubiously. Her tone was half-serious, half-playful.

"Anything," he replied, firmly. That is provided you'll accept that as proof that I love you. I've said all I can to no avail."

Elinor did not reply nor look up; she was tracing her name in the sand—thinking. She had tried to believe Jack, but, somehow, at times, she doubted that he really meant all he said.

"He was such a serious sort of a fellow, and she—O, she was frivolous and scatter-brained, according to her own estimate of herself. Why should he love her? And yet, why should he say so if he did not?

At last she covered the sand letters over and looked up. "Jack," she said, "would you really do anything for me? Even if it was silly and—and awfully dangerous—just to prove to me that you like me?"

"Not to prove that I like you, but that I love you—yes." He laughed a little at her serious face.

"Do you see that big rock out there?" She pointed to a large rock just in the edge of the now low tide.

"I do."

"You know when the tide is high it is a long distance from the shore? The water almost covers it and splashes around it and makes a terrible noise."

"Does it?" he asked, amused.

"Yes, and unless one is a very good swimmer one cannot possibly get in until the tide goes out again, if one is caught out there it would be awful to stay there all night."

Elinor shivered at the very thought of it. Should she go on?

"And what then? Who ever stayed out there all night?" he asked, knowing well what was coming.

"Why—why, nobody," she hesitated. "Would you do it?"

"Do you ask me to?" He looked at her intently. She was building a pyramid of sand.

"I—I'd believe you if you did." she said at length, and looked into his eyes to see how he would receive the suggestion.

"And you'd like to believe me, Elinor? Tell me that—but, no, don't; I'll do it. Are we not living a hundred years ago?"

Elinor wished now that he had proposed to do it. Now she had [illegible] come up and the waves would dash over the rock and sweep him off and—and he was not able to swim far enough to reach the shore.

"Jack," she said, a little nervously, "let's move forward a hundred years; I don't like it way back here. I—I might believe you."

But Jack would not pass over the century so quickly. He would do as she had asked him; he would spend the night on the big rock and then she might believe him.

Elinor sat in the window of their summer cottage on the shore and watched the tide come in, wave by wave. One by one the shadows fell and the figure cut on the rock became less and less distinct. At last she had to go out to the beach to see it at all.

Higher and higher grew the water mark about the rock and yet the figure did not move; it sat on the topmost point, looking out over the sound.

At last it was too dark to see the figure on the rock and Elinor walked up and down the beach in front of the cottage. She was supposed to have retired, but somehow it seemed to useless to pretend to sleep.

She wondered if the ladies in the centuries long ago slept on as usual while their knights were in danger. O, she wished tomorrow would come when she might live again in the twentieth century.

The searchlight of a sound steamer was thrown on the rock, and by its light she could see the waves break and smash about the ragged edges.

Running close to the water's edge, she looked up and down for a skiff, one of the "old" flat boats she and Jack so often fished in. Finding one far up on the shore, she dragged it down to the water and jumped in.

Stroke by stroke she pulled out toward the big rock, but the tide was strong and the boat heavy. It seemed hours before she came anywhere near it.

"Jack, Jack!" she called. "I'm—O it's such hard pulling."

"Elinor," was all Jack said as he took hold of the rope with one hand and hers with the other. The place was not nearly so rough as it had looked from a distance.

"Jump in," she said.

"But the night hasn't begun yet," he replied, still standing on the rock.

"What," she almost gasped. "I thought it must surely be morning and that it was never going to get light."

"It's only 11—and that wasn't late 100 years ago."

"Get in, Jack," she said, impatiently. She hoped no one was on the shore to see.

"I would, 'If I but knew,'" he said, meaningly.

"Then know, Jack, and do come."

As Jack walked home from the little cottage that night he thought 100 years was the shortest space of time imaginable. He broke into a happy whistle: "If I but knew—if I but knew!"—Ruby Douglas in Boston [illegible]

MODERN AMERICAN GIRL.

When I met her on the steamer
Coming back from foreign climes,
A bright maiden, did I deem her,
And we had some pleasant times.
She was bright in conversations,
And such learning she displayed
When we spoke of other nations
That I was in truth dismayed.

She'd a foreign education,
Knew the language of each land;
I was dumb with admiration
Though I could not understand,
But her English was affected,
And for this naught could atone,
Learning others she'd neglected
To study up her own.

She could read me quite a sermon
On the history of France,
When she spoke of legends German
I displayed gross ignorance.
And the bit I'd learned at college
Seemed ridiculous until
I discovered she'd no knowledge
Of the fight at Bunker Hill.
—Brooklyn Eagle.

"EZEKIEL"

"Well, Mr. 'Alliday, anybody 'ud think as you'd been turned into the streets a beggar instead of bein' comfortably settled in as smart a little shop as ever I clapped eyes on, and free of expense too!"

Ezekiel Halliday groaned as his eyes wandered round the bright, gaudily papered room and he bent his white head to hide a great tear that was slowly coursing down his cheek. Martin was a good soul, but why couldn't she leave him in peace!

"And 'ow anyone could fret themselves silly over that dirty old Booksellers' row is beyond me. It ought to 'ave been done away with years ago, and any clean and sensible person could see! Why, never a day passed but I bumped my poor 'ead against them pesky doorways, and as for that parlor be'ind the shop, it wasn't larger than a mousetrap and was just about as mouldy!"

"Mo an' my old girl found it comfortable enough for fifty happy years, Martha," the old bookseller broke out at length, stung by the contempt of the charwoman's voice. "And the muniments didn't prevent our living to a good old age. I'm 86 now and she only died two years ago come Christmas. I'm glad she didn't live to see the old place. Was it—was it there when you passed this morning, Martha?" he added piteously, folding his shaking hands over the worn head of his stick.

She eyed her hotly as she laid the cloth for tea.

"It was standing there right enough then," she replied irritably, "but they'll be down on it before you're up to-morrow, for his hat that hung on a peg. But Martha guessed his intention.

"Now, then," she said with well-meant firmness, "you don't leave this parlor till you've 'ad a fresh cup of tea. The men 'ull be leavin' off work now and if the old place is gone you won't bring it back by goin' off without a sup or bite."

Ezekiel fell back into his armchair with working lips.

"It's true," he moaned. "Nothing can bring the old things back, Martha! You're a young woman, and you don't see things like we do."

"Young, indeed!"

Martha was on the shady side of forty, so she was not ill-pleased at the soft impeachment.

"Well," she returned, slightly mollified, "I suppose we don't. All I know is that I'd—that I'd thank Providence on my bended knees if it 'ud give me a shop in the Charing Cross road. But there's the bell. The tea 'ull be ready by the time you come back."

Ezekiel rose and attended to his customer with the accustomed care and genial bonhomie which had made him quite a personality in Booksellers' row. Left alone, the smile died out of his eyes, and he drooped wearily over the freshly polished counter. "Yes, it was enough," he reflected, "this shop, with its linoleum-covered floor and shining brown shelves, its shrill electric bell and other modern conveniences; there was nothing missing—nothing but those subtle associations which alone create the real atmosphere of home. And no one knew, no one understood. . . ."

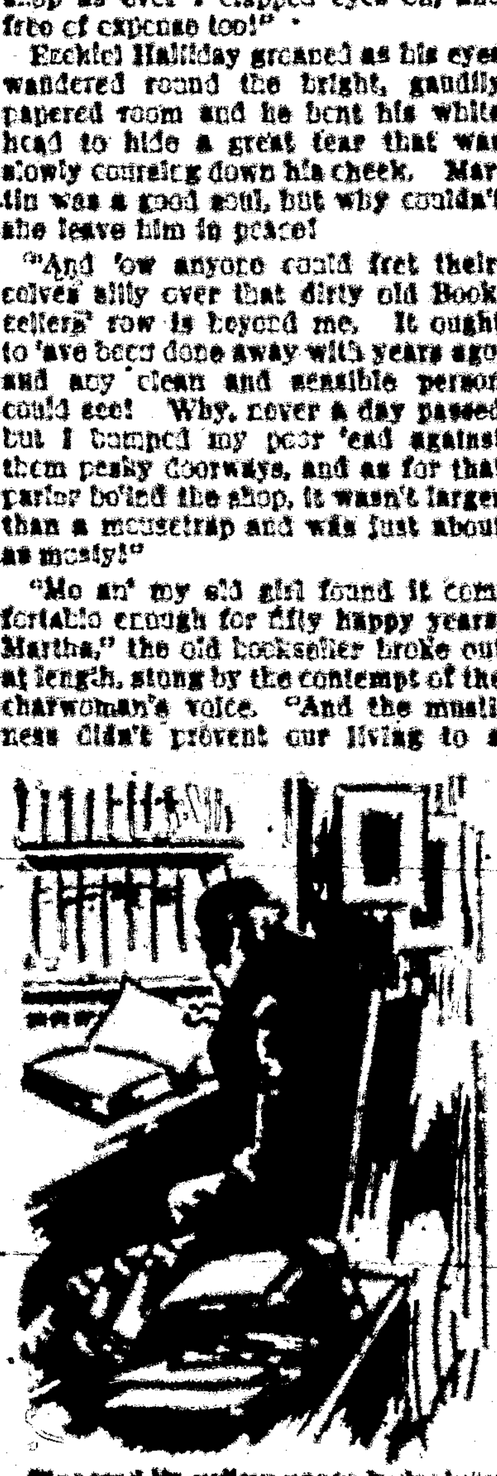
He took up a broken-backed volume lying at his elbow and fingered its yellow pages lovingly. It was a rare edition of "Pilgrim's Progress," much coveted by a certain celebrated moralist, who had imagined that the old man could not possibly understand its value.

Understand! Ezekiel straightened himself and chuckled at the idea. There wasn't a man in London that could hoodwink him into buying an imitation of the real article! Many a time Charles Dickens had tried to play a trick on him, and had doubted him to be "a wily old bugger." Martha's impatient voice behind the glass door recalled him to the pleas of realities of life.

"Come along now," she exhorted. "Drink your tea and eat this nice piece of buttered toast. I've cut all the crusts off."

The rough kindness of her tone as she pulled the cushion in his chair restored his self-possession and he [illegible]

Fingered its yellow pages lovingly.



"Nonsense. 'Aven't I known ye for the last twenty years, and didn't I lay out the poor old missus, avowin' all the time in my 'eart to see you comfortable every evenin', 'usband or no 'usband! And now," she added, with a quick change of voice, "I can't stay another minute; mine must be 'ome by this time and starvin'!"

Mrs. Martha Mugg was a typical charlady. She invariably alluded to her "other half" as "mine," and no one had ever seen her without the bonnet with red roses which always graced her grizzled locks.

Ezekiel sighed as the ample be-shawled figure passed out into the warm, gray evening. She had been a kind friend to him in her clumsy way. How would she get on, he wondered, with his grandson, the smart, up-to-date young man who was coming to-morrow to take charge of the business. He had long been too feeble in health to manage the shop, and at length he had taken Martha's advice and written to his dead daughter's eldest son. He could never have given in at the old place—but now—what did it matter!

Six o'clock struck from the old dim-faced clock. How queer and strange was the sound as it reverberated in the wide, high-ceilinged parlor!

Ezekiel rose stiffly, having finished his tea with a great effort, and once more reached out for the broad wide-awake he always wore.

"I shan't be long," he said to the boy whom he employed to do odd jobs about the shop.

A thin drizzle had set in as Ezekiel hobbled along the Charing Cross road.

It had been pouring wet weather for the last week or so, but every evening at about the same time the trembling old figure could have been seen making its way to the spot where the best of its life had been spent.

A confused mass of stones, bricks and mortar alone marked the place.

Ezekiel reached his goal at last, his dim eyes bent on the ground for very fear of what he dreaded to see. . . . But he had come to know. . . . With a jerk he raised his head. . . . Ah, dear heaven! It had been standing this morning, and now a confused mass of stones, brick and mortar alone marked the place.

Ezekiel stood still for a space, a pitiful figure in the falling rain. His jaw had dropped and the blue eyes were fixed in a piteous stare upon the ruins of what was once his kingdom.

"Why, Ezekiel," said a kindly voice at the old man's elbow, "what are you doing standing there in the rain, as if you'd lost yourself?"

Ezekiel recognized one of his customers.

"I was saying good-by to the old place," he replied humbly, making a feeble effort to raise his hat, "but I'd best be getting home now. Evening, sir."

The young journalist hurried on and the old man crept feebly down the busy thoroughfare. A strange numbness and weariness was stealing over him, and he turned heavily on the gaudily stick. Somewhere near here [illegible] should be. He would go in and [illegible] half pint of cider [illegible]

Nothing [illegible] was Short's, transformed and magnificent in its white paint. No, he would not go there. . . . If only he could find a seat. There was the Embankment. It would be quiet there.

Slowly and painfully Ezekiel made his way down a steep turning until he reached the wide, gray river.

How far off seemed the roar of the traffic as Ezekiel dropped heavily into an empty seat. Ah! he had no place in this new London with its broadened streets and its intolerance of old ways and customs.

The river alone had not changed, but flowed on grandly, majestically. Ezekiel watched it dreamily, conscious of a great, immense stillness that was stealing over everything. He was in the old shop again, talking and bargaining with Mr. Dickens. Above the short blind of red muslin that screened the parlor door he could catch glimpses of the little wife's bonny face as she laid his tea. She was singing softly to herself the while:

My love is like a red, red rose
That's newly blown in June,
My love is like a melody
That's sweetly played in tune.

The air was full of the sweet melody and now the river, too, was taking it up. But gradually even that sound faded. A barge passed by and disappeared into the dream like blue mist that was rising.

Ezekiel followed it with dazed, tired eyes for a second or so; then his head fell back and he drew a deep sigh as the stillness crept over his broken heart, lulling it to an everlasting sleep.

NOT A BLOOD RELATION

Death of Life's Partner Caused a Fine Distinction.

It was in one of the farming districts of New England. The young folks had banded themselves together for monthly jollifications during the winter and were about to celebrate the last dance of the season, as well as a couple of engagements which had resulted from the assemblies. Ben Hawkins, the local Paganini, and his Stradivarius had been engaged to lead them through the mazes of the country dance, and all were looking forward to the "time of their life."

But death inconsiderately claimed Mrs. Hawkins for his own on the afternoon of the eventful party. The young people gathered as arranged, but bemoaned the absence of "Ole Ben," and games were being substituted for the dancing, when lo! Hawkins and his fiddle appeared on the scene.

Great astonishment and many questions greeted the old man, but he calmly slipped his fiddle out of its green bag and as he meditatively rubbed the resin on the bow said:

"Wall, yes, Maria's gone; died this afternoon, but I reckon 'taint no sin for me to play for you to-night, seein' she wa'n't no blood relation."

A Canny Preacher.

Major Pond was a discreet man, but he occasionally told one celebrity a good story at the expense of another. One of his favorite stories was of an American preacher who preached in England under his management.

The sermons attracted greater audiences than either manager or preacher had expected, and at length, one night, as manager and manager sat talking upon the steps of a great London church after the delivery of a successful sermon in a neighboring hall, the dissatisfied preacher struck for higher wages, and brought such arguments to bear that the manager felt it necessary to yield.

It was a costly talk for Major Pond, but he keenly enjoyed the humor of the situation and took great pleasure in picturing the great preacher seated in the moonlight upon the cathedral step bargaining for higher pay for preaching the gospel.—New York Sun.

WHERE ALL IS PLAY

PARIS THE RECREATION SPOT OF ALL NATIONS.

Dull Care Has No Place in the Thoughts of the Inhabitants of the Gay Capital—Many Forms of Amusement.

La Belle Paris is the cry of the true born Frenchman and echoed by the civilized world of to-day, for is not the French capital the gay city par excellence? Generations have labored to drive away dull care, and only the Mimi.

Frenchman has solved the problem. There is care and labor and striving in France, as is the lot of human kind everywhere. But the Gaul, with his genius for precision, has resolved to have one place where one may at all times exercise the dull specter of lives that must at some stage knit its brows; where life may be gay and joyous in any measure, from the sober, sedate pleasures of the steady-going, to the wildest fantasies of the foolish spendthrift. All are served at Paris, whether bright or dull, rich or poor, sordid or spiritual, banal or not.

The French have always said so, and the world to-day makes the fair city on the Seine its play-yard. Amusement has there become a fine art. How it is done becomes therefore nowadays worthy of a serious study. F. Berkeley Smith has ventured, not perhaps a very serious attempt, but a light-hearted commentary by one evidently having a full knowledge at first hand of his subject. His "How Paris Amuses Itself," published by Funk & Wagnalls, bears on its face the impress of the real observer, who tells not how it may be done elsewhere, for that would need a Parisian tradition to make possible, but how Paris meets the task of amusing.

"What shall we do next?" says the weary new arrival in Paris, and Smith knows what he may do. There are the cafes, open air, where the passing throng may, if it will, appraise your mien, or envy your appetite. There is everything to see, often too much for sensitive souls, but art is not all staid and prim—and why the art of smiling? The restaurants range the evening, glittering or not, as the purse may prompt the choice. Here good taste and refinement rule; there, they do not, and, having dined, there are the smart circuses, permanent and complete like the Cirque Medrano, the Nouveau Cirque, the Cirque d'Hiver—not the draughty temporary world of canvas the rest of the world delights in. There is a choice of "pops" from the small Boule-Bouls, through the open-air concerts of the Champs-Elysees, the Concert des Ambassadeurs and the Alcazar d'Ete; the music halls, like the Folies Marigny, the Jardin de Paris, the Folies Bergere, the Casino and the Olympia; then the Opera, the Opera Comique and the Bouffes Parisiennes; smaller but more serious, musical affairs like the Concert Rouge; the shows and cabarets of Montmartre and those in the left shore, like the Noctambules and the Grillon; the cheap and decent suburban theaters, as well as the expensive and not so decent Palais Royal and Rabelais in the heart of the city; the daring, independent Theater Libre, the original Theater Antoine, the scenic displays of the Chatelet, light comedy at the Vaudeville interpreted by Rejane, the divine Sarah in her new theater, and the historic Francais—the list is well nigh endless.

The Paris restaurants "restore"; they are not merely places where one gets something to eat. The choice is endless. Here is the place where the cast resigned a year ago because the proprietor put prices on the menu. As if, forsooth, one could tell beforehand whether a "filet d'ours a la Francois Joseph" would be worth f.10 or f.20 when served. Yet even in these exquisite restaurants there is to be had an edition of the menu with prices that is apologetically handed to you when the maitre d'hotel discovers you are not a millionaire or a fool.

The story that Mr. Smith tells so charmingly might better be entitled "How Paris Amuses," not "Itself," but "Others." Paris amuses itself, as Boston amuses itself, soberly, decently, cheaply in the main, or, at least, economically, sacrificing nothing to ostentatious spending of money, unless a good profit is within reach. For the foolish visitor painting the Frenchman's beloved town "red," the Parisian will spread delectable traps for his money, traps that work with uniform success from every point of view, whether in immediate cash box results or in training unconscious advertising agents, who will spread the fame abroad to other gudgeons of the charms of the city by the Seine.

It is thus that the banalities of the numerous cafes, concert halls and small theaters earn a rich harvest. Thus at, say, the Rabelais, where the curtain falls discreetly upon situations so risque that even the Rabelais must draw the line. Yet there are many places like the Bodiniere, for example, that a Sunday school convention might safely include in its program. All tastes are served. The sober and decent enjoy their [illegible] the others enjoy the other [illegible] as is its subject in [illegible] hours, differ as much apparently as the Le-cile criticism of the lapsed and reconverted.

It is possible at the "Quat-Z'Arts" for a modest sum to hear Bonnaud sing. He has been secretary of Prince Bonaparte, been around the world several times, and is an accomplished man in many ways; or to hear, in the old songs of France, Bataille, who has been a successful lawyer and was once secretary to the minister of the interior; or to hear Georges Tiercy, of the same type of man, or Paul Delmet, or Henri Fursy, or Mlle. Odette Dulac, or Mme. Lawrence Deschamps. One may applaud and enjoy their talent and not be ashamed to tell of it.

These are the bal masques, the side shows, the fetes des fourrages, and then the programs, for it appears that three-fourths of vaudeville artists are Americans, English or Austrians, and in Paris the lady billed as "Miss Daisy Smith, Queen of the High Wire," will appear in London as "Mlle. Daisie Smythe, Reine du Fille de Fer," just as in London or New York what is on the bill of fare as "Chateaubriand aux pommes soufflees" becomes in Paris "Steak and fried potatoes." Thus does "Paris Amuse Itself."—Boston Herald.

TRAGEDY OF THE CAUCASUS.

Peasant Murdered His Son "at the Command of God."

In the village of Bayandour, in the Caucasus, lives a man named Ivan Aslamazoff, who a few weeks ago started the community by cutting the throat of his seven-months-old son on the threshold of the church. He was at once arrested and taken before a judge, whereupon he gave an extraordinary explanation of his conduct.

A few years ago, he said, he was very sick, and one night St. John appeared to him in a dream and took him into a valley, where he saw God seated on a throne of gold. The Almighty, he continued, then said to him: "Ivan, I will restore your good health to you, but in time you will have a son, and as soon as he is seven months old you must offer him up as a sacrifice." Aslamazoff said that many times since then he had prayed God to spare his son, but that, as the Almighty made no response, he considered it his duty to sacrifice him.

His story made a great impression on the people, and the general opinion was that he had acted like a saint and that the authorities had no right to arrest him.—New York Herald.

Links Past and Present.

A man who sang in the Rev. Patrick Bronte's choir in Haworth has just died, and the circumstance has directed attention anew to the fact that Charlotte Bronte's husband, the Rev. A. B. Nicholls, is still alive. He lives near Banagher, in Kings county, Ireland, and is described as a hale and hearty octogenarian. The author of "Jane Eyre" died forty-eight years ago. Though Mr. Nicholls married again, he reverently observes the anniversary of the birth and death of the famous woman who was his wife for a brief and pathetic period.

HUMOR OF THE DAY

Their Use.

"What I don't see," remarked the cheerful idiot, "is the use of scientists discovering new metals like radium and polonium, that costs thousands of dollars an ounce."

"It is done for the benefit of the future trillionaires," replied the wise guy. "They can get rid of some of their money by building yachts, automobiles and airships out of those metals."

A Fish Dinner.

Charlie once said that there was nothing he liked better than a good fish dinner. This would have been rather conceited of Charlie had he known at the time he himself was destined to be one.

In a Ritiable Plight.

"No," said the beautiful widow, "I couldn't sleep for weeks after my husband died."

"How pitiful," put in her sympathetic friend.

"You see, I had mislaid his insurance policy, and for a while I was really afraid I'd never be able to find it."

A CONVICT IN PRISON.

Daily Routine of Life in a Dungeon Cell Described by One Who Knows.

If I had little work to do in prison, how did I spend the time? At Auburn, where I lived the greater part of my first term, says the Autobiography of a Thief, in Leslie's Monthly, the routine of my life was as follows: After rising in the morning I would sweep out my cell, turn up my bed and blankets and clean up. Then to breakfast; then, if there was no work to do, I would go back to my cell and eat a small portion of opium. Then I would exercise with dumbbells and take a sponge bath with cold water. Next would come a nap till dinner time. After dinner I would read and think in my cell until three o'clock, when I would go to the bucket ground or exercise in the yard, in the lock-step with the others, for half an hour. Then back to the cell, taking with me bread and a cup of coffee made out of burnt bread-crust for my supper. The count was made at six o'clock to see that all was right for the night. After that I read in my cell as long as the oil lasted.

Clubs, Cabs and Gout.

A physician, talking to a reporter of a New York paper, asserted recently that gout is rapidly increasing in that city, as a disease prevalent among the wealthy classes, the increase being altogether out of proportion to the growth of population. He claims that this is largely attributable to the increase in clubs, fashionable restaurants, and cafes, and also to the general use of cabs, even when the distance from the club to the home is only a few blocks. If people would take more active exercise in the open air, they would run less risk from heavy meals. He says that rich foods are more responsible for gout than wine, although practically the two usually go together.

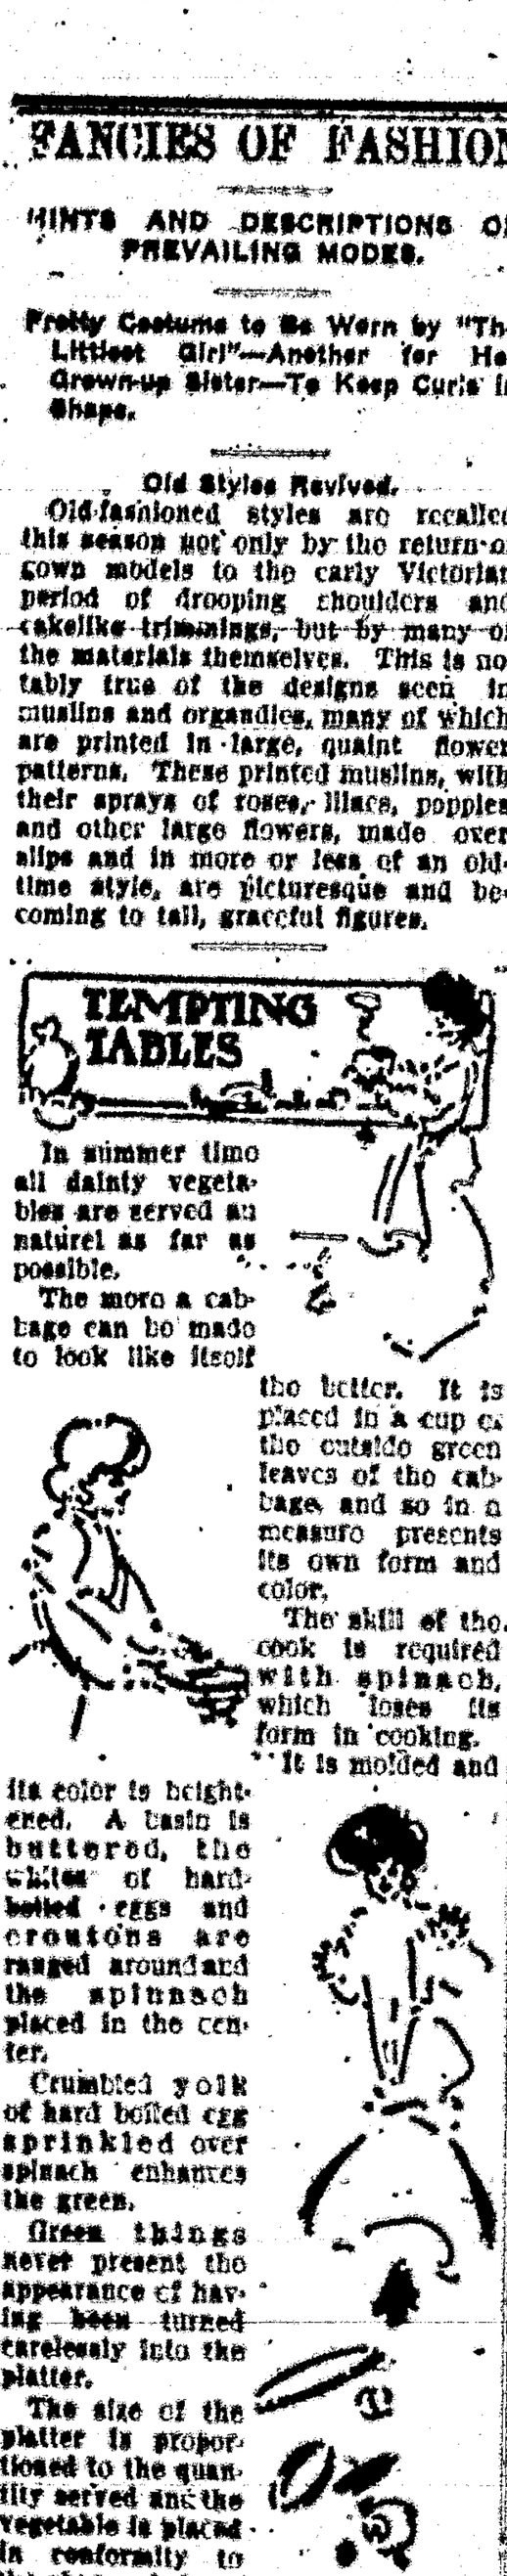
FANCIES OF FASHION

HINTS AND DESCRIPTIONS OF PREVAILING MODES.

Pretty Costume to Be Worn by "The Littlest Girl"—Another for Her Grown-up Sister—To Keep Curls in Shape.

Old Styles Revived.

Old-fashioned styles are recalled this season not only by the return of gown models to the early Victorian period of drooping shoulders and cakelike trimmings, but by many of the materials themselves. This is notably true of the designs seen in muslins and organdies, many of which are printed in large, quaint flower patterns. These printed muslins, with their sprays of roses, lilacs, poppies and other large flowers, made over slips and in more or less of an old-time style, are picturesque and becoming to tall, graceful figures.



In summer time all dainty vegetables are served au naturel as far as possible.

The more a cabbage can be made to look like itself the better. It is placed in a cup of the outside green leaves of the cabbage and so in a measure presents its own form and color.

The skill of the cook is required with spinach, which loses its form in cooking. It is molded and its color is heightened. A basin is buttered, the whites of hard-boiled eggs and croutons are ranged around and the spinach placed in the center.

Crumbled yolk of hard boiled egg sprinkled over spinach enhances the green.

Green things never present the appearance of having been turned carelessly into the platter.

The size of the platter is proportioned to the quantity served and the vegetable is placed in conformity to the shape of the platter.

A neatly folded napkin is used under dry, unseasoned vegetables, like asparagus, artichokes, or corn.

If cold dishes are served in shapely pieces they are simply sprinkled with chopped parsley, chopper white of egg or crumbled yolks, and dressed with any of the greens used in salads.

Flowers sometimes aid in the adornment.

Keeping Curls in Shape.

Damp weather is ruinous to curls that are not natural curls, and there is little that a girl dreads so much as having her nice waves gradually coalesce in the misty lukewarm and unpalatable.

Here is a hint which, we ask, will work wonders keeping the locks crisp. Dissolve camphor gum in alcohol and then in water, and when cool add the camphor. Dampen the hair with the liquid and roll on kids until it is dry.—Exchange.

For Dinner Table.

A pretty floral arrangement for the table of the country home is to take small baskets, painted green, and place in each one a four-inch pot of maidenhair or some of the pretty varieties of fern and vines that can be grouped together in the center of the gathered in the woods. They can be table or placed here and there to accent some decorative scheme. Strawberry and raspberry baskets could be utilized in this way, if one had no other more decorative.

Girl's Frock.

One of the most popular styles of the season is the little French blouse dress. It is a style that is easily made and is more desirable for thin materials, and these warm days we are not thinking of much else. In this pretty little frock a white vest front and a big collar edged with white ruffles enter into the ornamentation. The full blouse and square neck are decidedly pretty and childish looking. The skirt is the full gathered one. The waist line is decorated by a sash with large bow in the back. The material may be white or colored. A very pretty combination would be of tiny pindot lawn in one's favorite color, using white for vest and embroidery ruffles and insertion.

Ladies' Suit for Outing Wear.

With the advent of summer the demand for frocks suitable for a day's outing or traveling becomes an all-important subject. For the one who is planning a suit that will be suitable on a variety of occasions and will stay in style for more than one season, this jaunty mode will be a wise model to select. The blouse is something new in the sailor style, having a fanciful yoke shaping, a new-style sleeve, and a very smart collar, which may have either square or round shaping.

The skirt is the popular tucked design and may be made in any length golf, short or walking. It is cut in five gores and may be made with a yoke if desired.

The combination of this blouse and tucked skirt makes it a most chic and becoming design—an ideal suit for travel; country or seashore. The material may be of linen, pique, crash, mohair, serge, ponnee or any of the popular suitings. A very smart costume could be made of white serge or white mohair, embroidering the emblems on shield and sleeve and wearing a bright colored tie of one's favorite color jauntily knotted in the front. A colored or white belt would complete a stylish costume.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR

A FEW MERRY MOMENTS WITH THE JESTERS.

Why Algy Thought Miss Gayleigh So Strange—Gritty George Emulates the Great Opera Singer—Supreme Happiness.

Sallie and Willie.

"Strange about giddy young girls, isn't it, Sallie?"

"How so, Willie?"

"Why, there's a girl in town who used to boast that she was kissed by President Grant when she was a baby, but she now declares it was President Hayes who kissed her. In a few years she will be claiming that President Roosevelt kissed her when she was a mere child."—Roller Monthly.

Fortunate Reminder.

"Noah," exclaimed the grand old sailor's wife, "what are you slapping at?"

"Confound that mosquito," he answered. "I'll smash it yet, see if I don't."

"Henry W. Noah, what do you mean? Have you forgotten that we have only two mosquitoes in the ark?"—New York Herald.

Another Prediction.

"Yes," sighed the youth in purple suspenders, "the old gentleman caught me hugging his daughter and then there was a storm."

"You should have sent a report to the weather department," chuckled his friend in duck trousers.

"What should I have sent?"

"The storm was caused by heavy local pressure."

Not That Kind of a Stove.

Housekeeper—I'll give you a good meal if you'll light the fire in the stove for me.

Weary Willie—All right, lady.

Housekeeper—Very well. Here's a hatchet. Just chop some of that wood out there——

Weary Willie—Oh, see here, lady, I thought it was a gas stove you had! Good-day!

Unappreciated.

"Do you believe," said the lady with the sere and yellow, "that the good die young?"

"How could I?" exclaimed the flatterer, "how could I and you so good—er—that is——"

"Sir!"—Baltimore News.

An Appropriate Pen Name.

Author Algy—What an absurd creature that Gayleigh girl is. When I told her I was down here reading 'round for material and local color she asked me if by any chance my pen name was Place.

Supreme Happiness.

"If you could choose which would you rather be, Jackobbin, J. Pierpont Morgan or John W. Gates?"

"Oh, dear, both, please. I rather think the latter would be my choice, but I'm not particular. Any one of them would County Exhibits at State Fair.

It is very important that this county be represented at the State Fair to be held at Pueblo, September 11th to 13th. The county commissioners are empowered by law to appropriate the sum of $500 for the purpose of making a creditable exhibit at the State Fair and power is also granted to appoint a proper person to take charge of such exhibit and see that same is properly displayed at the fair.

Every one is urged to prepare their exhibits at once as it is only a short time till the big fair opens.

A back country paper says: "A mad dog bit Major Konk on the left leg recently. It was a sad happening, but the dog is slowly recovering."

Those Who Have Tried It will use no other. Defiance Cold Water Starch has no equal in Quantity or Quality—16 oz. for 10 cents. Other brands contain only 12 oz.

Little Hiram—Grandpa, did you see the two-tailed comet? Farmer Bumpercrop—No; b'jings! I been so busy harvestin' I didn't even git ter see the circus, let alone the side shows.

Mixem—I say, Swiggs, won't you join us on a fishing trip next week? Swiggs—Sorry, old man, but you'll have to count me out. I've quit drinking.

Some grocers say they don't keep Defiance Starch because they have a stock in hand of 12 oz. brands, which they know cannot be sold to a customer who has once used the 16 oz. pkg. Defiance Starch for same money.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Why It Is the Best

Is because made by an entirely different process. Defiance Starch is fully one ounce, both weight and measure more for 10 cents.

Gas Burner and Self Igniter One of the Latest Triumphs of the Man Who Thinks—The Vest Pocket Punching Bag.

Gas Burner and Self Igniter.

If a citizen of ancient Rome could have the opportunity to light the gas with one of those convenient little electric igniters, without having any knowledge of the origin and action of the gas itself or of the electricity, it is safe to say he would be more surprised than at some of the so called miracles which the alchemist and charlatan of his day produced. The gas burner and self igniting device which we show in the picture have been designed for use where the light can not be placed within easy reach of the hand to operate the sparking wires which light the gas. With this appartus it is only necessary to open the valve in the pipe, permitting the gas to flow into the burner. The latter comprises a seal chamber and a diaphragm, together with an electric igniter of the ordinary pattern. A little study of the drawing will show that when the gas pressure is turned on the diaphragm must expand in the seal chamber, and this expansion is utilized to manipulate the igniter, by conecting the diaphragm to the pivoted arm which carries the sparking wire. Upon closing the valve the diaphragm falls of its own weight and the igniter once more adjusts itself ready to produce the spark when the pressure is applied again. The inventor is Charles T. Willson of Amenia, N. Y.

Milliner's Hat Holder.

Men have for some years past had the temerity to hang out their signs as makers of ladies' suits and costumes, but the man milliner is as yet a scarce article, and liable to be so for some time to come. Possibly the invention we show here might have been designed by a man milliner, if there had been more of them in the business, but as it is, the idea originated with a woman, and is likely to be used almost exclusively by women. The invention comprises a number of clamps and a pair of telescoping rods, with a triangular support for the hat at one end and a screw clamp at the opposite end, which can be attached to a table, shelf or chair. The hat support consists of three projecting wires, and by sliding the tube to which they are attached up and down on its central rod the ends of the wires are expanded and contracted so as to make the clamp of the hat [illegible] and in any convenient position, while the base which carries the triangular holder is mounted on a spindle to rotate freely and present any side of the hat that the milliner desires to work on. Sarah S. Torrence of Chicago is the inventor.

Producing Arsenic by the Ton.

When the statement is made that during last year Canada produced 725 tons of arsenic one is apt to wonder where it all comes from. A mining journal is authority for the statement that it was all extracted from gold ores with the bromocyanogen process. After the contentrates have been freed of their gold contents, the remaining matter is passed through a cylindrical washer, and the arsenical fumes are condensed in suitable chambers. After passing through a refining process and being again condensed and collected in a second set of chambers, the resulting product is stated to be over 99 per cent of arsenic of a pure white color.

Vest Pocket Punching Bag.

If everybody would use faithfully the exercising apparatus which the inventors have produced, what a race of athletes we should all become in a few years! But some have one excuse and some another, and some make no excuse at all, for neglecting to train their muscles and develop their bodies to that state of perfection which we often dream of but seldom attain. Perhaps the most plausible excuse for this neglect of physical training is the lack of time to go where the apparatus for the work may be found, but this excuse can not avail to justify entire omission of exercise in the future, for an apparatus has been invented which can be folded up and carried in the vest pocket. It consists of a thin rubber bag, with an elastic cord connecting it with a band passing around the fingers, and is used practically the same as the punching bag, the alertness and swiftness of movement required to strike the bag making up for the lack of actual muscular exertion. While the bag is small enough when deflated to be stored in the vest pocket it is fully eight inches in diameter when filled with air, while its lightness necessitates the employment of no inconsiderable amount of skill and accuracy to drive it from the hand even a few times without missing a blow. Either one or both hands may be used in the exercise, and to vary the speed of the return it is only necessary to change the length of the elastic cord which connects it with the finger loops. David J. Wilson of Washington, D. C., is the inventor.

Inflated Ball and Elastic Cord.

Utilizing Waste Glass Sand.

The problem of how best to dispose of the enormous accumulation of waste sand at glass works is about to be solved by a large concern in Indiana. A plant is now being erected in Kokomo for manufacturing about 50,000 plain and pressed bricks daily from this waste, thus turning another supposedly useless element to a source of profit, instead of permitting it to accumulate on ground which might be utilized for some other purpose.

THE SALESWOMAN

Compelled to Be on Her Feet the Larger Part of the Day Finds a Tonic In Pe-ru-na.

Miss Curtain, of St. Paul, Gives Her Experience.

MISS NELLIE CURTAIN, 646 Pearl street, St. Paul, Minn., head saleswoman in a department store writes:

"I have charge of a department in a dry goods store, and after standing the larger part of the day, I would go home with a dull ache, generally through my entire body. I used Peruna and feel so much better that I walk to and from the store now. I know Peruna to be the best medicine on the market for the diseases peculiar to women."—Miss Nellie Curtain.

Nothing is so weakening to the human system as the constant loss of mucus. Catarrhal inflammation of the mucus membrane produces an excessive formation of mucus. Whether the mucus membrane be located in the head or pelvis organs, the discharge of mucus is sure to occur.

This discharge of mucus constitutes a weakening drain; the system cannot long withstand the loss of mucus, hence it is that women afflicted with catarrhal affections of the pelvic organs feel tired and languid, with weak back and throbbing brain. A course of Peruna is sure to restore health by cutting off the weakening drain of the daily loss of mucus.

An Admirable Tonic.

Congressman Mark H. Dunnell, National Hotel, Washington, D. C., writes:

"Your Peruna being used by myself and many of my friends and acquaintances not only as a cure for catarrh but also as an admirable tonic for physical recuperation, I gladly recommend it to all persons requiring such remedies."—Mark H. Dunnell.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.
